MERLIN'S MIXTURE

"Twas the night before Christmas," and I was thinking of the old angel-song of peace and good will. Naturally I fell to wondering about the fulfillment of the ancient prophecy in our modern life. As I thought, my eye was caught by the headlines of a Boston Globe, lying on my table. Picking it up I made a catalogue of its contents. Among the things recorded on the eve of Christmas were the following: Six assaults, seven murders, one bank failure, seven robberies, four accidents, four suicides, ten business failures, two strikes, one kidnapping and two wars! Then, somehow, the words of the old anthem seemed to die away in the distance, and amid the sweet music of the Christmas memories there swelled a discordant note that drowned and destroyed the melody. And then I knew that Christmas and capitalism were incompatible. So long as one is a reality the other must be only a dream.

American soldiers in the Philippines are all wearing what they call "dog checks." These are lead medals that are worn, to assist in identifying the dead and severely wounded. These medals are singularly well named, if only by a coincidence. The names of the checks are remarkably appropriate to the occupation of the wearers. The soldiers who are out in the East are simply "dogs of war," held in leash by the hand of capitalistic commercialism, and used to hunt down the Filipino patriot who seeks to evade the gentle grasp of American exploitation. It is a war of principle, not principle, and the rich take interest in it in order that they may take interest out of it by and by. And so these war-dogs, with their dog-checks, are used to round up the unwilling recipients of American prosperity, and to make an impression with their lead teeth on those benighted heathen who refuse to be otherwise impressed by the glories of our Crokerian civilization. They are part and parcel of the process of benevolent assimilation, whose triple factors are bullets, bibles and beer.

Laroy E. Nichols, a jeweler of Chelsea, Mass., has just filed a bankruptcy petition, with liabilities of $3,147, and assets of $75. In the same list of recorded failures were many others whose assets bore the same relation to their liabilities. A glorious system! The laws of present business are such as to place a premium on roguery and rascality. As I once heard Margaret Haile say in an address in Lynn, it permits business men to "fail successfully." I once knew a man in Canada who failed three times in business, and then retired, a "self-made man!" And now, by a strange fitness of name this man of Chelsea is allowed to pay nickels on the dollar, and to pay Nichols most of them. If Socialism is wild and visionary it could not be worse than the planless and crime-fostering system we now have. Every settlement of cents on the dollars is a proof positive that business, as it now is carried on, is but the cloak of commercial thieves.

The January disbursements of interest and dividends in New York will foot up to the tidy sum of $150,000,000. This is the largest amount, thus paid, in the history of trade in this country. Those who catch this golden stream in their stock buckets will doubtless be optimistic American patriots. They will be firm believers in prosperity. They will doubtless reckon the amount they receive as "earnings." But is it? Whence comes this torrent of wealth that flows into the sea of finance in Wall street? The stream of wealth is like any other stream. A river is simply the accumulation of the drainings of the land through which it flows. And this golden stream is but the drainings of the industrial fields. It is composed of the filchings from the laboring class. Many a poor man's purse has been drained, and his fountain of happiness drawn dry in order to swell the volume of this river of interest and dividend. Through every village of our land flows a stream of tribute to this mighty torrent. Earnings, indeed!

Some strange Christmas echoes come to my ear, showing the incongruities of life under our present system of business. A certain Wilmington school teacher was arrested on the charge of shoplifting. Before the judge she made the pathetic statement that her fellow-teachers were giving presents to their scholars, and as she had no money to do so herself, she resorted to theft. A pitifully poor excuse, you say. Granted; but what possible excuse can there be for a system that makes resort to such means necessary? I know of a man, a commercial traveler, whose purse had been emptied into the stream of wealth of which we spoke. His wife wrote to him, asking for a little money for Christmas needs. He couldn't give it, and not caring to face her without the means of making Christmas happy, as of old, he committed suicide. Foolish? Wrong? To be sure, but that doesn't mitigate the criminality of those who perpetuate the social environment that causes such acts.

Here is a contrast to the above. On the Saturday afternoon preceding Christmas the clerks and employees of the Central Trust Company of New York were given a present amounting to 40 per cent of their salaries. One of the officers of the company, whose salary was $5,000, received $2,000 as a Christmas box, and all the rest in like proportion. The report says their pockets bulged out with their wads. This liberality was not the result of Christian love. That latter commodity does not figure among the forces of Wall street. It was simply because the "pickings" had been good. It was the story of which the commercial traveler's suicide was the sad sequel. It was the division of the property of the labor—Christ, crucified upon the cross of commercial greed by capitalism, whose henchmen thus divided the spoils. O for the risen labor-Christ of Socialism, at whose appearance these minions of capital will fly and fall in dire confusion!

One more echo of the Christmas time. At the reformatory prison in South Framingham the criminals confined therein were given a Christmas dinner, a Christmas concert and a Christmas tree. Everything was done for their comfort and pleasure, and an enjoyable day was spent. No one will doubt the rightness of the matter, or deny that it was a commendable act. But there were thousands upon thousands of people outside jail walls who had no Christmas dinner, or concert, or tree. They spent the day as they had spent the miserable day before, and would spend the miserable day after. They were hard-working, honest, well-meaning people, but yet the felons inside prison walls fared better. Had they been less honest, less industrious and less worthy, the nation would have given them a Christmas dinner free. My friends, let us stop all our absurd talk about civilization and Christianity, until we have raised labor to at least the level of crime. Let us work for the social system that shall make productive labor the criterion of merit and the measure of reward. And that system is Socialism.

JEFF AND HAM...

A JUVENILE WAR ON THE EXPANSION QUESTION

I've got two boys, and I tell you they're just dandies. Their first names are Jefferson and Hamilton, but I call them Jeff and Ham for short. Jeff, he's the smartest lad you ever see. Why, he knows more than his dad ever will know, and as for his schoolteacher, why, he can't touch any part of Jeff. Ham, he is a proud little cus and inclined to be a little dudish. He won't play with the poor boys at all, and says when he gets big he's going to be a banker. Jeff, he is different. He likes the poor boys and is always trying to do something or other to help them. I heard these little chaps quarreling the other day over this expansion question and you ought to have heard them. Let me see if I can remember it. It went something like this:

Ham—Say, Jeff, what do you think of this war in the Philippines?

Jeff—It is all wrong—outrageous.

H.—Nonsense; wars are necessary.

J.—No, they're not, when people are civilized.

H.—But wars do the civilizing.

J.—Yes, but there is a better way to civilize people than by killing them.

H.—Haven't enlightenment and civilization always followed wars?

J.—Perhaps, but do you think it required gunpowder to do it? If we encourage boxing nations up by tariffs, and otherwise preventing free and friendly intercourse between them, we may have to resort to some radical measures to carry civilization to them.

H.—But nations get dyspeptic and narrow, and selfish without a war once in a while to take their minds off of domestic cares.

J.—Perhaps, but isn't war a rather expensive way of curing dyspepsia and isn't there some better way?

H.—Well, there are too many people—the cities are terribly congested.

J.—And would you, therefore, kill some of the people to get them out of the way?

H.—It does seem rather rough, but what would you do with them?

J.—Put them to work. Change things so that everybody will have an opportunity to earn a living.

H.—But war gives lots of people employment.

J.—Yes, and takes just so many people away from useful occupations, and to that extent decreases the world's productive power.

H.—But if you stop wars you will practically put an end to love of the flag and love of country and to patriotism.

J.—So much the better; patriotism is a cover under which all rascals hide. I wish there was less love of flags and more love of humanity.

H.—But look at the good wars have done.

J.—But weren't there cheaper ways of doing it? Think of the billions of dollars wasted on gunpowder, arms and battleships, the billions of dollars in destroyed property, to say nothing of the billions of human souls sent to perdition. The good things from wars have come high.

H.—Without wars we would have no Deweys, and Schleys, and Wheelers.

J.—I wish we had none. The people are mad over military heroes, just as they are mad over Fitzsimmons and Jeffreys and Sharkeys. They all fight for applause or for money or because it is their business, and they work up a sentiment of patriotism over it and think they have saved the nation's honor.

H.—Why, I am ashamed of you, Jeff. I don't care for prize fighters, but I do love war fighters when fighting for a principle.

J.—Nonsense. How many wars are fought for principle? The British are fighting for principle now, but it is spelled with a "pal." Sometimes there is real principle, but generally, now-a-days, wars are declared for bankers when they want more bonds.

H.—But how about the Boers?

J.—Ah! there is not only principle, but they have been from the first on the defensive. So were we in 1776. So are the Filipinos. I think we are justified in defending by force and violence if necessary.

H.—You are opposed to violence then?

J.—Yes, to all kinds of violence—even to capital punishment, whipping of children and any kind of homicide.

H.—You admit, though, that violence is natural.

J.—No, I don't. Unequal conditions make all this unnatural excitement. It also makes all this petty meanness, dishonesty and hypocrisy. War is the natural result of our brutal social order.

H.—Do you attempt to defend the position taken by the Filipinos in rebelling against our flag?

J.—Yes, I app and them. They are in the same position as we were in 1776. They are not the aggressors. They are fighting for liberty just as we were.

H.—But do you want us to give up those islands for other nations to prey upon?

J.—That is a Wall street argument. In the first place, they are capable of taking care of themselves, but if they were not, what's to prevent our protecting them just as we have protected South America?

H.—But don't we need these islands? Aren't they the key to all the wealth of the Orient?

J.—On that basis we need the whole Orient. Why not take China and Japan, on the ground that they are not able to govern themselves properly? Do you approve of greed and grab?

H.—No, but our commercial interests demand them.

J.—Whose commercial interests?

H.—Why, our big shippers, etc. They need markets.

J.—Well, why not give them markets by removing tariffs and having free and Christian intercourse?

H.—They won't do it. They are a lot of barbarians and they won't trust us.

J.—Can you blame them? We can't cure them of barbarism by shooting them, and as for trusting us, who can blame them for not trusting us.

H.—Why, Jeff, we are a mighty, Christian nation.

J.—Mighty, but not Christian. Aguinaldo helped Dewey defeat the Spanish at Manila. He had long been fighting for independence, and he had every reason to believe that we would help his people to get it; but we betrayed them.

H.—No; they betrayed us and fired upon us.

J.—Not till our emperor had shouted: "Who will dare haul down the flag?" and "Where it has once floated there it shall always float." This put them on the defensive and made them justly suspicious.

H.—Well, you know they are incapable of self-government.

J.—No, I don't. Any people are capable. Dewey himself officially notified our government that they were more capable of self-government than the Cubans were. We might have made a fine nation of them had we carried to them love and education, rather than bullets.

H.—Why, your namesake was an expansionist.

J.—Not the kind that you are. He might have favored expanding our border line, but he never could have written the Declaration of Independence if he favored expansion by the sword.

H.—But he did, didn't he, several times?

J.—No. But if he did he was wrong. I don't rest my case on Jefferson or on any other man. The present expansion is for the benefit of the franchise grabbers. McKinley seeks to be a king.

H.—But in the competition of nations we must keep pace.

J.—Don't you see anything but money, profit, gain? Is there no moral side to this question?

H.—Oh, you are too sentimental—talking about government by consent and all men being born equal. Be practical.

J.—Yes, and make a new golden rule—Do others or they will do you!

H.—No, but look at it from a business standpoint.

J.—Business? O Business, what crimes are committed in thy name! Did you ever think who was paying for all this Business?

H.—I suppose you think the poor are.

J.—Yes, the toiler. He foots the bills. He creates everything and gets only a bare existence. He makes the guns and battleships and goes to war to be shot down by them while the capitalists clip coupons.

H.—I suppose you want us to retire from the Philippines and stand before the world disgraced.

J.—Disgraced? We could not have more disgrace. To declare that the Filipinos were to have independence under our protection would not be dishonor, and it would immediately end the war provided congress or some other responsible body or person, other than William I, was behind the promise.

H.—And would you then haul down the flag?

J.—Yes, just as we have in Cuba.

H.—And bring Dewey's great feat to naught?

J.—Yes, just as we have Schley's.

H.—How about the $20,000,000?

J.—Charge it to profit and loss. Or, better, take it out of the king's salary. It was his fault; not that of congress. Congress had to sign the treaty.

H.—But the war is all over now, and why not keep still about it till everything is quiet.

J.—The war isn't over and it never will be over. Every week the censored news said it was over; the back-bone of the rebellion broken; Aguinaldo captured; army dispersed, even to 'way-back last winter, but somehow somebody is getting killed all the time. Brave Lawton was the last.

H.—But it will soon be over now.

J.—So the British said after the first year of the Revolution.

H.—Why, Aguinaldo has no following to speak of—most of the inhabitants want to lay down their arms and join us.

J.—Who told you so? It is false. Believe half you read and divide it by two, and you will have about half the truth.

H.—But hasn't McKinley done the best he could under such embarrassing circumstances?

J.—No. He has been a tool in the hands of the powers that elected him. He has changed our whole national character as the one great example of a free republic. He has destroyed the spirit of '76. He has made us a nation of conquest. He has made it impossible for us to now mediate between the Britons and Boers.

H.—Why, you are a regular traitor, Jeff.

J.—Aaron Burr, in the beginning of this century, became a traitor through his insane desire to found an empire at New Orleans; he to be the great emperor, finally, over all America. McKinley is the Burr of the end of the century!

H.—You are worse than your namesake, Jeff.

J.—You are just exactly like yours, Ham.

Here the conversation ended, and I was glad of it, because if the dinner bell didn't ring just then, I bet those two little cusses would have come to blows. I tell you that lad Jeff is a James Dandy! Uncle Bill.

BOOK NOTICE

"To What Are Trusts Leading?" is the title of a sixty-four page pamphlet written by James B. Smiley. The title does not entirely indicate the breadth of the subject treated. The author reviews shortly the past economic status of the laboring class and their exploiters and shows the present inequality and the causes thereof in a clear, simple and forcible style. The pamphlet is most excellently adapted for Socialist propaganda among the educated and uneducated. It is rare that we meet with a pamphlet so interesting in the general treatment of the subject of Socialism and particularly the phase applicable to trusts. Price, 15 cents. S. Stedman.

We will send free by mail the "Pocket Library of Socialism" to anyone sending us five yearly subscribers to The Herald at 50 cents each. The "Pocket Library" consists of ten books on Socialism, for which we should charge you 5 cents each, or 50 cents (complete) if you ordered them from us. By helping The Herald circulation, as suggested, you get them free.

A GOOD JOKE ON THE CARPENTER

Walking along the busy streets of Chicago, I noticed several shoe stores, two or three in each block. Of course, I supposed that there were too many shoes and not enough people to wear them; and I thought the shoemakers had made a mistake in making so many thousands of shoes more than the people needed.

That night I took a train—or the train took me—to a distant city, and on the way out the railway tracks led us through many crowded streets lined with factories and tenement houses. By the dim gaslights I could see many children, and men, and women walking in the snow with worn-out shoes, parts of shoes, and no shoes at all; and then I knew there were plenty of people to wear all those fine shoes in the stores.

What would those merchants think if I sent them each a postal card telling them I saw three hundred people on one street who needed some of their shoes?

I make horseshoes—hundreds of them every week. Of course, I don't need them myself, because I can't afford to keep even one horse. They are no good to me for food and overcoats, unless I sell them or trade them off. So that's just what I do. Some people prefer hand-made horseshoes, so I sell them at a good price and make $15 a week. I haven't time to look up customers, so I sell to a general store. They get $25 for the shoes I make.

Last week at the lodge we had a good joke on one of the carpenters, because he doesn't own a house. Only our joke didn't last very long.

"Now, let's see," he said. "Here's thirty of us, and we work in nearly every kind of trade. Joe raises onions, radishes and turnips. He takes them to the store and sells them for $2. We buy them for $3.50. Your horseshoes bring $25, but you only get $15. Well, that's enough. Thirty of us sell what we make, or help to make, in factories, for $210 a week, and we thus average $7 a week wages. But what we make sells for $600. Now, as we only have $210 between us, we can only buy back of each others' products a little more than a third of the things we made."

"Let's sell to each other," said Will, the painter.

"I don't want your paint," said half the men in the room.

"Nor my horseshoes," said I.

"And what good will two hundred thousand nails do us, or the part of them John makes, if I can't get lumber from Michigan?" said the carpenter. "Also, how can I live without my coffee, tobacco, rice, grapes, cotton, my Friday fish and Sunday orange? None of these things grow around here."

"Go without," said I.

"And be a wild man?" asked the carpenter. "Give up all the benefits of what civilization we have evolved to," said the doctor, "and begin over?"

"What I want to know," called out the painter, "is more than I've found out so far. What becomes of the other $400 worth of things we couldn't buy back?"

"Foreign markets." "Gone to Cuba." "Ask the Filipinos," were the various answers he got.

The reply of the carpenter set us all to thinking. He said: "As only one-third of the people do useful labor, and the other two-thirds must live off the one-third, we, the workers, get only one-third of what we produce. The other two-thirds go to the middlemen, clerks, lawyers, soldiers, insurance agents, speculators, stockholders, and to those who do the useless labor of building warships, making guns and supplies for the army."

"So I make a hat for a lawyer, a hat for a soldier, and the third hat is mine," said a worker in a hat factory.

"Yes," I replied, "only you just stand by a machine while it makes the hat. You only know how part of the hat is made."

"Well, you see now why I don't own a house," said the carpenter. "I build three houses, or, rather, a thousand of us build three thousand houses, so that the third house belongs to me; but I had to trade off my house for clothes, food, etc., just as you traded off your horseshoes and paint."

"The joke's on us, too, ain't it?" said Joe, the gardener. "I couldn't eat all my cabbage heads; I'm enough of a cabbage head already."

"I don't want my paint," said Will. "I want a living—a whole living. One-third ain't enough."

"Yes," said the carpenter. "You want all your paint, and I want all my houses. We all want all we make, so that we can have a whole living instead of one-third."

That closed the meeting. Our lodge is in a fair way to become a local branch of the Social Democratic party.

Horseshoe Joe.

WAGES AND PRICES

In common with editors of his stripe, Henri Watterson of the Louisville Courier-Journal takes great pains to tell us that the harvest time of labor is here, and "no one need be idle," he says, in spite of the fact that every day brings with it overwhelming proof that men are hungry because they are the victims of enforced idleness. Mr. Watterson lingers with great unctious over the statement that wages have risen and work is plentiful, but never a word has he about the rise in prices, the increased profit going to capital. True, there has been an advance in wages over the scale prevailing one or three years ago—an advance ranging from 5 to 10 per cent. But why does Mr. Watterson not tell his readers, the wage slaves, of the 25 per cent raise on fresh meat? Does he not think the slaves would be interested in knowing something about the 35 per cent raise on brooms or the 30 per cent raise on coal oil? Does he not know that the slaves would rejoice to learn that the capitalist class starts the new year with a raise on everything the poor devils have to buy running from 25 to 200 per cent? What interest has "Henri" in keeping this comforting information from the slave class, except that he is a supercilious journalistic retainer to the slave-owning class?

A CASE OF DIVISION

The assignee in the case of Erastus Wiman, a promoter of large commercial enterprises, has announced that he has just $6,658 to divide among sixty-three creditors whose claims amount to $913,000. That sort of division is common enough, but if Socialism proposed anything so wild how the jaspers would howl! Do you see what chumps the great middle class is composed of? They prefer a division that allows them $105.50 each instead of $14.492 which was due them, to the system of Socialism that would give them all they earned. Looking at the matter from the middle-class point of view, their stupidity surpasses that of the working class; the latter do all the useful work and complacently submit to a system of division in the proportion of one portion of the product to a workman to five for a capitalist. That one portion enables the working class to barely exist; on the other hand, it is evident that when the middle class has to submit to a division of one to one hundred and thirty-seven, that class has no chance whatever in the "struggle for existence." And while the services of this latter class in the evolution to better social conditions have been important, there is no cause for regret over its passing. The division is all right; it inevitably means addition to the ranks of the Socialists.

SOCIALIST POSITION CONFIRMED

The Standard Oil company gave another confirmation the other day of the Socialist contention that the economic system controls the educational, religious, judicial and political institutions of society. Attorney General Monett of Ohio was announced to lecture on "Trusts" before the People's Institute of New York. Some time ago, through Abram S. Hewitt, the Standard company gave $300,000 to the institute and promised to add a subscription of $200,000. When it became known that Mr. Monett, who has been fighting the Standard, had been secured to speak, an order went forth that his name must be withdrawn or the money subscribed to the institute would be forfeited. And, of course, the command of the capitalist magnates was obeyed with alacrity. The audience had assembled to hear the lecture, but the officers announced that Mr. Monett would not appear, and the people were dismissed.

While the capitalist class thus suppresses free speech, controls the churches, universities and the people's institutes, the people are babbling about freedom and the flag. They tell the Socialist they want their individual freedom; but under capitalism they are not free to say their prayers or praise their Gods in a church where commercialism instead of Christ does not rule; they are not free to attend a university where the curriculum is not commercialized and the limit-line to research is fixed in the interest of gluttonous capitalism; they are not free to hear free speech in alleged popular institutions; they are not free even to live except through the condescension and charity of their economic masters.

The people! The people are slaves! The masses are the creatures of a class!

UNDER THE CAPITALIST SYSTEM

There is a class of producers and a class of parasites.

There is a class which produces wealth and a class which appropriates wealth.

There is a possessionless working class and a class in possession of the luxuries of civilization.

There is a class haunted by the fear of Want and a class lashed by the passion of Accumulation.

There is a class sweltering in the factory and the mine and a class satiated with the pleasures of the club and the parlor.

There is a class whose lack of comfort and pleasure is due to an overabundance enjoyed by another class.

There is a class which, separated from land and capital, is dependent for existence upon a class which controls both.

There is a class which, supporting by its labor the institutions of government, must submit to laws made in behalf of another class which controls government.

These social classes are necessarily in conflict—conscious or unconscious. The class which is in possession of the means of production is interested in retaining the present system of capitalist industry, the other is becoming more and more conscious of the necessity for elimination of the personal factor in the ownership of the means of life and the substitution of social ownership.

DUES AND REPRESENTATION

We feel called upon to give notice betimes that only branches in good standing will be entitled to representation at the approaching national convention, and that only members in good standing will be entitled to sign the credentials of delegates.

The convention meets at Indianapolis, Ind., on Tuesday, March 6, 1900, and to be entitled to representation the dues of a branch must be paid in full to and including the quarter ending March 31; and the same is true of individual members. No member is qualified to sign the credentials of a delegate unless his dues are paid during the same period. This is the rule agreed to by the party, and in the examination of credentials it will be the duty of the committee to see that it is enforced and that the credential of any branch not in good standing be rejected and the name of any member not in good standing be stricken from the credential.

It has also been provided that no branch or member shall be entitled to representation unless admitted at least thirty days prior to the opening of the convention. The opening day being March 6, the last day of grace is the 4th day of February. Branches instituted and members admitted after this date will not be entitled to representation. This should be clearly understood that there may be no unnecessary expense incurred in sending delegates not entitled to seats.

A large number of points declare that they are "about ready to organize," and a great number of persons say they are about ready to join. If they would be represented in the most historic convention ever held in the United States they should bear the 4th day of February in mind and come in before that date.

A PITIFUL SPECTACLE

It is a pitiful spectacle to see how the brethren who want "reform in the name of Jesus" fail to agree as to methods. There were Christians in the Social Reform union who, with strong assurances of faith in men, wanted no party because they had no faith in men who want the things they profess to want; and the Willard Hall Christians not only wanted a party, but have actually organized one on the basis of a union of Christians only, and on that basis claim to be working "in his name"! They all predict the direst calamities for society in the near future; many of them claim to be Socialists, and pray for the cooperative commonwealth, and yet they want that conditionally, and the conditions keep humanity divided. Men's religious idols stand in the way of kinship and progress.

The social problem is fundamentally an economic one, a material question. It is not to be solved except through the organization of the exploited and dispossessed masses; it is not to be solved by organizing Christians as such; no organization whatsoever, short of one that recognizes the iniquity of class ownership of nature's resources and social capital, can solve it. Such an organization is the Social Democratic party, and this party embraces in its membership Jew and Gentile, theist and atheist, Christian and non-Christian, the elemental factors of human society.

Socialism lays its emphasis upon the rights and interests of all the people, and points out at the same time that these interests and rights are jeopardized by class ownership of the means of life. Christians may organize a party, or, refusing to do that, present their ideals and preach altruism in sentences of surpassing beauty, but Christians cannot solve this world-wide problem. Atheists may organize a party, too, and proclaim anew the gospel of materialism, but atheists cannot solve this problem. Neither a dissertation on the golden rule and the divinity of Christ nor a scientific demonstration of the non-existence of soul contains the solvent that can transmute the base elements of capitalist industry into the finer forms of a nobler civilization. The problem is purely economic; Socialism and the new ethic which Socialism inevitably generates is the universal solvent, the only guaranty for the era of man-kin, brotherhood, peace and good will.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Says President Hadley of Yale: "The man who would sink the interests of a class in a supposed general public interest is but depriving that class of its own natural safeguard in the struggle for existence." Which is pure rubbish. Here is another and a sounder view: "The man or class who would sink the general public interest in the interest of a class is but depriving the general public of its natural and social safeguards in the struggle for existence." The Yale spokesman for social piracy and capitalism had better do more thinking and less talking. A man in his position should think first and then talk. What a commentary on the times when the president of the leading institution of learning sets the interest of a class above the interest of society!

A few hours passed last Saturday with the reformers in the Social Reform union, and again the following day with the United Christian party, convinced us more strongly than ever that the Social Democratic party is on the right course and that Socialists are the most practical people, since they alone really grasp the social problem in all its historical significance and present-day importance. That the principles of Socialism are acceptable to most of those at the head of the union is no doubt quite true, but we suspect most of them also look for it to come from the top down, instead of—as it surely is coming—from the bottom up.

The Socialists of France have bridged the chasm and come together. The congress recently held, while affirming the principle that the Socialist party, representing the working class in antagonism to the capitalist class, is necessarily opposed to all bourgeois administration, agreed that Socialists may, under special circumstances, and with the consent of the party, take part in such administration. Differences were got rid of, a constitution for the guidance of the party in the future was agreed to, and the unity of the whole party was declared with acclamation amid the greatest enthusiasm.

The Republican state committee of Massachusetts filed a statement of its disbursements of money for the year 1899. The committee says that its total expenses were $12,417.85. The interesting item in the account to Social Democrats is the fact that $1,000 of the money went to the Haverhill Republican club, and Haverhill was the only city in the state that received a special contribution. This amount was, of course, only a small part of the money sent to Haverhill. Next year Brockton will be in line for special financial aid, too, but we shall "skin 'em" there, just as was done at Haverhill.

The conference of the Social Reform union adopted a resolution declaring its object to be "education looking towards political action," and the non-partisan idea recommended by Chairman Bliss was turned down. Curiously enough, some one in attendance proposed adding to political action the words, "through the Republican or Democratic party, if possible." The conference, with all its confusion, declined to adopt the suggestion. The union will organize no party, and the logical place for the Socialists in the union is the Social Democratic party.

The Salvation Army at Cleveland fed the poor of that city Christmas time, and Mark Hanna, who was present to patronize the occasion with his august person, said that the providing of a square meal was not charity but "the overflowing of kindness in the hearts of the people." He added that it was to such sentiment that "we look for the future of our country." A fine prospect, indeed, for the poor! One square meal on one day in the year while they are plucked on the other 364 days by capitalist gourmands of the Hanna stripe!

The government and capitalist class of Hungary are greatly disturbed over a depletion of the population by emigration, which is assuming such alarming proportions that they are talking of special legislation to prevent the slaves getting away. A country without slaves to do the work is of no earthly use to the capitalist class. People are of no account to capitalists so long as they remain contented, but when they get restless and begin to move out, the labor-skinners begin to howl.

Mrs. Perry Widdrington, an English Fabian who spoke in Chicago last week, doubtless had a good line on the Socialist movement in Great Britain when she said: "Inertia is the hardest thing the friends of Socialism in England have to face. Another bane is the too great loyalty of trades-unionists to old leaders. Some of the latter should be got rid of in order that the more up-to-date union men may throw their influence with the Socialist party."

"All of the people enjoyed an unusually happy Christmas as a result of the unprecedented prosperity of the past year," the capitalist papers tell us. But during Christmas week Judge Tuthill of Chicago had a dozen helpless and homeless children before him—drifting and superfluous children, who had no Christmas and whom prosperity never touched.

The real cause for the continuance of old parties and the multiplying of new ones on all sorts of issues and palliatives that will not seriously embarrass the capitalist system is a lack of understanding of the real issue. When the class struggle is comprehended, men will get together in a Socialist party for the settlement of the economic problem.

While a salute was being fired and taps were sounded over the body of Rhinehart Grupp at Washington, the other day, his mother and six dependent children in Chicago were suffering for food and clothing. Grupp was a victim of the Maine explosion; his mother was a victim of an insane and barbarous social system.

When the old party politician tells you that this is a nation of free homes, ask him if the assertion is proved by the fact that of the population of greater New York 2,061,372 persons live in cheap and unhealthy tenements—not "flats" or "apartments," but cheap tenements. This from the report of the board of health.

The unanimous decision of three judges of the Montana Supreme court that Attorney Wellcome was guilty of the corrupt use of money in securing the election of W. A. Clark (Democrat) to the United States senate convicts said Clark of bribery, and furnishes another instance of Democratic purity!

The two most noteworthy facts at the beginning of the new year are that the milk of human kindness has been turned sour by the rattle and roar of war conducted by Christian nations, and that the Socialist movement, which is opposed to war and militarism, is spreading throughout the world.

One of the most distressed newspaper men in the country is the editor of the Republican-Democratic-Prohibition-capitalist Haverhill Gazette. It really is pitiful to see how impossible it is for the gentleman to accept the inevitable and become reconciled to the growing influence of Socialism.

THE PASSING CROWD

The legal fraternity is supposed to constitute one of the superior intellectual classes in the community, and the truth requires me to admit that its members as a rule are men (beg pardon, and women) of unusual attainments and ability. But in rubbing elbows with the Crowd I have found exceptions, the last one on Christmas day. Calling at my favorite stand for a cigar after dinner, I was introduced to Mr. —, a lawyer, and was soon engaged in discussing with him the subject of Socialism. During our brief conversation I spoke of the increasing knowledge of political economy among the people.

"Political economy!" he repeated; "Why, the people are interested more in political extravagance!"

I said to myself as I walked leisurely homeward: "Such a man, by a stretch of charity, may know the revised statutes of Illinois or the rules of a justice's court, but he is ignorant of a subject that plenty of workingmen understand." And my respect for the workingmen rose ten points.

In the Passing Crowd not the least important element is the children. And in the kaleidoscopic social and other changes the juvenile, like the older person, will often wonder where he is at.

"Mama," said a youngster in a West Side family the other day, "What are we now?"

"I don't understand, Frank."

"I mean—well—we used to be Presbyterians, didn't we?"

"Yes, and now—"

"Wait. Then we turned Methodists. And now we are—"

"Well, what are we?"

"Socialists!" J. H. T.

Abolish it Altogether

The country has had prosperity; is having it yet. It is actual, not fancied. But what sort of an age are we living in, and what sort of an industrial system are we working under, that prosperity should mean adversity, and that every brief season of national welfare must beget its tragic reaction?

It is easy to blame the recklessness of the speculators and gamblers. It is easy to say that the unusual crash was caused by the folly of an unusual number of people who got drunk on the "good times" and plunged, and that they had no business to do it, and deserved their punishment. But what of the innocent depositors who will lose their money in the banks that failed, and what of the wives and children of the speculators on the wrong side of the market, who have been reduced to penury and want through no fault of theirs?

Must a season of prosperity always mean a speculative riot, with wasted capital and misdirected credit? Must public welfare always have its victims? Must the brief, unstable well-being of the many always demand the sacrifice of a few? Perhaps so; but recent occurrences in Wall street are almost enough to shake the confidence of the complacent philosophers who hold that the existing industrial and social orders can't be improved.—Chicago Journal.

On the second day of last July the National City Bank of New York bought from the government, through the treasury department, the old United States custom house property on Wall street, the purchase price being $3,265,000. A certified check for the amount was delivered to Secretary Gage. Soon after the check was returned to the same bank for collection, and the money, which was for property supposed to belong to the people, has never been covered into the United States treasury, but has remained in the hands of the bank. This statement comes from the New York World. Furthermore, besides having the use for loaning purposes of $3,265,000, the National City bank has for a half year collected rent for the building from the government. The bank has thus cleared on this bold transaction—up to Dec. 28—6 per cent on the purchase price of the property, $66,337, and 4 per cent rental, $130,600. And this was a present, if the story is true, from Mr. Gage at the expense of the people. This is the sort of government the reformers want to mend. But there is no cure for it; it cannot be mended; it must be ended as Socialists propose.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC HERALD

VOL. II. No. 30.

CHICAGO, ILL., U.S.A., SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1900.

Whole No. 80.

Democracy!

A recent paper, in speaking of the candidacy of Woodruff for the vice presidency, says: "The only man who can turn down the lieutenant governor by a word is Senator Thomas C. Platt, and he has now announced that he is in favor of the lieutenant governor's nomination."

And yet we patriotic paupers boast of the triumphant march of American democracy! The present president, who at least prevents the office from being declared legally vacant, was elected by the permission of Mark Hanna. And now, forsooth, we must have foisted upon us as vice president a man whose chief claim to office lies in the fact that he is a convenient screw in Platt's political machine.

Government and election "by the people" has become a fictitious sham when one man can turn down or turn up a candidate for highest office. And yet so long as we allow the rich few to own and operate the industrial machine of production we must expect them to run the political machine to suit themselves. When the people own the machine of production, they will run the machine of politics as well.

Practical Piety.

There is a sensible parson down in Marinette, Wis. During the Christmas service in his church he happened to see a sneak thief carrying a number of presents from the parsonage. Throwing off his vestments, he darted out of the church, caught the thief, placed him in custody, and, returning to the church, finished the service. Had he been true to custom and to creed, he would probably have fervently prayed that the evil designs of the ungodly might be brought to naught. But true to common sense, he stopped praying, and did a little energetic hustling himself.

Those of us who are poor and pious, and who see industrial exploiters stripping our homes, would do well to follow this preacher's example. So long as we pray, and only pray, they will prey, and only prey. But when we recognize the fact that God is not the big policeman of this world, and when, as Socialists, we bestir ourselves to political action in our own interest, we shall drive off the capitalist exploiters from our homes. Prayer has its place, but it won't catch thieves or change systems. Politics will.

A Christmas Shake.

A curious incident happened at Fort Hamilton during Christmas week. A private stationed there wished another private, a friend of his, a merry Christmas. So hearty was his salutation and shake that his friend's vertebra was broken, and he died soon after.

When I read of it I could not but think how similar was Capital's Christmas greeting to Labor. We have heard, times beyond number, the assertion of professed friendship of the employer for the employee. Especially at election time these assertions have been particularly fervid.

But now, after the spasmodic boom of Christmas trade, the department stores have given a "shake" to many of their employees that will break their financial necks. In the evolution of mechanical skill the factories are giving "shakes" to their workers that will result fatally. And by the formation of trusts and combines capital is giving a Christmas "shake" to whole communities.

My friends, if our political backbones were a bit stronger we could shake the shaker. An S. D. P. branch room is a good gymnasium in which to get a strong Socialist backbone. Try it.

A Sermonic Stickler.

A Methodist minister of Sullivan county, N. Y., has made a new use of the phonograph. Finding it very wearisome to get up a special sermon for all the numerous weddings he is called on to solemnize, he talked into a funnel the best discourse on marriage he could devise, and had it recorded on a phonograph. So now he simply winds up the thing and lets it do the rest.

An expansion of this method will make some of the brethren of the cloth realize their affinity with the proletariat. By and by these mechanical parsons will be used to record the sermons of the best preachers, and to repeat them to innumerable audiences. Why not? A good sermon from a phonograph is better than a poor one from a live parson.

They are so much cheaper that they will surely commend themselves to poor congregations, who at present are only able to pay for a long coat and white shirt with any kind of a man thrown in.

And the fact that they can be shut up on all matters pertaining to Socialistic reform will certainly make them acceptable to rich congregations. Look to your underpinning, my brethren, and get ready to shift!

A Prosperity of Promises.

In a Grafton factory the workers were recently promised a raise of 10 per cent. News of the promised raise was given to the press, who used to bolster up the weak-kneed structure of Republican prosperity. It was hailed as a premonitory splash as labor prepared to take a dip in the limpid pool of affluence.

But when the appointed day came the promise was unfulfilled. In the words of Bill Snooks:

They were promised a raise;
And promising pays,
For public opinion was won;
But when the time came,
Their pay was the same,
And so the poor duffers got none.

It is but one of many instances. Every now and again we see in large type the news of a proposed raise in wages. Every time a cotton manufacturer pays his women slaves $4.02 a week, instead of $3.87, it is used as an argument for the beneficence of the Republican administration.

The public hears nothing of the $12.00 of actual earnings that the factory workers do not get! It is the beneficence of the thief who robs his victim and kindly gives him back his copper change!

Cold Christian Comfort.

The pastor of a prominent Boston church recently received a letter from an outcast woman, in which she expressed her desire to live a better life, and asking the assistance of his church. The following Sunday he made it the subject of his sermon. In dealing with the girl's request for help he advised her to go to Jesus, who would help her to reform.

This bit of hackneyed advice is the church's cheapest way of escaping its Christian obligation. One can imagine the degree of comfort the poor girl would derive from such an answer to her pitiful appeal. However good theological advice it may have been, it could not have supplied the girl's pressing material needs.

These outcast women will never be rescued from their sin and sorrow until Socialism gives them an open path back to virtue. Industrial injustice is at the root of all social sin, and not till it is removed shall virtue be universally possible. Shallow theologians may give cheap advice, but only the deep-reaching influence of Socialism will give the outcast help, hope and health.

chief rival as the free lance of the middle ages passed from the military service of one lord to that of his enemy. The growth of machine production and overproduction conspire to render more and more of the workers superfluous. Thus develops the "reserve army" of modern industry, the out-of-work. Their forlorn condition, however, excites little sympathy from the employing class, for their constant presence renders it easy to fill vacancies occurring in the ranks of the employed through deaths or strikes. (Modern strikes very commonly fail because of the rush of unemployed to seize the vacant places.) Again, the constant competition of the unemployed for employment tends to hold wages at a level which will barely maintain life. The reserve army thus operates as an ever-present police force, holding the employed in strict subjection, and as a dead weight to prevent the material rise of wages.

With the steady extension of the franchise, however, toward universal suffrage, the working class becomes potentially the ruling class. Its own sufferings, the failure of the owners of industry to administer their trust in the public interest, and the absurdity in a republic of a system in which the small minority own the industrial system, while the vast majority own little or nothing, and sit like Lazarus at the gate of Dives, whom they might at any general election expropriate, all conspire to bring about the great change contemplated by Socialism. The workers gradually assume political power, make the monopolies and trusts public rather than private institutions, bring the employees of these industries under civil service rules, so shorten the hours of labor that the unemployed may find employment, reduce prices in the interest of consumers and raise wages in the interest of workers until profit disappears, and the opportunity is at last afforded "for the complete participation of the working classes in the material, intellectual and spiritual inheritance of the human race."

OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES COMETH WISDOM

The last of the visitors had departed and the long night-watch began. Alone in the small, dreary room, the father was left with his dead child. A dim-burning lamp feebly illuminated the desolate scene. Only a small oaken coffin, only a little dead child, and yet those thin, closed hands and tiny, wasted face were all the treasure which remained in the world to the bereaved man, who cowered down, crushed, as it were, by a surcharge of sorrow. Of all the dreams of happiness which had for a moment lit the dark path of life, this was the last hope; for he was only a poor, hard-working toiler, one of those unfortunate creatures on whom rests the whole accumulated weight of the world's burden. A short, sad childhood, spent in a vain endeavor to at once acquire an education and help maintain a large family of small brothers and sisters; a cheerless youth spent in the grime and dreariness of factory walls; few pleasures, much toil, stilled ambitions, monotony and fatigue—such had been his lot until this poor child had at last brought into the poor stilted life one ray of a human heaven. When the father would come back in the evening, harassed by the long day of labor, and the little feet would come toddling out, the small arms clasp his neck and the pretty eyes smile lovingly into his, everything would vanish—pain, anxiety, weariness; a joy divine would flood his heart and for a time it was good to live.

And now the child was dead—anemia, the doctor said, but the bare walls, the empty room, the miserable surroundings, gave another and more terrible diagnosis—one that physicians rarely dare to give.

The hours passed, silent as death. To one who could have seen the sad picture it would have been difficult to say who, of the dead child or prostrate man, was the most statue-like and immovable. The living seemed dead, and the dead living, so peaceful and natural was the smile of happy slumber which rested on the sweet, childish lips. Lost in a stupor of grief, the father had become insensible even to his own sorrow; he was conscious of nothing save that small, beloved face, now so still. He closed his eyes and yet he saw it, even plainer than before; he knew it would be with him forever.

Suddenly he was seized with a strange tremor; some unknown power seemed to have taken possession of him. He opened his eyes, and lo! there before him, in a halo of light, stood the dear little figure, just as in life, with dimpled cheek and rippling hair; his arms were outstretched, and although the sweet, childish expression still lingered on his visage, there was a light upon it which had never been there before.

"Why do you weep, father?" the vision said. "Is it because I have died? It was your fault."

"My fault!" cried the man, forgetting his sorrow in his astonishment.

"Your fault," repeated the little one.

"But, my beloved child, were you not my only care, my only joy? Were you not the object of my every solicitude? How can it be my fault?"

"Then why did I die?" again said the small visitor.

"O, my child, the winter was long, the bread was scarce, the fever rapid and money rare!"

"Who took all the money, father?"

"The rich man who employed me."

"Who took the bread so that I hungered and sickened?"

"The rich man who refused me work, my child."

"Who took away the light and the heat, so that I trembled and was cold?"

"The rich man for whom I dug the coal."

"Why did he do this, father? Was it that I should die and leave you alone?"

"Alas, no, my child; but that his own should be well, comfortable and happy."

"Why should these things be, father? Tell me."

"Because something is wrong in the world, and we are all miserable creatures."

"If something was wrong, why did you not right it and save me, father?"

"Because I did not know, my child."

The vision seemed to move nearer, the eyes began to glow and the whole figure seemed to gain a new meaning as it said:

"Father, did you every try to know?"

The dawn crept slowly into the room; the first rays of the sun flashed upon the tiny bier and the crouching figure beside it. The man started and opened his eyes. His first glance fell upon the small figure lying so still, illuminated and glorified by the morning sunbeams. And the father rose to his feet. A light had come into his tired features, despair had vanished, a resolution had come.

"I have not lost all," he said; "I still have something to live for. Nemo.

PROGRESS AT LOS ANGELES

Social Democrats have every reason to be satisfied with the progress made in Los Angeles during the past six months. Unceasing effort, a clear-sighted policy, an undivided determination to advance the cause of Socialism, have been marked by a growth of sentiment in favor of co-operation hitherto unknown in southern California.

To begin with, our comrades have increased the circulation of the Appeal to Reason from a few score of subscribers to over 700, and they are now working like beavers to raise that again to 1,500. J. A. Wayland has a warm place in our hearts, and this is our way of showing our appreciation of his inestimable services to the cause. Incidentally we are trying to secure the brass band he has promised to the city with the largest circulation when the Appeal reaches the 75,000 mark.

Again, while others were wondering how it was to be done, Eugene V. Debs had come, gone and left a city of 125,000 astounded at the fact that it contained so many Socialists. This visit was marked by three great meetings attended by thousands, one being a religious service at which two bishops and many ministers were present. With the financial aid of Comrade H. G. Wilshire and the trades unions all this had been successfully carried through by a handful of Social Democrats.

Barring Christmas and New Year's eve, propaganda meetings have been held every Sunday evening since Aug. 20. These have been addressed by able speakers and have been the cause of many an article in the daily press. A pleasing incident marked the last day of the old year. In place of the regular Sunday propaganda meeting, on the invitation of the trustees and deacons of the Memorial Baptist church, the members of the branch attended service there to hear a special sermon by the Rev. Charles C. Pierce, formerly of Chelsea, Mass., on "Three Thoughts for the Dawning Century." This proved a rare treat, as it was a masterly defense of co-operation from an earnest and fearless advocate of Socialism.

For the present year we are mapping out elaborate plans, and no stone will be left unturned which may help to advance the cause of Socialism and the principles of Social Democracy.

NEW ETHICS AT CHICAGO

The new president of Yale university has clearly the courage of his convictions—or else he has been put in touch with the diplomatic procedure which the University of Chicago has adopted since the case of Bemis.

To the unobservant it might seem the height of audacity, not to say insolence, for an invited speaker at a University of Chicago convocation to preach a new and higher code of business ethics—"a system which shall treat the director as having moral responsibilities to his stockholders, to his workmen and to the consumers that purchase his goods or his services." Does not the University of Chicago annually celebrate on Founder's day a man who has failed at two out of three of these ethical points? Is it not now clinging to a promise of $2,000,000 more from John D. Rockefeller, who has violated every ethical principle that business relations could raise? The head of the Standard Oil company has been loyal to his stockholders—when his interest as a greater stockholder demanded it. But as for his workmen and the consumers of his product, he has regarded them but as so many lemons to be squeezed, so many mines to be worked until the vein is exhausted, then left to oblivion.—Chicago Journal.

ECONOMIC EVOLUTION

With civil and religious rights attained, there is the strange fact that the people are coming under the new bondage of money and business trusts; the profits of these are largely shared by the few who control the natural sources of wealth and are amassing fabulous fortunes; they own the mines, the forests, the lands, the machinery, and control transportation; are corrupting politics and legislation and weakening the integrity of nations. These combinations are steps in economic evolution; ugly forms of an ultimate good; cold, selfish, cruel often, but they must all be tried and judged in the court of the world's coming conscience. In some way justice must come to all.—Dr. H. W. Thomas, Chicago.

If you ordered the "Pocket Library of Socialism," complete, you would pay for it 50 cents cash. These booklets are all good, uniform in size and just what you would buy if you could see them.

SCIENTIFIC SOCIALISM

By Thomas Kirkup

The founders of scientific Socialism are Karl Marx (1818-1883), Friedrich Engels (1822-1895), and Ferdinand Lassalle (1825-1864). Of these Marx was the economist and philosopher, and Lassalle the orator, while Engels, a wealthy manufacturer, furnished a shelter for Marx in exile, popularized his teachings and aided him in his propaganda. The leading doctrines of Socialism stated by Thomas Kirkup (see Marx, Capital, 1867) are the following:

Society is an organism subject to evolution. At each stage of its growth it develops institutions suitable for its present needs. Of these the economic are the basis; upon them rest all others, political, religious, educational, social, domestic, etc. As society passes from one stage of development to another it outgrows many of its old institutions and casts them off exactly as a snake outgrows and casts off its skin. This Roman slavery gave place to medieval serfdom, which in turn was superseded by modern wage service. Leading features of the present industrial system are private property in the means of wealth production—i. e., productive land and capital. These are owned by a comparatively few individuals, companies and corporations, while the labor upon and with them is performed by the majority of the population organized and co-operating as wage-earners. Production has thus become social rather than individual. Production is conducted not for the good of the workers, nor of the community, but for the enrichment of the owners of the land and capital. Their wealth is obtained by the systematic defrauding or "exploiting" of the laborers, who, it is held, produce all wealth, but are paid the "wages of subsistence"—i. e., just enough to maintain them and their families (better, are hired as cheaply as possible)—the balance or "surplus" of their product passing as "profit" to capitalist employers, who thus, in cases, amass millions. Social production is thus accompanied by individual "capitalistic" appropriation. Goods are produced not primarily for use, but for sale. The capitalist producers being rivals rather than co-workers, each seeks not to produce simply his fair share of the total supply demanded, but to capture as much of the market as possible. Production is thus without pain. That each may increase his sales he offers his goods as cheaply as possible; but that profits may not fall, the goods are adulterated; "shoddy" triumphs over solid worth; cheapness means " nastiness." To get rich faster, capitalist employers utilize steam and electricity and more and more highly improved machinery; thus comes the "expansion of industry" and vast production; this soon means "overproduction"; for the masses, too poor to buy much, even of the cheap goods, suffer because of "under-consumption," while the wants of the wealthy in a given line are soon satisfied. A plethora of goods soon cumber the shelves and warehouses of producers. The result is a "glut." His goods being unsalable, bills on falling due cannot be met by the producer. He fails. His unpaid creditors now fail. Their fall drags down others. The result is a panic. Production stops, workers are discharged and thrown upon the community as tramps and pensioners. The unsold goods are now sold out under the hammer for what they will bring. Thus the glut is cleared away. When the existing stock of goods is consumed demand again springs up, workers are slowly re-employed, mills start, "confidence" grows, production develops into overproduction and the glut recurs, to be followed again by the panic. Thus cycles of good and bad times appear; their term shortens, the tendency being toward a chronic glut and continued stringency. To protect themselves against the Frankenstein they have aroused rival capitalists gradually combine their interests into fewer and fewer, but continually vaster, organizations, known today as "trusts." These make possible marked economies in production and further lowering of prices. Production thus becomes more highly organized and more truly social, but its management is monarchical, the few in the trust controlling wealth and wielding power far superior often to that of kings.

Among the chief sufferers from this system of planless production, overproduction, gluts and panics are the workers. Their position is wretchedly insecure. They are usually employed at will and subject to discharge at short notice. They have no interest in the business in which they are employed and may pass from it to the service of its

THE CHURCH AND THE PROBLEM

The Herald has received from the Rev. Charles H. Vail, author of "Principles of Scientific Socialism," an article on "The Church from an Economic Standpoint," with a request for its publication in this paper. The article was written for the Universalist Leader, one of the official publications of the Universalist church, and printed at Boston, Mass. For reasons which are understood by Socialists the Leader declined the article, and in a note to The Herald Comrade Vail says: "I hardly thought they would dare publish it, but was determined to give them an opportunity to refuse. Their refusal but again illustrates what we all know—that the church is subservient to wealth and power. It dare not take a stand for humanity."

The Universalist church has always boasted of its breadth and liberality and denounced all others for their narrowness and bigotry. Split into hundreds of sects and parties on the subject of religion, the church is one in its subservience to wealth. Divided into warring camps on the subject of Christ and His religion, they are united in the support and defense of the capitalist class—the ravagers of the world.

We gladly comply with Comrade Vail's request, and in order that all readers of The Herald may have an opportunity to aid in giving it a wide circulation, notice is given that his article will appear in the next number of this paper. All orders for extra copies, which will be filled at the regular bundle rate (100 copies, 65 cents), must reach the office not later than Wednesday, Jan. 17.

THE OUTLOOK

The outlook is bright and clear, though the difficulties in the way and to be overcome are as great as the field is broad. From Maine to California, and from the Gulf of Mexico to the North Pole, every Socialist should feel his responsibility. Our cause is just and must ultimately win. This is 1900, and it is the duty of every Socialist to fall into a solid phalanx one million strong, cast the glove into the ring, and with stentorian voice give to the capitalist class a dose of their own medicine. "What are you going to do about it?" We are just beginning to understand the magnitude of our duties, and we stand before the appointed task determined to discharge our responsibilities. The supreme need is that we keep ourselves vitalized by a fresh and absorbing zeal and aroused to grasp the meaning of our opportunities and consequent responsibilities. The harvest is great and the workers are few. We have now entered upon an advanced stage of activity in our educational work, in which collective ownership and operation of all the means of production and distribution for the benefit of all the people will be the only leader in the adjustment of the relations of mankind and the building up of better conditions under which every man, woman and child will be well fed, clothed, sheltered and educated, and suitable provision made for the aged and infirm.

The economic and indefeasible right of Socialism is now forever established for the relief of humanity's wants and woes, by living with all men as brethren. Organizations are but means to an end. The most important thing is to submit our principles to the people, thus opening their eyes, hearts and understandings, by reason and persuasion, to convince them that our doctrines are sound.

A king of Sparta, 880 years before Christ, pointing to his army of 10,000 men, said: "These are the walls of Sparta, and every man is a brick." Our Sparta is Socialism, and we trust the Social Democratic party will be a wall of living men around it, and that every member of the party will be a brick. Every Socialist can help on this great world's work more than he has any idea of, with the perseverance to go on to the end as the great Socialist teachers Marx, Engels, Lassalle and others did until death. True, such a life is not easy, but it is well worth living.

THE WONDERFUL CENTURY

Social Democrats believe that the solution of the industrial and social problem is to be found, and is only to be found, in the logical evolution of the idea that production and distribution of wealth shall be carried on by a union of the people for the common welfare. They believe that this idea has always logically involved, when the time should be ripe, the socialization of the means of production—that is, of the land and of capital. Socialists believe, further, that such a readjustment of the industrial and economic relations of men is essential as a condition precedent to the attainment of a civilized society illustrating brotherly relations about which preachers preach and moralists moralize. The eventual realization of such a state of affairs has been the dream of humanity. The average normal man, whether he has or has not given one moment's thought to the subject of Socialism, acknowledges that if instead of contending with one another for the means of livelihood, human beings could only be induced to unite their powers to secure the common welfare, the world would not only be a great deal better and a great deal happier, but a great deal richer than it ever has been.

The practical obstacles to such a change at any period in the history of mankind have, however, been insuperable. These obstacles have inhere in the existing conditions and institutions of each period. But Socialists contend that under the stress and influence of economic evolution these conditions and institutions have been so changed and are so changing as to render not only possible, but in the near future inevitable and necessary, a transformation of society which a century ago it would have been chimerical to expect within any calculable period. The century has been marked by extraordinary progress in every line of human endeavor, surpassing not merely any preceding century, but all the centuries put together. Alfred Russell Wallace, the well-known scientist and Socialist, holds that "to get any adequate comparison with the nineteenth century we must take, not any preceding century or group of centuries, but rather the whole preceding epoch of human history." It has, indeed, been "the wonderful century." Note a few of the great inventions and discoveries entitling it to that designation: Railways, steamships, electric telegraph, telephone, lucifer matches, gas illumination, electric lighting, photography, the phonograph, Roentgen rays, printers' linotype machine, spectrum analysis, anesthetics, antiseptic surgery, conservation of energy, molecular theory of gases, velocity of light directly measured, meteors and the meteoritic theory, the glacial epoch, the antiquity of man, organic evolution, cell theory and embryology, germ theory of disease. All preceding ages in the world's history cannot match this marvelous showing for a single century.

Socialists declare that it is not only impossible, but illogical and opposed alike to reason and to progress, that the travail of the nineteenth century will count for nothing better than the perpetuation of a system of private profit-mongering and the continued degradation of the masses of the people through the mastery of the means of production by a class. They are convinced that men now in middle age will live to see the present system give place to Socialism, which is the destined and sole possible solution of the labor problem, the social question—the only guaranty for the perpetuity of civilization.

It will be clear enough to the thoughtful mind from what has been said, that Socialists do not base their confidence altogether upon any overweening faith in their propaganda. Their efforts are along educational lines, and no such effective educational work as organized Socialist bodies are doing is discoverable elsewhere. It is not in the power of Socialists to make a revolution for which society is not ready. Neither will it be in the power of the capitalist class to prevent a revolution when the time is ripe. And the time is ripening; the capitalist system is destroying itself—it contains within itself the germs of its own destruction. The organized propaganda of the Socialists is important and should be even more effectively maintained than it now is, but where Socialists make one convert the logic of events and the speechless propaganda of the machine that never tires, never hungers, never sleeps and never strikes, makes a thousand. The avowed Socialist who has taken his place in the vanguard and proclaims the new economy and the new ethic, brings down upon his head the anathemas of the thoughtless and the beneficiaries of capitalism, but he can wait serene and confident in the assurance that capitalist industry is doomed, as feudalism was before it, and that in its development and its decay the millions are prepared to wrest from the clutch of a class the political power of government and the productive power of society.

The greatest industrial revolution in history was started when the laboring masses of the world were divorced from the means of gaining a livelihood and became the dependent wage slaves of a class; it is still here; we are in it, all of us powerless to arrest the tendency to even greater combinations of capital than we have yet known. It is in vain that men hold conferences to cry down the trusts; the operation of economic laws cannot be stayed by reformers' resolutions or the fulminations of political demagogues. No "be it enacted" can seriously hinder the historical revolution upon which we have entered, and many of us, sooner than the "statesmen" who are attempting to flag the train with their puny palliatives suppose, will have the privilege and the joy of witnessing its climax.

NOTES AND COMMENT

The Belgian electoral reform bill, which was passed by the chamber at Brussels, for the first time in parliamentary history introduces the system of proportional representation. Under this system Brussels, where there were at the last elections 90,000 Roman Catholic voters, 30,000 liberals, 50,000 radicals and 70,000 Socialists, would return seven Roman Catholic deputies, six liberals and five Socialists, while now all the members for Brussels belong to the Roman Catholic or clerical party. In future election by a clear majority will be possible only in the case of by-elections, but even in such cases the new reform bill provides that in every general election the voters should elect on the proportional system not only the members for the vacant seats, but also a number of substitutes, not exceeding one-half of the elected members, to take places that may be vacated before the next general election occurs.

Edward Wunch, a linotype machinist, formerly employed in the composing-room of a Buffalo evening paper, who brought suit several months ago against David Shankland, as president of Typographical Union No. 9 of that city, to recover damages for alleged conspiracy in forcing him out of his position because he refused to take out a card in the Typographical union, was given a verdict of $650 in the Supreme court. The Typographical union is up against a hard proposition. What will the union do when one operator runs a dozen machines? Is the complete elimination of the flesh and blood man necessary to convince the union of the industrial revolution?

The Southern Pacific and Santa Fe railroads have decided to expand their business. In looking over the field of their operations, they have found that they can just as well handle the fruit business as not. In pursuance of this policy of expansion they are making rates and conditions which private shippers find it impossible to accept, and the control of their products thus passes out of their hands. They can go on raising fruit, but the beneficent railroad companies will do the rest.

The committee of the Belgian chamber of deputies which has been inquiring into the question of the operation of the workmen's old-age pensions act has decided that the aged Belgian or even foreign workman who at the time of the promulgation of the law had worked the ten years required by the terms of the measure is entitled, being destitute, to state assistance. It is likely that the chamber, acting on the recommendation of the committee, will vote an annual credit of 6,000,000 francs ($1,200,000) to carry the law into effect.

It was the only stove in the house. John Borden's wife and three young children were starving and the weather was bitter cold, but a constable took the stove to satisfy an unpaid bill contracted by John, who had been out of employment for some time. John's wife—their "home, sweet home," is at 11 Orchard street, Chicago—was ill and the police found her and the youngest babe lying on the floor. "Mid pleasures and palaces through we may roam, be it ever so humble, there's no place like Home!"

"Merlin's" suggestion for a new method of carrying the gospel to the people is an admirable one, and, in these money-making times, ought not to fail in finding a promoter who will get a monopoly on the regular Sunday discourses of half a dozen Chicago "divines." There's money in it, and the hard-worked country preacher could be given a lay-off.

A newsboy in Philadelphia was arrested and fined $4 for selling newspapers on Sunday. This outrage was committed by the authorities under a blue law of 1794, but the capitalists of Pennsylvania who violate laws every day in the week dated a hundred years later, go free and are respectable citizens.

A committee of the Chicago city council has arranged to present a public thoroughfare to the Rock Island and Lake Shore roads. While the reformers get together to talk against the inevitable, the trusts and corporations are still able to get all they want.

Labor applied to natural resources produces all wealth. This being a whole truth, there can be no just title to wealth but a labor title, and individual gain through rent, interest, profit or dividends is theft.

In an interview at Monmouth, Ill., Comrade Debs said: "The Social Democratic party will put up a ticket, but under no conditions will I be a candidate for the presidency or any other office."

The attention of the trust smashers is called to the fact that the Standard Oil company has just absorbed the business of the Mineral Oil company of Pottsville, Pa.

We will furnish ten copies of James B. Smiley's book, "To What Are Trusts Leading?" for $1. It is a sixty-four page pamphlet and is good for propaganda.

Five thousand three hundred and forty suicides in 1899 in the United States testify to the wonderful effects of prosperity on the population.

MUSINGS

By M. Winchevsky

The closing year of the nineteenth century finds America and Europe wading knee-deep in blood in Asia and Africa respectively. And it is the liberty-loving Anglo-Saxon race which is doing the slaying in both cases. It is a pitiful spectacle, which makes one wonder whether Anglo-Saxon would not just now be a more appropriate designation.

There is, however, this consolation, that while the two elder branches of the family are thus employed, young Australia is steadily clearing the way for incoming equality.

Some folks stand so firmly on their principles that the poor things find themselves trampled under foot.

They say the enthusiasm evoked by the proclamation of unity among the various groups of French Socialists was simply indescribable. What a thrill of joy the great news sent through our hearts! And yet there are those among us who, when they discuss the same thing with regard to the state of affairs in this country, would, under one pretext or another, turn a deaf ear to the most eloquent pleadings for unity. It is for their benefit that the following verses from James Russell Lowell's Bigelow papers are here paraphrased:

I du believe in Union's cause
Ex fur away or Ex fur is;
Fer them it's right the ranks to close
Agin' the sharks an' Phayrisees;
It's wal enough fer folks that cling
To fights, while full o' thank'ees,
But Union is the kind o' thing
That don't agree with Yankee.

I du believe the people want
A party that's united;
That nothin' ain't extravagant,
Purvidin' I ain't alighted.
There sartainly shud be a plan
The leaders could agree on,
An' never mind that dear old man
That calls hisself De Leon.

I du believe it's wise an' good
To talk o' strength in unity,
O' universal brotherhood
With bliss in each community;
To tell the workers o' all lands:
Unite fer your salvation!
But party strife, ex it now stands,
Must be a reservation.

I du believe in tolerance,
In treatin' men ez brothers,
Purvidin' it is left to France,
To foreigners an' others;
For tolerance ain't made fer use,
Nor all fer love our heart is;
We need, our doctrine to diffuse,
A dozen wranglin' parties.

I du believe in harmony
To preach here to the masses,
An' practise it in Germany.
Among the workin' classes;
It's wal to send them cheerin' notes
An' in their work to guide 'em,
But here we have to gather votes
An', bein' few, divide 'em.

In short, I firmly du believe
In bein' many-sided;
O'er spits in other lands to grieve,
Remainin' here divided.
Fraternity is wal enough
For Christmas distribution,
But it ain't wuth a pinch o' snuff
Outside the constitution.

There is trouble ahead in the Bay State. Brockton has taken Haverhill down a peg or two. Now they say Newburyport has designs on Brockton, while little Rockland, jealously watched by Lynn, is only waiting to grow into a city to take the pride out of Newburyport. The situation is becoming very grave around the serene and calm Hub of the universe. The time may come when that impregnable fortress of stick-in-the-mud respectability will get a shake-up, but that is another story.

A happy new year to every one in the country, and outside of it.

M. Winchevsky.

Count Leo Tolstoy has written a letter to Mr. Ernest Crosby with reference to his new book of verse, "Plain Talk in Psalm and Parable" (Small, Maynard & Co., Boston), in which he announces his intention of having it translated in part into Russian, as follows:

"I like the book very, very much. Some of the pieces—the choice is difficult, because all are very good—I will have translated into Russian and published. There is nothing more new and interesting than the most common subjects looked at from a Christian point of view, and that is what you are doing in your book, and doing with talent and sincerity."

CALL

For Mass Convention Twelfth Congressional District of Massachusetts

All members or sympathizers of the S. D. P. of this district are invited to attend a mass convention to be held in Socialist hall, corner Main and Center streets, Brockton, on Sunday, Jan. 14, 1900, at 10 a. m., to formulate some plan to organize the towns of this district where there is at present no organization; also to nominate a district committee and to take any action which may be in the interest of the S. D. P.

This convention is called by vote of the Whitman branch.

Remember, this invitation includes YOU. Do not fail to attend.

Charles E. Lowell,
Ch'm'n Whitman Branch 13, S. D. P.

DUES AND REPRESENTATION

We feel called upon to give notice betimes that only branches in good standing will be entitled to representation at the approaching national convention, and that only members in good standing will be entitled to sign the credentials of delegates.

The convention meets at Indianapolis, Ind., on Tuesday, March 6, 1900, and to be entitled to representation the dues of a branch must be paid in full to and including the quarter ending March 31; and the same is true of individual members. No member is qualified to sign the credentials of a delegate unless his dues are paid during the same period. This is the rule agreed to by the party, and in the examination of credentials it will be the duty of the committee to see that it is enforced and that the credential of any branch not in good standing be rejected and the name of any member not in good standing be stricken from the credential.

It has also been provided that no branch or member shall be entitled to representation unless admitted at least thirty days prior to the opening of the convention. The opening day being March 6, the last day of grace is the 4th day of February. Branches instituted and members admitted after this date will not be entitled to representation. This should be clearly understood that there may be no unnecessary expense incurred in sending delegates not entitled to seats.

A large number of points declare that they are "about ready to organize," and a great number of persons say they are about ready to join. If they would be represented in the most historic convention ever held in the United States they should bear the 4th day of February in mind and come in before that date.

Herald readers will regret to learn that Comrade Eugene Dietzgen has been ill at Berlin, Germany; not seriously, we are happy to say, and in his next letter we hope to hear of his complete recovery.

A "Year Book" for Social Democrats, somewhat on the order of Edwards' "Labor Annual," will prove very useful. Such a publication will be undertaken by Comrade Frederic Heath, of our national executive board.

The Brockton Journal is a new and decidedly handsome addition to the growing list of Social Democratic newspapers. It is edited by John Treacy Doyle and published by the Journal Publishing Company. Subscription, $1 per year.

The Appeal to Reason subscription list is climbing rapidly to the 75,000 mark, and as a result of the special effort now being made there will be "music in the air" in more than one sense. The Appeal is doing excellent work for the S. D. P.

At Riverton, Ill., Comrade Debs spoke under the auspices of the Miners' Union; at Streator, the Central Trades Council; at Canton, the Trade and Labor Assembly, and at Kewanee, the Trades' Assembly. The latter part of January will find him in the South, as far as Louisiana.

As an indication of the "horror" with which Socialism and the Social Democratic party are regarded by "business men," we note the fact that the Journal of Brockton, Mass., new S. D. P. paper, contains in its second issue fifteen columns of advertising from the business men of that city. Doesn't look very much as if they were shocked, does it?

Comrade George D. Herron has severed his relations with the Iowa College and will spend the greater part of the year abroad. We hope that both Herron and Wilson will be benefited by their sojourn abroad, to the extent that when they return home their efforts and their influence will be given to the only practical movement that can save humanity in America from the impending calamities under capitalist imperialism.

New Branch

A new branch with a group of earnest comrades who will do good work for the cause has been organized at Alameda, Cal., with the following officers: Chairman, James K. Hauck; vice-chairman, Allan A. Crockett; secretary, Dr. J. M. Young; treasurer, H. Hanch; organizer, B. H. Wolfe.

Newark, N. J.

The Social Democratic party will hold lectures every Sunday at 8 p. m. at Wood building, 118-120 Market street. Sunday, Jan. 7, "Labor and Capital," Karl Pankoff.

Sunday, Jan. 14, "Universal Brotherhood," Robert Rives La Monte.

Sunday, Jan. 21, "William Morris, Poet, Artist, Socialist," Leonard Abbott.

Sunday, Jan. 28, "Social Evolution," Victor Parsonette, M. D.

Questions allowed after lecture. All welcome.

Lynn Wide Awake

The comrades at Lynn, Mass., opened the new year with a large and enthusiastic meeting, at which it was decided to make arrangements for a series of lectures during the winter months, on the principles of Social Democracy, that will be educational for the people of Lynn. These lectures will be given at least once a month, and the very ablest men in the party will be engaged to speak. The party is proud of the recent victories won in Haverhill and Brockton at the last municipal elections in these cities, and expect to be able to carry Lynn for the Social Democratic candidates at the next municipal election.

The Empire State

The New York state organizing committee meets every alternate week, and is making quite a good beginning. Its sub-committee has visited Pachoge, L. I., and arranged for starting a branch in that place. It has also received many encouraging communications from different parts of the state, especially from Ticonderoga and Corfu, where branches will soon be formed. The Ticonderoga comrades suggest that a phonograph with a collection of Socialist speeches would be a good means of propaganda in our state, where there are so many small towns and cities, spread over such a large extent of country. The committee is distributing "Arouse, Ye Slaves!" and Carey's speeches, besides periodical literature.

A Working Branch

"That same old gang" who established Branch No. 1 of Ohio have a record for "sticking" which dates back through various reform movements. Evolving to Socialism, their consistency and persistency are bearing fruit. The branch has been kept up through discouragement and sacrifice on the part of the few faithful, who now begin to see the results of their work.

The branch is gaining in membership—mainly bright young workmen. We have also discovered a number of comrades who were connected with the Social Democratic party of Germany, and who, to use a common expression, will "stir up the Dutch." In fact they are already doing so.

The branch admitted seven new members during the month of December, and, to wind up the year, held an open meeting on Sunday, Dec. 31. It proved to be a bitter cold day, but Bricklayers' hall was nicely seated with comrades and friends to hear an address from Comrade M. J. Flannery, who is attending Heidelberg University, located here. His effort was a splendid presentation of the basic ideas of Socialism, and was well received. Comrade Ross, who is the leader of a mandolin club, enlivened the occasion by having the members render several selections.

It was the best meeting ever held by Branch No. 1, and prospects for 1900 open up bright.

Tiffin, Ohio. Buckeye.

Man Under the Load

The present situation may be compared to that of a man who has fallen under a heavy dray laden with merchandise. You can call the dray "civilization" and the bales of merchandise "commercialism." Soon there come along a set of men who see that there is a man under the dray, who, if he be not dead, probably wants to get out. They gather around and talk about the man, and about how to get him out, and whether he ought to be let out. They decide that it might be a bad thing to let him out all at once. He would not be used to it, and he had better get used to it by getting a foot out first. So they talk about him, and they get a job talking about him. You can call these men legislators [and reformers.—Ed. S. D. H.]. Then there is another class of men, who do not pay much attention to the man, but they examine the bales and the dray, and they make tables of figures. They call these men scientists, and they get a job talking about the man. Then another class of men say the man would not be under the dray if his heart were not bad. And these men are called ministers, and they get a job talking about the man. So they have all got jobs, and the man is left under the dray.—George D. Herron.

BROCKTON'S SOCIALIST MAYOR'S INAUGURAL

It is safe to say that in the 40,000 population of the city of Brockton, Mass., there was not a single live man or woman who was not profoundly interested in the event that marked the incoming of the new year, Jan. 1. It witnessed the inauguration of Comrade Charles H. Coulter, of the Social Democratic party, as the second Socialist mayor of an American city. It marked another victory for the Socialist movement, a movement vitalized with the highest patriotism—a patriotism for humanity; it was an occasion potential for the labor movement in this country and prophetic of the ultimate supremacy of the working class in the government of the country at large.

Mayor Coulter's inaugural address dealt in detail with the present condition and needs of the city, and evinced a comprehensive understanding of the duties of his office and a sincere appreciation of his responsibilities. It is too long for presentation in full here, but the prelude to his treatment of matters purely local and practical in their nature is so admirable and loyal that we find space for it below:

The sacredness of the duties and responsibilities of the official position which the suffrages of my fellow citizens have called upon me to assume is not and will not be by me, and should not be by others, underestimated. Grave problems press for solution in city, state and nation, problems in which are involved the weal or woe of the people of this city, of this state, of the republic and of the civilized world; and as we are called upon to assist, in whatever capacity, in solving these problems, let us respond with our loftiest aspiration, our best and purest thought, to the end that the onward sweep of humanity may be ever upward to nobler and yet nobler heights of thought, of action and of life.

Conceiving this to be my duty to you and to mankind, I feel it incumbent upon me as a Social Democrat to reaffirm the fundamental principles of the party of which I am proud to be a member, and upon the platform of which I have been elected, profoundly convinced, as I am, that in the application of these principles will be found the solution of the pressing problems now confronting society.

It is proper also for me to submit that the limited power of this or any other municipality will permit only in degree the application of these principles, but I assure you that I shall demand their application to the utmost limit, consistent with the municipal powers.

Upon the other hand this economic change has resulted in the gradual displacement of labor, the insecurity and scarcity of employment, and the appearance of the unemployed class, followed by an increasing intensity of the competition between the workers for an opportunity to labor.

In the presence of these and many other facts incident to present industrial conditions, the Social Democratic party asserts its aims to be the social or collective ownership and operation of the tools—the means of production and distribution—the establishment of the co-operative commonwealth.

In support of its position it points to the social nature of these tools; that they are the product of the combined social genius and not of the individual; that they require the co-operative effort of the social energy for their concrete production, preservation and operation. It is proposed to demonstrate the merit of social ownership, that such social ownership is necessary to establish the right to work, and the right of the worker to enjoy the results of his labor; that it would result in certainty of employment, security of subsistence, the abolition of human poverty and the elevation of the race above the brute struggle for material needs forced upon man by our present industrial system.

With increasing rapidity two forces are gathering in modern society, two forces with irreconcilable aims, between which the citizenship must choose, and choose wisely, else shall human progress halt, perhaps forever. The forces are the inevitable result of the economic development of the ages, the one declaring for an industrial, a social monarchy; the other affirming its purpose to be the establishment of an industrial, a social democracy.

The mechanical progress of the times has caused the passage of the tools whereby the food, clothing, shelter and the other material necessities of life are produced and distributed, into the possession of a lessening minority of the members of society, while the increasing majority, thus dispossessed, have become the economic dependents of the minority.

The tools of modern industry, though possessed by the few upon the basis of private ownership, are, in their essential nature, public or social, and not private or individual, being, as they are, the concrete genius of the race, and requiring union of effort or co-operation upon the part of society for their operation.

The advance of social evolution has witnessed the changing of the tools of production from individual to a social character. This passing out of the possession of the individual members of society into the hands of a decreasing number, who are thereby enabled to exploit the labor power of those dispossessed, the continual development of these tools, is causing the destruction of the middle, the small capitalist class, the formation of gigantic combinations of capital, the advent of the trust, and the complete subjection of society to the possessors.

OUR LETTER BOX

HINT TO THE CONVENTION

Editor of The Herald: We wish to give our hearty indorsement to the letter appearing in The Herald Jan. 6, entitled "A Retrospective View." It sums up the situation in a very intelligent manner, and the national convention should be guided by the ideas contained in these lines: "Nothing must be done that will either embarrass the triumph advance of the Social Democratic party or change its spirit. Any readjustment of the Socialist forces that may take place by reason of the split in the ranks of the Socialist Labor party must not be allowed to weaken the standing of our party before the country or nullify the value or the prestige of its victories."

St. Louis. Hoehn and Putnam.

We will send free by mail the "Pocket Library of Socialism" to anyone sending us five yearly subscribers to The Herald at 50 cents each. The "Pocket Library" consists of ten books on Socialism, for which we should charge you 5 cents each, or 50 cents (complete) if you ordered them from us. By helping The Herald circulation, as suggested, you get them free.

WANTED—WORKING SOCIALISTS

Not to make money, but to make more Socialists. That is what we want to do before we meet the hosts of capitalism in the political arena next year, isn't it? And that is what we must do if we expect success to crown our efforts. What is the best way to make Socialists? Everybody gives the same answer: "Get men to read the literature of Socialism." If you can succeed in doing that you have started a certain influence in the world that is beyond the power of any man to estimate; you may have rendered an inestimable individual service to the cause of Socialism.

Now, you know that, as a rule, it is useless to try and induce men to read any of the great standard works of our literature. Indeed, it is too true, unfortunately, that the victims of wage slavery have neither time nor disposition to do that. In view of this condition of affairs, there rests upon every Socialist no clearer duty than that of bringing to the notice of their fellowmen and inducing them to read some of the excellent publications in cheaper form, such as are found in the "Pocket Library of Socialism"

With a view to securing thousands of readers for these little books, admirably adapted as they are for the propaganda of Socialism, as well as to increase the circulation of this paper, we have made arrangements that enable us to offer the complete set of ten books free to anyone sending in five yearly subscriptions to the

Social-Democratic Herald

The subscription price of the paper is 50 cents; the complete "Pocket Library of Socialism" will be mailed postpaid to anyone sending us, at one time, five names and $2.50. Ten subscribers for six months, at 25 cents, will be accepted.

If five thousand present readers of The Herald can see in this offer where they can help the spread of Socialist principles, and will lend a hand in carrying it through, there will be added to The Herald subscription list 25,000 names, and 50,000 books on Socialism will go into the hands of the people as a result of their efforts.

Isn't it worth while to do your share in accomplishing this result on the eve of a national election, in which the Social Democratic party will participate? If you don't want the books yourself, you can give them away or dispose of them at the retail price of 5 cents. The complete "Pocket Library of Socialism," ten books, would cost you 50 cents.

First National Campaign

It need not be said that the addition of 25,000 names to The Herald subscription list and the circulation of 50,000 books setting forth in simple and comprehensive terms the principles of Socialism, will have a tremendous effect on the campaign of 1900—the first national election in which the Social Democratic party will take part.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC HERALD

VOL. II. No. 31.

Whole No. 81.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE OF BRIGHT SAYINGS

Medicine and Murder.

A few days ago I bought a bottle of Scott's Emulsion. Feeling somewhat run down, as the result of an eccentric winter on the east coast, I got it with the idea of building up my system.

But when I examined the bottle, I found that I had unconsciously helped to build up another system as well. A revenue stamp showed that I had contributed 2½ cents to the support of a system of bulldozing, barbarism and bloodshed.

I am regaining my health at the cost of sending a dozen bullets to be used in destroying the liberty, land and life of a people whose only fault is that they have the courage to assert their claim to their own.

This passes patience, and as a civilized civilian I protest! If Bill McKinley wants to stick a feather in his cap by sticking a bullet in a Filipino, let him borrow or beg his funds from the millionaires whom he serves. If the capitalists are bound to be the commercial pirates of the east, let them hire at their own expense the unjailed convicts of the country to do their dirty work!

How long shall servile labor allow itself to be taxed in order to pay for the dastard schemes of capital?

Who Sins?

We have credited this war of conquest, and rightly, to those capitalists whose commercial interests it advances. With perfect justice, we have termed it a war of oppression, of exploitation, of commercial greed, of brigandage. We have laid the blame upon the shoulders of the moneyed class.

But are we fair in doing so? Have you ever considered, my laboring friend, that the proportion of capitalists, as compared to workmen, is comparatively small? And don't you know that in a republic like this number is power.

If a giant permits a dwarf to keep him in subjection, it is the giant's fault. If a dog allows one measly little flea to keep him in torment, thinking, as other curs with fewer legs have thought, that scratching would be anarchistic, nobody could blame the flea.

And so, if we are compelled to pay a revenue tax to help fill the Filipino patriot with Christian love and Yankee lead, it is the fault of that larger class whose votes have placed the reins of government in the hands of the scheming few.

Let labor advance its interests by the ballot, and capital will cease advancing its interests by the bullet!

A Jingo Jingle.

The last year has developed some remarkable specimens of the genus "jingo." Among these may be mentioned the poet laureate of England, whose initials show how far he has progressed in learning the alphabet of poetic language.

This poetical saw-filer has just given us a rhythmical rasp or two that are calculated to set our teeth on edge. He ends one of the stanzas with this patriotic line: "Who fights for England fights for God!"

Alfred has evidently soared so high in his official effusions that he has been able to look into the council chambers of the Almighty and find out this important cabinet secret. Such a disclosure will, of course, effectually secure the confidence of the pious London stock-jobbers.

Perhaps this will explain why those profane English Socialists thought the Boers might not be wholly wrong in fighting for their rights.

At any rate, in view of the course of events occurring in South Africa, Austin certainly paid a strong compliment to the devil!

But perhaps Austin was wrong.

The Prosy Fact.

To get down to practical prose, it would seem much more likely that his satanic majesty is one of England's aids; or else he has efficient emissaries to represent him in the various military departments. Personally, if I had less respect for the devil, I would say he was commander-in-chief of the British bomb-busters.

I say "had I less respect," because I believe that Satan would be wise enough not to let his commercial satellites conspire against his plans of conquest. It seems that gross jobbery effects have developed in the army and ammunition of the British; ammunition has been defective; rifles were useless after a dozen shots, and commissary supplies are not up to the standard.

Thus is the British empire doubly menaced by the serpent of capitalism that it has fed and fostered. On the one hand the insanely selfish schemes of Rhodes, Chamberlain & Co. are leading the flower of the British army into reach of the Boer scythe; and on the other hand the greed of commercial traders at home is betraying them to their death when they get there.

England, like Haman, has been building her own gallows.

The Socialist Cure.

Any man who investigates war with intelligence and sincerity, will in almost every case, find it based on commercial and competitive causes. Strip the warrior of his glory, and you find either the robber or his victim.

Underneath the blatant lingo

Of the patriotic jingo, There's the hypocritic purpose of the knave;

So, amid the blaze of glory

Of the battle, red and gory, You may know they're forging fetters for the slave.

And just as the principle of competitive capitalism lies at the bottom of war, so the principle of co-operative Socialism will lie at the base of international peace. When national resources are properly utilized, and when public need is esteemed of more importance than private ambition, we shall hear nothing of war.

When the Socialistic voter

Makes use of his franchise motor To revolve the wheels of labor's commonwealth,

War will vanish like a vision,

With its vampirish ambition, And the soldier can dig post holes for his health!

Then let the peace advocates come out of their Aladdin ovens and see, in the fullness of the light of truth, that only Socialism can effectually accomplish their desires.

Honest Politics.

A certain prominent paper in the east has made comment on the remarkable character of the Haverhill campaign, as shown in the branch's published statement of receipts and expenditures. It blunders out its surprise that only nominal sums were paid to the speakers in the campaign, and especially over the fact that no money was "spent in canvassing!"

The old parties have so long hired oratorical prostitutes at large sums to coin and pass off specious arguments in their favor that the idea of men talking for nothing seems remarkable. And in the "canvassing" it used to take many a wad to fill up the rotting holes before the party ship could be successfully floated on the political sea.

This surprise is a compliment to our cause. It simply shows that the great principle of Socialism for which we strive is the new force that is lifting men out of their sordid selfishness into the higher plane of equality, altruism and morality.

MERLIN.

For some weeks past a mistake has occurred in the price of Gronlund's "Co-operative Commonwealth," in our book list. It has been advertised at 25 cents, which is wrong; the correct price is 30 cents. This is a low figure for the handsome edition now printed, and we shall be glad to fill all the orders friends can send us.

A Chicago detective, Tyrrell by name, testifies that "no fugitive of any note can be taken out of the state of Washington if he has money at his command." Tyrrell might have added that any fugitive of note can get out of any state if he has money at his command. When it comes to a contest between boodle and justice, boodle wins, and none knows better why it wins than the so-called detectives.

During the time that that great public benefactor, Russell Sage, dealer in stocks and bonds, was making a million dollars by the manipulation of Standard Gas stock, the poor clothing-makers of the East Side, New York, were contending for a raise of wages for an eighteen-hour day to $5 a week. These poor people give every day much more in value to the community than Russell Sage, but they are abused and miserable, while the thrifty millionaire is a "model for the youth of the land!"

Countess Adeline Schimmellman, speaking in New York last month, said: "In Chicago I sheltered, paying the expense out of my own pocket, more than 50,000 homeless and hungry men. In this city not a single request has been made to me for help. In all I did not get $1,000 toward the work anywhere, and spent many thousands for the work in Chicago. It was there that I found more want and desolation than I did in the slums of London or in any other city in Europe. Eighty out of every hundred tramps who are taken to the hospitals and die are said to succumb from heart failure, when the actual cause is hunger."

WE DISCUSS THINGS IN THE LODGE ROOM

For the past two weeks our lodge has been mixed. The carpenter calls us "confusionists." And a few of the boys are not even that much; they are "fusionists." Now, I will mention a few samples of both kinds. You see, our lodge has gone into this reform business pretty extensively since the first of the year, and we run up against all kinds of remedies.

When one of the boys gets track of a new reform, he springs it on us as the "only way out." Now, as a new party is "organized" about every week, we are getting all kinds of ideas. It is like hunting for a cure for corns at the drug stores. In fact, you don't have to hunt for them. They come.

Will, the painter, wants to get out of the world—out on an island or in the woods—and start in as "brothers" to building huts—he calls them palaces—and growing grains, vegetables, hogs and fruits. He says we can give the world an "object lesson" and then "nearly everybody will do as we do."

But even the gardener, Joe, doesn't like that idea. He says we are all one big family, and we can't split off from civilization that way. And then, Joe has been reading lately about several "experimental stations" of that kind and he is willing to learn from the sufferings of the other fellows. He says he doesn't want any of it in his potato patch. And Joe is wise.

John wanted us to join a party of Christians. "If all the Christians would organize a party," he said, "they would have a central figure to rally around, and they could capture the government. Then we would have the government of His people."

"But I ain't one of His people," called out the doctor, "and I have to be figured on in this business. All the Christians in the country couldn't bring about what we want. Even among all those who want reform at all there is no general desire for a party. I attended a meeting of Christian reformers last week, where nearly every one of them was against party action, except such as they could get through the 'good men' in the two old parties. I think the doctors, organized as a party, would have just as good a chance, and no better, than the printers, or farmers, or Christians, or liberals, or scientists, or any other one small section of humanity in regulating a new system of government."

I thought the doctors' party would have a little the best of us, for they could kill us all off with drugs—all except a few—and those few could then start over again on Will's plan. However, I said nothing. They might have called out "anarchist" at me. The next to speak was Henry, the coal dealer. He thinks the land is the whole thing.

"Why, I'm just as radical as any of you," he said, "but if you tax the land out of the capitalist's hands, you then give every man an equal chance. I want to see us get down to the bottom of this thing. Get right down to the earth."

"Yes," said John, "that may be all right; but land deeds are handed down, or sold down, from that first fellow, the warrior. In England it was William I.; in America, the pilgrims, who drove out the Indians. Every land deed is sealed with blood. Is that a good foundation for a humane and just system of government? Why, Henry, your deeds only certify that certain men of past ages were murderers, thieves and criminals."

"Then you would turn the land over to the government. Next thing you will want houses and tools."

"That's about it," said John. "Land, air, water, coal, timber and minerals are all the same to me when it comes to private ownership. And I can't distinguish between land and tools of transportation—land and tools of manufacture. A man may use land and tools, but he can't take them with him; and, as he made neither, they belong equally to his successors and to every generation. The only 'pay' that humanity, as a whole, requires for this land and these tools, books, etc., is that each man use them, and leave them in a little better condition than he found them."

"Yes," said I, "Jack, here, has a dandy steam valve, but fifty thousand men have worked on steam valves and Jack has studied the best of them. Thousands more men have studied steam and made the demand for such a valve. Millions of men have made steam engines and millions more have fed and clothed these mechanics. Every one of us has an interest in that valve."

"Let's get down to a plan and work this thing out," said the shoemaker. "The right kind of laws to control monopolies and then a law to remove bankers from the senate, and stop bribery, and—"

"Direct legislation, so we can find out what we want and vote on it ourselves," called out the dairyman. "That's what we want."

"Controlling monopolies by laws is a grand undertaking," said Jack; "but while I admire your ambition, I don't quite see how you are coming out, except as a traitor to your country—or at least to your masters."

"That is only a 'step at a time,' and a step contrary to evolution at that," said the carpenter. "Monopolies and combinations of every kind made by the capitalists have been the most natural thing in the world. Trusts do away with competition in proportion as they have the whole trade in a particular article. Not many years hence, at the present rate, the trusts will stop advertising altogether, and the millions spent on newspapers and drummers will go somewhere else. Witness the baking powder trust. Full-page ads. of great department stores will disappear. One store will have all the goods. Then how easy the final step to Socialism! Every industry will have developed to so nearly a perfect system that no man, either workingman or capitalist, will fail to see the natural evolution of industry. To stay at that point will be impossible. To go back will only make it necessary for other generations to repeat the evolution up to and beyond that point."

Our members, who had started out with much confusion and fusion, then settled down to listen to a speech by the carpenter. He first cleared the ground by telling us that the greatest confusion of all was made in trying to fuse religion and politics. "John's Christian party," he said, "puts us all in confusion, because the doctor won't have religion mixed in his economics; and another group of men won't have politics dragged into their religion. These things won't fuse! Of course you can look wise and say religion has to do with all relations of men, but the unequal distribution of wealth and industry is a straight problem in economics. Fusion only results in confusion." Then followed his speech.

Horseshoe Joe.

FRENCH SOCIALIST PARTY

The following is the resolution passed by the Socialist congress in Paris:

"The Socialist party is composed

"1. Of the five national organizations.

"2. Of regional and departmental federations.

"3. Of groups which shall request to be affiliated to the party. But these groups must have at least fifty subscribing members, have been in existence for one year, and there must be no federation in their department. These groups will be struck off the list if they do not form a departmental federation during the following year. They cannot be readmitted except by the unanimous consent of the general committee.

"4. Of trade unions who adhere to the declaration of Socialist principles enumerated by the first general congress of the party.

"5. Of co-operative societies who also adhere to these principles and devote part of their funds to Socialistic propaganda.

"The party shall meet once a year in a general congress. Each general congress shall determine the place of the next meeting, but it is understood that the congress shall not meet two years running in the same town (but an exception is made for 1900 on account of the exhibition.)

"There shall be formed a general committee of the party, whose powers shall last for one year. Each organization shall be represented on this committee by delegates elected by it, there being one delegate to every fifty societies represented at the congress. There shall be seven federations—Ardennes, Cote d'Or, Doubs, Bretagne, Bouches-du-Rhone, Seine et Oise, Saône et Loire. There shall also be one delegate for the communistic alliance. Each of the other organizations at the congress shall have an additional delegate. The decisions of the committee shall be taken by a simple majority of the members. Each organization shall subscribe in proportion to the number of its members. The congress declares that no Socialist newspaper is the official organ of the party. The largest freedom of opinion should be allowed, but if action has to be taken, then the newspapers should act as directed by the committee. It is advisable that newspapers should not attack other sections of the party. All official communications from the committee should be inserted in the newspapers."

TO PROUD CAPITAL

Tell me, capital, isn't it true That labor's hand created you? Pray, would you not starve but for labor? Yet you are its calculator.

None of the world's wealth didst thou create, Yet all belongs to thy vast estate. Oh, what magic delusion hast thou plan'd, That steals the products of the toiler's hand? —Eugene V. Brewster.

Jan. 7, 1900.

DEMONSTRATION OF THE THEORIES OF SOCIALISM

The capitalist and captain of industry in these later days has set himself to demonstrate that the theories of the Socialist are sound. After some centuries of adherence to the principle that individual competition brings the best results and the greatest progress for the individual and for society, suddenly many thousand employers and capitalists rush out of business, give up the positions they occupy and the plants they own in order to avoid competition, and set themselves to prove that society can be best and most cheaply served, and the workers and managers, from highest to lowest, can get better returns, if all productive work in each branch is performed by a single centralized body controlling prices and wages at pleasure, abolishing agents and middle men, restrained by no competition, and responsible only to society as a whole. If this theory is true, does it not follow as a matter of course that society as a whole might better take possession of the plants and control the business, and absorb for itself the profits of production or the gains by cheapening production at its pleasure?

The philosophy of the competitive period in human development has been sustained by the most rapid and healthful progress ever known thus far, but the Socialist answers that better yet is attainable. Grant that this past stage of development was necessary, its best fruitage is a higher stage in which the costs and the losses of individual competition can be avoided, and in each branch of service all can freely do their best for the benefit of all. Abolish the spur of competition, driving each to seek the latest inventions and the best devices, for they have been secured. Take from traders and manufacturers the intense pressure of battle against each other, and give all of them a sure profit for a regular service to society. Let the multitude of employees be also emancipated from the tyranny of competition, which closes some works and drives others to reduce wages, add let them all have their regular pay for service to society, increased by the elimination of the losses through competition. When experience proves, as the Socialist holds it will prove, that the greatest progress and the highest conditions yet attained are not comparable to those to be attained by abolishing competition, then no man but an idiot will question the wisdom of society as a whole taking control of all the processes of trade and industry, and the harmonious adjustment of all, with power to cheapen products or enlarge profits in each as may best serve the general welfare.

If the modern combination proves that competition is no longer a benefit, but a curse; that individual struggling for success is no longer needed to evolve the best inventions and devices; and bring them into use; that the monster corporation can work more cheaply, and at the same time more wisely and ably, in handling many establishments of different kinds, far apart and under different circumstances, than the individual owners who have created them; that it can prevent the frequent stoppage of the weaker works while the stronger continue to thrive; that society no longer needs any defense against monopoly, because the monopoly must always cheapen in order to enlarge business, and that workers, consumers and employers will all gain by elimination of competition; then, indeed, the Socialist has only to demand the logical completion of the journey. There will be no sense in leaving the big corporations to blunder along, sometimes losing, and sometimes hurting society by unwisdom, when society itself can appropriate their plants, direct their labor, make and bear its own blunders and pocket its own gains. —From the New York Tribune.

The Social Democratic party stands for the interests of all useful members of society and urges the manual and mental workers to organize to secure their emancipation from the thralldom and tyranny of capitalist industry.

The American Fabian has the following: "There are now two Socialist mayors in the United States, Haverhill having re-elected—in the face of combined Republican, Democratic and Prohibition opposition—Mayor Chase, a young workingman, who seems to have gained the confidence of many voters besides those of the Social Democratic party, which has just elected him. Brockton, another Massachusetts town, has followed Haverhill's lead and elected a mayor on the Social Democratic platform. His success is said to have been largely due to the general dissatisfaction with both Democratic and Republican parties."

A SIGNIFICANT OMISSION

In an editorial on the formation of another ideal community, the Chicago Tribune a few days ago gave an account of a new venture to be made in New Jersey, where the proper way of living and enjoying life will be exemplified. The Tribune points out some of the causes which will militate against the success of the ideal community, all of them known to be true, especially so to those persons who have had experience in communities, either dead or living. But the strange feature of the Tribune's article is its failure to state that the new ideal community is to be "another test of Socialism." This omission on the part of our capitalistic contemporary is quite significant in view of the fact that it has heretofore strongly insisted that colony experiments were "attempts at Socialism," and their uniform failure a proof that the theory of Socialism was impracticable and valueless. The truth is, of course, that there never existed a Socialist community anywhere; such a community has always been impossible, and has at no time been favored by Socialists. May we hope that the Tribune's omission to connect Socialism with the latest ideal community is an indication that the capitalistic newspapers are tiring of their misrepresentations?

SPREAD THE LIGHT

Comrades, the greatest need of the hour is the dissemination among the people of correct information on the social problem. Of good intentions there is no dearth; of real desire to do something to help inaugurate a better state of things there is evidence in every small group, go where one will. There is probably more unorganized Socialist sentiment groping its way to the light in the United States today than in any other country in the world. The journalists of capitalism have utterly failed with all their cunningly devised abuse and misrepresentations to satisfy the people that Socialism is an undesirable and impossible thing. The conviction is growing everywhere that Socialism, despite all opposition, is the one thing desirable and practicable. True, there is much confusion as to what it means, and so we find all sorts of people with all sorts of ideas—ideas of direct legislation, taxation of franchises, municipal ownership, colonization, brotherly love, non-partisanship, and so forth—calling themselves Socialists. We recently attended a meeting of some excellent people, where the speaker—who, by the way, would refuse to be classified anywhere than with the Socialists—began his address by taking a census of his audience. "I wonder," he said, "how many of you are Socialists. All of you who are Socialists OF ANY KIND hold up your hands." And nearly every one present raised a hand.

The opportunity for the Social Democratic party is here. The spread of correct economic knowledge among the people is of the highest importance. The members of the party are not doing all they can in this regard. Every branch should become an active educational center and every member a bearer of the principles of Socialism to his fellows. Sacrifice for the cause there is, but not enough. The circulation of the Herald is important, not alone to the party, but to the cause it represents, which is greater than the party. One of our comrades in Chicago secured, last Sunday, within an hour, thirteen subscribers to the Herald. Why can't you do that? Wherever a branch exists this should be done every week by some member, and if all felt the responsibility and need of the hour, it would be done.

NOTES AND COMMENT

The Social Democratic party says to the working class: The chief interest of society is its economic interest; this is controlled by the class which is in possession of the productive powers of society—that is, the class which owns land and capital. This class is also in control of the government, and government is used to protect its economic interests. Never until the useful and producing class organizes to take control of the government will the masters of production be dislodged or any other system than one of plundering labor be possible. To establish economic justice, workingmen must first take away the power to govern from those whose interests are served by retaining economic injustice.

The contribution of John D. Rockefeller to the trust symposium is in the main singularly corroborative of the contentions of Socialists; but the Socialists are impractical visionaries, while Rockefeller is an eminently successful and hard-headed business man. Socialists have always affirmed that the trust was necessary for economy and efficiency, and declared the trust inevitable long before Mr. Rockefeller began his operations.

If every man who calls himself a Socialist will this year vote for the candidates of the Social Democratic party, to be nominated at Indianapolis, March 6, we will get the social revolution well under way in the United States, and in 1904 ring in the new order of things and put an extinguisher on the trusts and every other form of exploitation for keeping the people subject to things, instead of being, as Socialism would make them, supreme over all things.

A government by the class in possession of the productive resources of society is necessarily maintained by the injunction and the shotgun. Just as an ordinary burglar must go armed in his depredations to protect himself, so the organized burglars of capitalism must have the power and force of the government to protect them. The only relief is a government by the producing class. Political mastery first, then economic mastery through the social ownership of all the means of production and distribution.

At the lecture of Comrade E. V. Debs, given at the Boyd opera-house, Omaha, under the auspices of the C. L. U., the members of the Protective Board of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen of the Union Pacific system, who were in session at the time, and their ladies, were the guests of honor, and occupied the boxes. The compliment tendered by Comrade Debs to his old brotherhood friends was gracefully returned in an invitation to dine with them, which was accepted and enjoyed all around the circle.

Every week adds to the conviction that the Social Democratic party is an organization in which all Socialists can unite. Public Ownership, of Erie, Pa., says: "The movement on foot for uniting the factions of Socialists under one banner is still progressing toward a final culmination and the most feasible camp seems to be that of Social Democracy. The recent victories of this party in Massachusetts and the general boom it has received all over the country give it prestige favorable to this conclusion."

In the death of Dr. Edward McGlynn humanity lost a noble friend and the cause of social progress a tireless and courageous worker. His sacrifices and his heroism will linger as a sweet remembrance. The life and works of the man McGlynn are a common possession, rich in their humanizing influences—a rebuke to sordid lives that are forgotten before they are ended.

One of the old Populist papers of California, the Reasoner, published at San Luis Obispo, says: "The Social Democracy is the coming party. In a few years it is destined to sweep everything before it, because it is founded upon the logic of the times, is broad in its sweep, and hangs its existence upon no narrow and evanescent issue, to pass away and leave it stranded."

The custom of leaving the appointment of committees in the city council of Haverhill to the mayor has been broken by the Republican and Democratic combine, and Mayor Chase is relieved of that part of his official duties. This is the way the capitalist party politicians show their respect for the principle of majority rule.

It was Comrade Eugene V. Brewster of Brooklyn who, in a public address, said: "I don't pretend to be honest; no man is, and a lawyer cannot be." And Brewster is competent to prove his assertion, since he is himself a lawyer and knows what he is talking about.

If wages have been advanced 5 per cent, and commodities, which the wage-earner must have, have been advanced 25 per cent, how much better off is the wage-earner than he was before the advance? O prosperity, what a howling farce art thou!

The Chicago Pet Dog club was organized last week. The leader of that "set" should have been invited to speak at the Woman's club to tell what that particular "set" exists for.

THE CHURCH FROM AN ECONOMIC STANDPOINT

By Rev. Chas. H. Vail

It is generally admitted that the church today is not in a very prosperous condition. Many of the leading denominations, with their splendidly equipped machinery, are doing little more than perpetuating themselves, while many others are actually declining, or, at least, making no perceptible headway as a moral and spiritual power in the world. The financial embarrassment of churches, which often results in the anomaly of closed doors and idle ministers, and the decrease in the large sums heretofore raised for missionary purposes, is becoming a just cause for alarm. That this condition has become a real problem is evident from the space devoted to its consideration in various church publications. I recently saw it stated that the Congregationalist body has some 500 unemployed ministers, and the same is true to a greater or less extent of nearly all the denominations. Judging from articles which have appeared in the Universalist Leader from time to time, it would seem that our own denomination is not entirely free from this condition.

There have been many causes assigned for this condition, but nearly all fall to go to the root of the difficulty. If the condition is anywhere near as bad as indicated, it must be evident that the cause is not superficial, but deep seated. Most of the reasons usually advanced are mere commonplace, and those who offer them view the situation either from the standpoint of the church alone—its policy, organization, doctrine—or from what they choose to call the perversity of human nature, lack of consecration on the part of ministers and people, worldliness, indifference, etc. That these assumed causes are insufficient to account for the present condition is evident from the fact that the condition is so general and exists under different systems of organization and doctrines and where indifference and the worldly spirit do not predominate. But even where these drawbacks exist, they are merely effects; we must look deeper for the cause.

It is beginning to be recognized that economic conditions form the real basis of society, and explain, in the last analysis, the whole superstructure of social institutions. The economic conditions, at any given period, are the soil out of which grow the whole life and character of mankind; that is, the manner in which the production and distribution of goods are carried on determines what kind of laws, customs and social arrangements they will have. The laws, customs, education, public opinion and morals are controlled and shaped by economic conditions, or, in other words, by the dominant ruling class which the economic system of any given period forces to the front. The ruling ideas of each age have been the ideas of its ruling class, whether that class was the patricians of ancient Rome, the feudal barons of the middle ages, or the capitalists of modern times. The economic structure of society largely controls and shapes all social institutions, and also religious and philosophical ideas. In fact, every social, political and religious question is fundamentally economic. The church as an institution existing in society constitutes a social question, and, like all other social questions, resolves itself into a question of wealth production and distribution; that is, the existence or maintenance of the church organization, under present conditions, rests ultimately upon an economic basis.

To solve the problem of pecuniary embarrassment of the church, which involves the problem of closed churches and idle ministers, we must look to economic conditions. It is admitted today that the Protestant church, with possibly the exception of the Episcopal, is supported chiefly by the middle class. The economic status of this class, then, largely determines the financial status of the church. Now, let us inquire, what is the economic condition of the middle class? The condition of this class is one of increasing uncertainty. That the whole class of small producers and distributors are gradually being forced to the wall is beyond question. The economic development is rapidly leading to the downfall of the small producer, thus divorcing him from the means of production and transforming him into a propertyless proletarian.

Not only do we read in modern tendencies the downfall of the small industrialist and agriculturist, but also the doom of the small merchant and capitalist. The trust and department store, and even the money king, have come, and come to stay.

Of the 14,000 failures annually, 87 per cent are those whose capital was $5,000 or less, and 9 per cent those whose capital was over $5,000 but less than $20,000. Consequently of the total failures only about 4 per cent have a capital in excess of $20,000. But this is not all. We are told that of the 1,168,343 firms doing business in the United States and Canada in 1897, 223,332 either failed or wound up their affairs after losing their last dollar. At this rate it would take but about five years to wipe out the existence of the whole middle class were there not an equal number standing ready to invest their small savings or inheritance in middle-class enterprise. But the supply is not inexhaustible. The wealth of these aspirants of bankruptcy will soon be absorbed by the plutocracy, and then society will be divided into two classes—a few prodigiously wealthy families on the one side and the great mass of proletarians on the other.

The middle class reads its own doom in this concentration of wealth in the hands of the few. It is nearing the breakers. The field of production is already nearly closed—90 per cent of the capital invested in productive enterprises in 1890 is now in the hands of the trust—and the men of means, having nowhere else to invest their wealth, are now beginning to invade the field of distribution, and the small store will soon be as scarce as the small factory is now. The apparent increase of the commercial middle class from 1880 to 1890 was not due to any enlargement of the field of opportunity. Many were driven into this class by the closing of other avenues, and entered, only to feed the fire of bankruptcy. This very phenomena is a sign of approaching collapse. He who reads the signs of the times well knows that monopoly, in every field, will soon rule the day; it is the logical outcome of the competitive system, the inevitable consummation of the capitalist evolution.

Thus, while many of the middle class have failed, many others who have not yet met their "Waterloo" have had their incomes greatly decreased—the small producer owing to the cheaper production of the trust, the small merchant owing to the department store, the small capitalist owing to the decline in the rate of interest.

The middle class, as a whole, then, are thus not able to contribute to the church as in former years. There is scarcely a minister who could not point to families in his congregation who have thus suffered and been compelled to reduce their contributions. Many churches have been obliged to close as the result of such financial loss and many others are struggling to make ends meet.

The middle class, constituting 39 per cent of the population, own but 24½ per cent of the national wealth, and it is only a question of little time before their wealth will be mostly absorbed by the plutocracy. Already 9 per cent of the population own 71 per cent of the national wealth, and some 64 per cent of this is owned by only 1.41 per cent of the people. The great proletariat class, representing 52 per cent of the population, owns but 4½ per cent of the wealth, but the poverty of this class affects the Protestant church but little, as they are, as a class, outside the organization.

Here note, in passing, that those displaced through concentration and the introduction of new mechanical methods do not find other equally remunerative positions. Some do, but the majority do not, and all are thrown helplessly upon the mercy of others, for those who do not own property in the instruments of production lose their economic freedom and independence. Times of industrial activity give some temporary relief, but the "vicious circle" is sure to run its course and business chaos again results.

The church may thus receive temporary relief through this period of business activity, but the depression that is sure to follow, and which will likely eclipse the crisis of '93, will impair it beyond computation.

It is in the present economic conditions, then, that we find the cause of the financial straits of the church. With the destruction of the middle class, the economic foundation of the Protestant church is being undermined. Those of this class who have not yet fallen in the competitive combat feel the pressure and realize the uncertainty of their position. This is evident if we consider the savings bank deposits, 90 per cent of which has been shown to be supplied by the middle class. The growing deposits of this class in such states as New York and Massachusetts do not evidence its permanent solidity and safety. It rather betrays a sense of insecurity which manifests itself by laying aside something for wife and children in fear of failure, or death under circumstances that would make a settlement of their affairs somewhat uncertain in its results. Many of the middle class who are yet able are laying aside every cent they can spare or are carrying an insurance to guarantee themselves and those dependent upon them against possible want. Struggling under this fear of poverty and want, they limit or completely cut off their contribution to the church, although they have not yet reached the condition which renders the cessation of regular contribution necessary.

Not only is the present system subversive to the financial maintenance of the church, but it is also subversive to its ethical and religious ideals. The church, as we have seen, is affected by its environment, by its economic conditions and relations. These economic relations form the very basis of society, giving to it its own quality and character. If this relation is unrighteous, society will be unrighteous, and consequently unfavorable to the development of true morality and religion. If we will measure the practices of men, the institutions of society, the system of economics, by the life, words and spirit of Christ, we will find that they are incompatible. The demands of our present economic system are incompatible with the demands of the religion of Jesus. We find in this antagonism the real cause of indifference to the claims of the church. This indifference is not due to depraved hearts, but to the struggles and inequalities of our present system of industry—a system which is anti-Christian, which prevents the practice of the social teachings of Jesus.

Jesus teaches that we ought to love our neighbor as ourselves. Is this possible under the present system? To thus love one's neighbor, we must be as anxious to have him secure a good position as we are to get a good position for ourselves. We would not compete with him for trade or employment, and would be as desirous for his welfare as for our own. Is this the spirit of modern society? Is it possible to exercise such a spirit while engaged in the brute struggle of competition? Are we not compelled to compete, to strive, to take advantage of others, to make self the center of thought and action? It is evident we cannot love our neighbor as ourselves when we are compelled to fight with him for our daily bread.

Again, Jesus says: "Take no thought for the morrow." "Lay not up treasures upon earth." Jesus here is endeavoring to eliminate the cause of unrest and anxiety regarding the needed temporal necessities. Is his teaching practicable under the present system? Both those within and without the church are not only obliged to be anxious, but to "hustle" if they procure the needful requisites to maintain life. But were we living in a rightly ordered social and industrial system, there would be no need of fear and worry, anxiety and thought, about the means of livelihood, and no one would care to "lay up treasures upon earth," for society would guarantee that no one willing to work, or incapable of work, would come to want. Surely, any system that produces such unrest and anxiety as the present is not of God. We must either say that Jesus' teachings are false and impracticable, or else that the present system that produces such results is wrong. With the removal of this fear of poverty, time and thought could be devoted to higher things. But today the struggle for meat allows little time for the development of life. Is it any wonder, under such conditions, that men are losing sight of God, the church, and spiritual things? It is a law of nature that we become like that to which we give ourselves; if to God, godlike; if to things, sensual. Men today are compelled to sacrifice themselves to Mammon, and as they cannot worship God and Mammon, it is no wonder that the true worship of God is becoming obsolete. Men who must devote the larger portion of their time to securing the needs of life have no time to develop their higher natures. Right here is the cause of the worldliness and indifference of which we complain. Under a right direction of labor the needs of all could be supplied in two or three hours of pleasant work, thus leaving time for rest, recreation, and the development of one's powers and faculties. Under such an organization and systematization of industry, there would be little need for anxiety and thought for the morrow, or worry as to "what we shall eat or drink, or wherewithal shall we be clothed," for the curse of insecurity and uncertainty of employment would be relegated into oblivion. This insecurity and uncertainty of employment is inherent in capitalism, and renders Jesus' teachings abortive. Such ideals are truly Utopian as long as our present system exists.

Again, Christianity says: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." "Let no man seek his own, but his neighbor's good." "Let nothing be done through strife." But the law of our present system is the law of competition, the law of strife and warfare. Its motto is, "Each man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost." Instead of "bearing one another's burdens," it says, "Look out for number one." Our present competitive system is one of antagonisms, in which the interests of every man are set against the interests of every other man. Under such a system true altruism is impossible. There is scarcely a field today where selfish interests, begotten by a selfish system, do not dominate. Private gain is the cause of selfishness, and so long as men can advance their own interests at the expense of others, just so long the root of the evil will remain untouched. Sermons will not extirpate the evil; it is too deep-seated; it inheres in the system itself. The fact that Christians lament the perfidy, dishonor, and selfishness of men, while holding to a false organization of society, shows the need of enlightenment along this line. We surely ought not to be so foolish as to expect the "law of love" to be practiced under the environment of the "law of strife." Selfishness is only possible when one man can gain at the expense of another. Under a system of co-operation no one could thus gain, for the interests of one would be identical with the interests of all. No one could serve his own interests without serving the interests of others, and, conversely, no one could injure others without injuring himself. The unity and solidarity of mankind can only be realized by this unity and solidarity of human interests. When society is thus organized, that which is advantageous to one would be advantageous to all. Under such a system the evil of selfishness would be plucked up by the roots; both motive and opportunity would be eliminated. Such a system would realize the brotherhood of man in all the relations of life.

Again, Christ says: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." But competition says: "Do others or they will do you"; or, as David Harum expressed it: "Do to the other fellow as he would like to do to you—only do it fast." If men are to succeed, they must resort to the necessary means. Our present system compels a man to seek his own interest by overreaching others. It says to him that he must ride on the backs of others or others will ride on his back. Herbert Spencer informs us that "as the law of the animal world is eat or be eaten, so of the trading community it may be said the motto is, 'Cheat or be cheated.'" The ability to drive a bargain is the ability to make things appear different from what they really are. Men adulterate goods, manufacture shoddy cloth, and practice deception simply because it is to their advantage to do so. This is carried to such an extent today that every man is suspected and his word taken at a discount. We need not expect that these evils will disappear so long as the struggle for life continues. Our present competitive system makes it to man's interest to do these things, and so long as this condition continues we need expect no improvement. Competition is the root of the evil. Socialism will make it for the interest of all to be honest—to do unto others as ye would that they do unto you. This very same self-interest which is now pulling down morals will then build them up. Besides, when a few hours' agreeable labor will secure to all the needs of life, why should any rational being want to cheat or rob? Surely, no one will be tempted to live by crime when he can live easier by honest work. When wealth is no longer a power over men, it will not be dishonestly sought. The motive for excessive accumulation will be gone when society guarantees all against economic want and renders it impossible for men to use their wealth to lord it over others. This end can be accomplished only by decided social changes—nothing less than the collective ownership of the means of production will suffice.

The great mass of men are not bad. If they deviate from the path of rectitude, it is because they are tempted to do so, by our false economic system. The little tricks of trade harden the conscience and make them oblivious to all moral duties. The good resolves are frustrated by the temptation to private gain. Here and there are men who rise above their environment, but we cannot expect general improvement so long as men can advance their interests at the expense of others. The root of the evil is economic, and can only be removed by the substitution of co-operation for competition as the principle of industrial society.

"But," says the objector, "you cannot make men honest by legislation." Very true; we do not expect to directly. What we do expect is to surround men with a suitable environment, congenial to honesty and right-doing. Society should be so reconstructed that if a man is inclined to practice the golden rule, he will not have to practice the rule of gold in order to succeed. If a man were placed in an infectious district and compelled to remain there, he would become sick. What we might expect to do by legislation is not to prohibit his sickness, but to provide for his removal, or the removal of the infectious environment. When we have removed by legislation the cause of the disease, the effect will disappear. So when we remove the infectious environment of competition, its evil results will disappear. We need to establish an environment favorable to the development of moral qualities—one wherein right conduct would be possible. Socialism would remove both incentive and opportunity for the practice of these evils.

I am a believer in personal regeneration, but I want an environment favorable to that end. The truth is, under our present environment, men are unregenerated faster than we can regenerate them. Christianity has been trying for eighteen hundred years to regenerate society by first regenerating men, and today scarcely a principle taught by Jesus is practiced in our industrial realm. This failure ought to teach the church that something has been neglected. This neglect has been a failure to see that the social problem can only have a social solution. There is no individual redemption for a social system. Society is an organism and individuals are members of the social body and can only be healthy in a healthy state of the whole body. The individual is governed by the collectivity, its laws and customs, whether he will or no. No greater mistake could be made than to treat the social problem as a mere matter of individual

NO UNION FOR WAR

Editor of the Herald: We do not want a union of forces to make war, but to promulgate Socialism. If the latter can be accomplished, there is none to question its desirability. But a union of the S. D. P. with the "kangaroos" to make war against the "skunks"—never.

Let the S. L. P. folk who find no fault with the platform or tactics of the De Leonites go where they belong. Let the Socialists who find no fault with the S. D. P. platform, tactics and democratic spirit come where they belong. The S. D. P. should move on in its good work, holding to its platform and its methods, and thus avoid strife and confusion within its own ranks.

A SIMILAR CASE.

Editor of the Herald: The farmers have a saying, "Never plant a young tree on the spot where a tree has died." The death of the first tree proves that there is something wrong with the soil, or the drainage, or that the site is too much exposed to the wind and weather, or that there is some other unknown cause why a tree could not flourish in that particular place.

We are planting the young Social Democratic party in the soil of America, and we should choose for it the best possible conditions. Our young party had a predecessor, which, although scarcely dead, still shows very little promise of any future growth. There must have been some radical mistake in regard to the S. L. P.; otherwise, under the long and earnest labors of its devoted supporters, it would have taken deep root in American soil many years ago, and long ere this it would have produced good and abundant fruit.

We are wishing and working for Socialist unity, but let us be wise in every move we make. Our young party is flourishing "like a green bay tree," and spreading out its branches in every direction. Already it has borne a little fruit in Massachusetts, and gives promise of a thousandfold more. Why should we change its conditions, or name, or spirit? Above all, why should we transplant it to "the spot where a tree has died?"

DEBS ON UNITY

Editor of the Herald: For some time I have been asked to declare myself through the Herald in reference to the proposed union between the anti-De Leon element of the S. L. P. and our party. I have delayed doing so until I had opportunity to examine the situation in various parts of the country.

First, let me say that while no one can be more desirous for a united party of Socialists than I, it is my settled conviction that the hour for such a consummation has not yet arrived.

There are hundreds of S. L. P. comrades of the faction named whom I have met and love and honor, and would be proud to greet as party comrades; but there is also an element in that faction, by no means insignificant in proportion to the whole, with whom we can have no affiliation without inviting disruption. A union with this element will simply not unite, or, if it does, it can result only in dissension, and, sooner or later, a split, and we have had quite enough experience along that line.

Barring such papers as the Cleveland Citizen and the Class Struggle, I am not satisfied with the tone or temper of the press of the anti-De Leon S. L. P. and particularly the official organ, the People, which continues to retail malicious libels respecting our party and our comrades.

The People knows that in the past our party, from its very inception, has been foully maligned and our comrades vilely slandered by the promoters of the party of which, since its so-called expurgation, it is now the official organ. Has it ever uttered one word to atone for such shocking indecency or to make restitution for the outrages intended, if not committed? If it has done itself such a manifestly plain duty in its regenerated capacity, it has not come to my notice. Could honorable men have done less? For my own part, I have always ignored these petty detractors, and I do not want any apology now or at any time, but were I in the attitude the People maintains to the Social Democratic party, I know what the plain and unmistakable dictates of conscience must prompt me to say and do in mitigation of wrongs with which I had been at least identified in perpetrating.

When the People, as the official organ of the party, honestly and courageously clears its skirts, then we can and will accept its professions that it is in favor of a united party.

Not only this, but the People continues to be the vehicle of libel and detraction of our comrades. In a recent issue it permits us to be charged with yet having "cut loose from the Bry-anties," and our officers, especially myself, with drawing exorbitant salaries for party service. The People knows, or can know if it wishes, that these statements and their like are bald-faced lies, and yet it continues to inculcate its readers with their poison. I care nothing about these lies, nor their craven authors, but I want no affiliation with such serpents of defamation.

As a matter of fact, I have never drawn a dollar of salary in any capacity in the Social Democracy or the Social Democratic party. During the year I served as chairman of the national executive board of the Social Democracy and gave the party my whole time, I worked without a cent of compensation from the party, and during the past eighteen months that I have served on the executive board and as general organizer for the Social Democratic party I have never been paid a cent, and I have met all my official expenses from my private means, and the same is true of every other member of the executive board. We are not making this statement by way of explanation, or to elicit credit, for none is due, but to emphasize the conviction that if the People is sincere in its professions, it will at least stop circulating lies and libels about those with whom it seeks affiliation.

The anti-De Leon party has not yet had its last purging. They hated De Leon, not because of his principles or lack of principles, but because he was their master at their own game. I am confident that our members stand for a united party and also that they will not rush rashly forward to what seems to be such a party, to find themselves the victims of deception. We are not egotistical when we say there will soon be a united party, and that without taking any chances. The Social Democratic party has proved its right to live. It has emerged unscathed from all the assaults that have been made upon it, and is moving majestically to the front. No odium attaches to its name and no stain is upon its honor. The election of 1900 will indicate its standing and establish its supremacy.

A LESSON FROM PAST ERRORS

Editor of the Herald: As a union of Socialist forces is at present strongly favored by S. D. P. and S. L. P. (anti-De Leon) parties, it will be well to consider, before either of the two parties gives instructions to its delegates, the following facts:

The S. D. P. developed from a vague and undefined Socialist party into a clear-cut, uncompromising, class-conscious, scientific, Socialist party, based upon international Socialism and the brotherhood of man. It has developed to this height of thought and feeling because it was based from start to its present standing upon democracy. This young Socialist party has given encouragement to its officers, but in trying times has acted against their will; sections of it have violated the spirit of its constitution, and in turn were held down by the officers who represent them to the letter of the constitution and its spirit.

This party is now on the verge of uniting in some shape and manner with a faction of an older Socialist party—the S. L. P. The S. L. P. was composed in earliest stages, previous to and long after the Henry George campaign, of emigrated German Socialists, who, when finding some sign of the spirit of Socialism in the heart of an English-speaking subject, would cheer to the echo and offer homage, and trust to defy the constitution of the party and their own principles. This sad experience they have gone through more than once, and they are to this very day not sure of repeating the error. They have lacked the democratic spirit of Socialism, though they be scientific in their criticism of capitalism and its ultimate aim. No one desires to see a union of principled forces more than the writer of this letter, but a warning to the members of both parties is timely. The S. D. P. should take a lesson out of past errors in both parties; therefore a union can be desirable only if the members of the S. L. P. (anti-De Leon) want the same, thus demonstrating that the S. D. P. is a full-fledged Socialist party. The name of the S. D. P. throughout the United States is unchallenged, except by capitalist foes; the S. L. P. is disrupted and disbanded, and even if the members in some localities will be subjected to severe trials, collecting signatures to petitions and the like, they should never forget that an experiment, however small, will cost some sacrifice or penalty.

Socialists on Beacon Hill

Representative James F. Carey is on the committee on accounts in the Massachusetts legislature, also the committee on libraries.

Representative F. O. MacCartney is a member of the committee on elections.

One of Carey's first acts in the legislature was to introduce a bill providing that persons employed by corporations as agents or lobbyists shall wear a badge. He has a few more "up his sleeve."

BOOK NOTICES

"Elementary Principles of Economics," by Charles H. Chase, is the title of a 398-page, cloth-bound book, in which the author hopes that it (the book) will prove "the beginning of the science of political economy."

Outside of that portion of the book treating of the money question, the author shows very little familiarity with the subject under consideration. His definitions and conceptions, notably between value and worth, are vague and indefinite. He does not thoroughly understand even the bourgeois economists, for whom he has "great respect." No man is justified in placing before the public a work on political economy until he has to some extent familiarized himself with the best literature on that subject.

The author neither understands Socialism nor anarchism. For instance, he quotes Proudhon as supporting an idea that "all men should work according to their ability and receive according to their needs," which is emphatically repudiated and denounced by Proudhon. He does not seem to understand what Proudhon meant by the term "property." It is as though I should write a work on physiology, not knowing the difference between a digit and a kidney. It might be original without even the quality of being amusing.

"The Rights of Women and the Sexual Relations" is the title of a 385-page pamphlet published by Charles H. Kerr & Co. Price, 50 cents. Authors, Karl Heinzen and Louise Meyer.

This work reviews the past social inferiority of woman and her present subservient position compared with men, calling little attention, however, to the cause—i. e., her economic dependence. It attacks and shows the base morality manifest in soldier worship, and the impure effect of militarism, and especially garrisons, on women. It analyzes the cause of jealousies, artificial fineries and insincere attachments among women. The obsequious gallantry of pretentious courtiers, those of much profusion and little actual respect, the so-called chivalry of old, is laid bare in all its hideousness. The last portions of the work present the cause of the suffragists, closing with a lengthy account of the convention of the German women in Frauen-stad. I do not agree with Heinzen on several propositions (perhaps minor), but limited space will not permit their consideration.

"Imperialism and Liberty," by Morrison I. Swift. The Ronbroke Press, Los Angeles, Cal. 500 pp. Cloth.

This work is filled with vituperation and the denunciation of imperialists. The author deplores the departing from the time-honored principles of inalienable rights, and pictures glowingly the horrible social effect of expansion. It is strange that a man with so much talent should accept the capitalist basis and theory of society and then rise in holy wrath against this logical and inevitable development of capitalism.

Suppose, in addressing the laborers in the Illinois Steel works, we should tell them that the steel rails which they forge and make are to be transported and used for steel highways across Asia or South America, and that only by developing foreign resources can the demand for these rails continue, and that if imperialism ceases there will be no market for these rails, and employment will therefore cease, what would be the reply of the laborer to your fine-spun moralizing? He would say, "True, some time injure me and my family, but between all the murdering and slaughter of Filipinos and the destruction of my home, those dependent upon me, and myself, I must of necessity decide in favor of my own existence, the theory of self-preservation being the first law of nature." He can see the results and can feel them; he can see the rails and knows that they are shipped to foreign markets; that is a condition that is open and clear, and you cannot reply to it by any capitalistic juggling of adjectives.

The Socialist who contends for the economic system where the purchasing power of the people is as great in (wear and tear excepted) value as the wealth they produce alone logically replies to the exploiting expansionists.

Seymour Stedman.

OFFICIAL CALL

Annual Convention of the Social Democratic Party, March 6, 1900

In accordance with the action of the members, in determining the time and place for the national convention of the Social Democratic party in 1900, the National Executive Board of said party directs that said national convention be held at the city of Indianapolis, in the state of Indiana, for the purpose of nominating candidates for president and vice-president of the United States, to be voted for at the presidential election on Tuesday, Nov. 6, 1900, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it, and that said convention shall assemble at 10 o'clock in the forenoon on Tuesday, the 6th day of March, 1900.

The representation at said convention will be by delegates, chosen in accordance with the referendum vote of the members and reported in this number of The Herald, as follows:

First—Each branch shall be entitled to as many representatives as the individual members thereof in good standing may select for that purpose; provided, that each representative shall be entitled to one (1) vote for each member whose signature is attached to his credential; and provided further, that no member shall have his signature attached to more than one credential.

Second—Branches not sending their own representatives may select those of other branches of the same state to represent them; provided, that in each such case the representative shall hold the proper credential with the signatures of members attached as herein provided.

Third—No member shall be qualified to serve as representative or entitled to representation who has not been a member of the party at least thirty (30) days prior to the opening day of the convention.

Fourth—All signatures of members attached to credentials shall be certified to by the chairman or secretary of their respective branches.

Fifth—The national secretary shall furnish each branch with a sufficient number of blank credentials for the purpose herein specified.

With the hope that the deliberations and action of this convention, an event of historic importance in the development of Socialism in the United States, may redound to the credit of the delegates and the glory of our cause, fraternally,
Jesse Cox, Chairman.
Seymour Stedman, Secretary.

DUES AND REPRESENTATION

We feel called upon to give notice betimes that only branches in good standing will be entitled to representation at the approaching national convention, and that only members in good standing will be entitled to sign the credentials of delegates.

The convention meets at Indianapolis, Ind., on Tuesday, March 6, 1900, and to be entitled to representation the dues of a branch must be paid in full to and including the quarter ending March 31; and the same is true of individual members. No member is qualified to sign the credentials of a delegate unless his dues are paid during the same period. This is the rule agreed to by the party, and in the examination of credentials it will be the duty of the committee to see that it is enforced and that the credential of any branch not in good standing be rejected and the name of any member not in good standing be stricken from the credential.

It has also been provided that no branch or member shall be entitled to representation unless admitted at least thirty days prior to the opening of the convention. The opening day being March 6, the last day of grace is the 4th day of February. Branches instituted and members admitted after this date will not be entitled to representation. This should be clearly understood that there may be no unnecessary expense incurred in sending delegates not entitled to seats.

A large number of points declare that they are "about ready to organize," and a great number of persons say they are about ready to join. If they would be represented in the most historic convention ever held in the United States they should bear the 4th day of February in mind and come in before that date.

The swashbuckler-known as the emperor of Germany has been talking again. This time, in direct opposition to notorious facts, he says that the phenomena of Social Democracy are transitory and will soon pass away. He sees in Socialism the only menace to a capitalistic state upheld by militarism, the one element that more than all else disturbs his kingly slumber. Unfortunately for this ruler of men, who is on such intimate terms with the King of Kings, the conservative organs of the empire distinctly repudiate his assertion. The Kreuz Zeitung says: "We cannot deny that the emperor's words conflict with his former utterances, and we must admit that further legislative action against the Socialists is inexpedient, since it would result in a renewed defeat of the government."

CHURCH FROM ECONOMIC STANDPOINT

salvation; the social problem can only have a social solution for each individual. Civilization must be born again before the individual can see the kingdom of God. Says Rev. George Herron: "The first step in the spiritual salvation of the present-day individual is the deliverance of the people of Christendom from economic servitude. This is the supreme evangelistic call, which no pious subterfuge proposing to 'set men's hearts right' can any longer evade. It is the commanding spiritual task, which will not move aside for any theological or commercial bluff."

The fact is the teachings of Christ are inapplicable to our present system, and a man resolving to follow his precepts finds, when he is plunged into the corrupt competitive environment, that he is soon polluted. As well might one expect to live in a malarial swamp and keep healthy as to live in our competitive environment and not be more or less contaminated. A man cannot carry out the Sermon on the Mount without facing the almost certain prospect of ruining his business.

There are thousands of men today who stand aloof from the church simply because they see the incompatibility between the demands of Christianity and the demands of our industrial system. They are too honest to play the hypocrite when they know that in their business they are compelled, if successful, to live in constant violation of Christ's teachings. That this is the general feeling may be seen from such common statements as "Business and religion don't jibe." Mr. Havemeyer when before the industrial commission said in response to a question on ethics of life: "I don't care two cents for your ethics; I know nothing about them. I am talking about business." Surely, a house divided against itself cannot stand. Those who count themselves Christians must cease to uphold a system which is in antithesis to the teachings of Christ. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.

It is surely time the ministry aroused and faced the industrial problems of the day. Nothing so hinders the work in which they are engaged as this Mammonistic competitive system. They have wasted time enough in endeavoring to harmonize the teachings of Christ with this unjust social order. Their efforts at exhorting and commanding their listeners to practice the precepts which they themselves do not follow, and which they know their hearers will not follow, are amusing, were they not so serious.

This is a deplorable condition and there is need that something be done, but no mere palliative will suffice. The evil is inherent in the present system. The competitive order breeds poverty, begets crime, fosters selfishness, greed and inhumanity. The principles of the present order are utterly un-Christian. The whole system is based upon exploitation. The talk of Christianizing such an order is futile; it contains in itself a contradiction. Wage slavery can no more be Christianized than could chattel slavery. With each new age comes a new hindrance to the gospel. The great hindrance today is this industrial system. Here is the obstacle to progress, the menace to the church, the obstruction to the spread of the kingdom of heaven here on earth. Says Rev. Mr. Herron: "The individual religious development will necessarily be arrested henceforth until we have a religious social development. Associated men, though they may be individually converted to a faith in Christ, yet now economically act, and are socially related to each other, under the dominion of principles and customs that are largely a contradiction of all that Jesus taught and practiced. There must be given to men, and society must accept, a wholly new order of human relations before even the individual may see fully the kingdom of God"—social justice.

Much more might be said, but this is sufficient to indicate the hindrance to the church's progress. As a denomination we have done something, but our efforts have not met with the success we had hoped. Many are filled with disappointment, while others, of an optimistic nature, are whistling to keep up courage and resolving, in "meetings assembled," to push onward the work. Still, after all our determination, failure often meets failure, and we return sore at heart and distressed. But in view of the obstacles we encounter we have done fairly well. We cannot expect to make great progress; as a matter of fact, no church will have any real "forward movement" so long as the present system exists. But of the three forms of social injustice—chattel slavery, feudal slavery, and wage slavery—the last will be of the shortest duration. In fact, there is every indication that capitalism has nearly run its course.

The duty of the church is to aid in bringing in a more righteous economic order. We cannot afford to be alienated before this tragedy in which God's humanity is being crushed by Mammon. There is a future for the church if it is wise enough to seize the opportunity. But it stands in such a relation to the existing order, and is so dependent upon the money of the ruling class that she dare not point out the political and economic crimes which inhere in our present system of industry, then the scepter of redemption will pass from it, and a new redemptive organ will arise.

The idea of Jesus is being given an economic interpretation. It is becoming clear that if his idea is ever realized, this competitive system must be replaced by a system of industrial brotherhood—the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution. Not until we have thus laid the economic foundation for the realization of the kingdom of heaven (social justice) can the church ever hope to go forward to victory.

P. S.—The above article was sent to the Universalist Leader, the denominational paper of the Universalist church. After waiting some four weeks for the article to be published, the author wrote asking them if they did not intend to publish the article to please return it. It was then returned with the excuse: "Your article is too long for us to print." Comment is unnecessary.

It would seem that the church in its various branches and the religious press as a whole are thoroughly subservient to wealth; that the church has made an unholy alliance with the powers of this world, and that her ministers are completely cowed by capital and power.

The church—negatively, at least, if not positively—upholds this system of social injustice and exploitation. Only here and there do we find a minister who has the courage to come out and denounce the evils of this pernicious system, or a paper, especially religious, that dare print an article in criticism of the same. As a rule, we find them indifferent, if not openly defending the present constitution of society. The church has become largely a social club, and so does not care to have social distinctions abolished.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness for every man, woman and child are conditioned upon equal political and economic rights.

The present ownership of the means of production and distribution of wealth has caused society to split into two distinct classes, with conflicting interests, the small possessing class of capitalists or exploiters of the labor force of others, and the ever-increasing large dispossessed class of wage-workers, who are deprived of the socially-due share of their product.

That capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people.

That the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system, will compel the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare, or result in the destruction of civilization.

That the trade union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its economic production and distribution, and that both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system of production and distribution.

Therefore, the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be the establishment of a system of co-operative production and distribution through the restoration to the people of all the means of production and distribution, to be administered by organized society in the interest of the whole people, and the complete emancipation of society from the domination of capitalism.

The wage-workers and all those in sympathy with their historical mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist organizations, and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic Party will be tantamount to the abolition of capitalism and of all class rule. The solidarity of labor connecting us with millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in this direction, we make the following demands:

1. Revision of our antiquated Federal Constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to full and complete control of government by all the people, irrespective of sex.

2. The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

3. The public ownership of all means of transportation, telegraph, telephone, all means of transportation, communication, water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

4. The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal and all other mines; also of all oil and gas wells.

5. Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of work.

6. The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of a large number of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

7. All useful inventions to be free to all, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

8. Labor legislation to be made national, instead of local, and international where possible.

9. National insurance for the aged, the sick, against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

10. Equal civil and political rights for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

11. The adoption of the initiative and referendum, and the right of recall of representatives.

12. Abolition of war as far as the United States are concerned and the introduction of international arbitration instead.

CALL TO ACTION

ORGANIZE FOR 1900

There are few communities in this country today without one or a dozen Socialists who are not affiliated with a Socialist organization. At the last State election in Missouri votes were cast for the candidates of the Social Democratic Party in nearly every county in the State.

In almost every community a thoroughly wide-awake and earnest Socialist, with little exertion, could in one week effect the organization of a Branch of the Social Democratic Party.

What they CAN DO
The Declaration of Principles and Political Demands of this party will be found in this paper; read it and you will see that the party is a straight, uncompromising Socialist organization, recognized as such in the International movement for Socialism.

UNCOMPROMISING SOCIALIST PARTY
The triumph of the Socialist cause, which is the cause of the world democracy, requires organization, and without it nothing can be accomplished; this party is controlled by no individual nor by any set of individuals short of its entire membership.

DEMOCRATIC ORGANIZATION
The year 1900 will be one of great and far-reaching importance to the people and especially to the intelligent, wealth-producing people of the United States; the latter have surely by this time begun to see the futility of any longer giving support to capitalistic parties.

THIS YEAR'S CAMPAIGN
Socialists should have as their main object in 1900 the polling of every vote possible for straight and uncompromising Socialism, and to do this the co-operation of every unattached Socialist in the work of organization, where he lives, is necessary.

ORGANIZE WHERE YOU LIVE
The Social Democratic Party is now organized in more than half the States; it consists of Local Branches, State Unions and a National Council. A Local Branch may be organized with five members.

HOW ORGANIZED
It will nominate candidates for President and Vice-President next March.

Full instructions and all necessary supplies for organizing Local Branches may be obtained from the National Secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington St., Chicago, Illinois.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE OF BRIGHT SAYINGS

Hope for Harvard.

The formation of a Socialist club in Harvard is one of the most promising signs of the time. Recently, it seems, a number of the students who are imbued with Socialistic sympathies decided to form a social reform club. Its purpose is to study social conditions and to find the cause and cure of social evils. Its effect will be to form a nucleus of Socialist sentiment in the college, whose influences may be very far-reaching.

It is encouraging, indeed, to see this fountain of knowledge springing up in the oasis of Harvard's intellectual ignorance. Ordinarily we do not expect to find modern students who know anything—except about a football punt or a rowing skiff. We have learned to consider, and not without good cause, that the average student develops his calves at the expense of his brains.

This social club, therefore, disproves the impression that in these centers of learning the muscle had crowded out the mind, and that dead languages were universally considered to be of greater importance than living issues. There is still hope for Harvard.

Parrotic Propagandists.

While in a barber shop yesterday, I was sounding the barber on his social views, and on the views of the public concerning Socialism.

He said: "There was one of those fellows in here an hour ago, talking about Socialism."

"What did you think about it?" "Oh," he replied, "I think some things he said were all right. He went pretty deep into the subject. Trouble was, he went into it so deep I couldn't follow him at all."

Herein lies the secret of our frequent failure in personal propaganda work. We are so profoundly wise that our auditors remain profoundly ignorant. We try to crowd six-inch ideas into two-inch minds. We try to teach the advanced principles of economics to kindergarten students of reform.

There was once an old Scotchman who said he only knew two tunes. One was "Old Hundred" and the other wasn't. And so there are many Socialists who only know two words. One is "proletariat" and the other isn't. Let us cease repeating, parrot-like, a few pet phrases, and express, in clear and common English, the plain principles of Socialism.

The New Brotherhood.

On the last Saturday of the old year a number of us were spending the evening at Dr. Konikow's, in Boston. Several comrades from New York and Newark were present, on their way to attend Mayor Chase's inaugural. During the evening Leonard D. Abbott of New York related the following charming incident, illustrative of Socialist comradeship:

Not long ago he received a communication from a Jewish Socialist. Not being able to interpret it himself, he carried it into a part of the Literary Digest publishing rooms, where a number of Jewish compositors were at work. Handing it to one of them, he asked him to read it. The printer took it and complied with the request. He commenced: "Dear comrade," and then, while his face lighted up in a smile, he exclaimed, "Oh, you're a Socialist?" "Yes," replied Abbott. "Are you?" A glad affirmation and a hearty handshake changed the strangers into comrades. And yet folks say we Socialists are irreligious! I tell you, comrades, if there is any religion worth having, it is found in that Socialist spirit that makes strangers kin and brothers of us all.

Who's Got the Button?

At St. Helen's a mechanical device has been introduced into the glass factories that displaces all the blowers. What hitherto has been done by the human mouth will be done hereafter by a mechanical process. As a result, the workers will be given ample time to "blow" about the beauties of a social system that makes a mechanical blessing into a human curse.

This is but one of a myriad cases where machines are replacing men, and where steel fingers are taking the places of human hands. There is not a department of industry in which this tendency is not seen and felt.

Only a fool would claim that human invention in itself is wrong or injurious. The real source of the trouble, as any sane person can see, lies in the misapplication of these new powers and processes. Instead of being used to lighten labor and benefit all, they are used instead to increase profits and benefit a few.

Pretty soon, in the evolution of machinery, all toil will be reduced to the pressing of a button. Then, methinks, capital and labor will have a merry game of "Who's got the button?" Don't you think you'd better learn how to play it now?

The Sanity of Socialism.

Sometimes when I think of social conditions as they exist today, and of the countless incongruities and absurdities that are everywhere apparent, I cannot but fancy that this world is the lunatic asylum of the universe, and that all the fools in creation have been dumped on this planet.

The system of planless production, of competitive waste, of nightmarish advertising, of misapplied forces, of class conflict, seems one that could only be planned by idiots and perpetuated by fools.

And when I think of the sane and sensible propositions of Socialism, and see how they are ridiculed and rejected by the mass, the impression of prevalent idiocy is confirmed.

All that is good and workable in our social life is based on Socialistic principles. Our schools, parks, fire departments, postoffice, and all the public utilities that are of most service and give best satisfaction are already socialized.

When we become sane, as a people, we shall recognize the fact that the Socialist principle of public ownership is the one, and the only one, on which modern society can exist at all.

A Windstorm.

Last night I attended a big pro-Boer meeting in Faneuil hall, in Boston. The old "cradle of liberty" was jammed full of struggling and uproarious humanity. From the superabundant quantity of my native brogue that was in evidence, it might literally have been called a Patriot-ic meeting.

Every expression of hatred for the British bully, and of sympathy for the Boer patriot, was cheered to the echo. If every word had been a bullet, then the flow of eloquence would have proven as deadly a stream to the British as the Tugela river.

It was a sad waste of wind. Apart from its littleness of influence upon the conflict in South Africa, the energy exerted could have been used to better purpose.

As a matter of fact, the Boer is just as oppressed as the Boers. The latter are defending their gold mines; the former is defending his very life from the greed of capitalists at home. When we have fought our foes at home, we may perhaps have time to indulge in a little denunciation of foreign tyrants.

Tolstoi on Labor and Property

A man is not brought into the world for some one to work for him, but to work himself for other men.

The principal cause of pauperism is riches. In a society where, under any form, exploitation and violence exist, riches cannot represent labor. In the existing society it rarely happens that riches is the product of the labor of its possessor. It represents almost entirely the past and present labor of other men—the real workers. Riches is but a conventional sign which gives the right and the means to profit by the work of others. The domination of one man over many is simply owing to the fact that the workers do not receive the full product of their labor.

For what reason are some deprived of the use of the land and the instruments of production, which land and instruments are in the possession of others, and for what reason are those who work on the land deprived of the instruments of production?

The man who considers labor as the goal, the joy, of his life, should not seek to deprive others of the fruits of their labor.

He should not seek to acquire useless things which we call property. Property signifies something which has been given to, or acquired by, and which belongs exclusively to the individual, with which he can do just as he pleases, and of which he cannot be deprived, and which remains with him to the end of his life, and the value of which he must continually seek to increase.—Tolstoi, translated by P. P. Ayer.

The Boston Herald noted the inauguration of two Social Democratic mayors in Massachusetts as follows: "The inaugural addresses of the two Socialist mayors appear to have attracted more attention in the newspapers throughout the country than the utterances of all the other mayors put together. The former get several columns of space, with their pictures thrown in, while the latter are all boiled down together into a stickful or two. Such is the fate of conservatism, as compared with the other extremity."

Workingmen should give their support to the Social Democratic party, because it stands uncompromisingly for the interests of the working class.

THE RANK AND FILE

By Arthur R. Andre

Old Bob Clayton held a monopoly of repairing shoes in the sleepy little town of Santa Juanita, state of California.

Nobody could tell when the old man's store became the Socialist headquarters of the little town. There is a revolutionary inspiration in the pungent odor of new leather, and the "boys," who came to the store to kill time, had talked themselves into Socialism so long ago that the inhabitants of the place evinced little surprise when discussions of the co-operative commonwealth and other kindred subjects rose above the sound of old Bob's hammer and lapstone. The customers did not complain, either, when they came for their shoes; on the contrary, they rather liked it, and so long as good nature and an easy toleration of each other's peculiarities marked the proceedings the old shoemaker was perfectly happy.

But latterly a new and ugly spirit was creeping into the discussions of the little group. Johnson and Brown, the inseparable "rank and file" (they had earned that sobriquet by being silent on all occasions), were the first to notice the change. They did not like it, and were provoked almost to the point of utterance. Bob, the old shoemaker, who had been looked up to with great respect as a high authority on all things Socialistic, was thoroughly miserable. He was regarded with suspicion as a despicable Utopian. O'Hara, the grocer, had been the first to observe Bob's treasonable fall from grace, and O'Hara was becoming more aggressively clear-cut and class-conscious with each new number of his "official organ." So there could be no doubt about the truth of his charges. A first-class feud was also growing up between Hartley, the baker, and Merton, the banker's clerk. Hartley was nothing if not a materialist, and he was quite sure that religion was the great stumbling block to Socialism. He repeated often and so often being a Christian, often and so often, quietly dropped out.

Things gradually went from bad to worse until, from being the rendezvous of the wits of the town, the shoe store became first an armed camp and at last was completely deserted. The Rank and File held the fort to the last, in gloomy silence, but since there was no one to listen to any longer, they tilted their chairs back and indulged in reminiscences of the good old times when any one could call himself a Socialist without being expected to repeat a catechism as long as the forty-nine articles.

Mary Ellen Hartley, the baker's daughter, was home again. She made a pretty picture as she came down the main street of the quiet little town, dispensing smiles and greetings, right and left, with a reckless prodigality, to her numerous friends and admirers. Bustling into the old man's shoe store like a whirlwind, with a "Hello, Bob! Merry Christmas! Don't get up!" she drew a chair up to the side of his bench, seized his hand in both her own and inquired about his health with almost maternal solicitude. Having satisfied herself on this point—for Bob did not take as good care of himse as he should, and needed watching—she then narrated her achievements and experiences in the big city whither she had gone to "be" something (as she called it), and the shoemaker listened with a glow of mingled pleasure and pride on his old face.

And why should he not be proud of Mary Ellen? Did he not always come to him with her childish joys and troubles? Was it not at his knee that she had learned the lessons that are not to be found in books, and when she had grown up and one away to the city, and the neighbors shook their heads doubtfully, did not Bob expressed confidence in Mary Ellen to everybody? Now, so quickly the time had flown! She had come back, triumphant, famous, and a real doctor to boot. Why should Bob be proud of Mary Ellen?

After having satiated the old man's curiosity, she began ply him with questions about San Juanita and the "boys." She soon noticed, however, that he was holding something back from her, evidently wishing to spoil her home-coming with bad news, but a few well-directed quons brought out the whole story of dissolution of the club.

Johnson and Brown the "Rank and File," now, alas! completely demoralized, came aimlessly uttering in an hour later to find Mary Ellen in deep consultation with the shoemaker. They tried to escape but were discovered and promptly interrogated as to the cause of hostilities. The "Rank and File" looked blankly at each other for inspiration, till Johnson finally, in sheer desperation, mustered up courage enough to remark, gallantly, albeit somewhat disjunctedly, that it was because Mary Ellen had deserted them. Brown indorsed this immediately, but they were both brought up short with "Rubbish!" and another volley of questions. Mary Ellen, however, could get nothing out of the "Rank and File," except that probably the papers were the cause of the trouble. They stuck to this point so persistently that finally she gathered up a pile of back numbers of official and unofficial organs and took them home to read.

No one knew how she managed it, but when New Year's eve came around every member of the club was in his place around the table at the Hartley cottage, and Mary Ellen resplendent in a new gown, was such a perfect hostess that she soon dissipated the frost with which the "boys" had come together for the first time after their recent estrangement. O'Hara, who had been purposely seated next to old Bob, was perceptibly cool for some time, but he melted at the second helping of turkey, and completely forgot his "official organ" while he discussed the local gossip with the old shoemaker.

The baker, on the other side of the table, was tempted to air his materialistic views at Merton's expense, but a warning "Dad!" from Mary Ellen, "Don't forget—to pass Mr. Merton the cranberry sauce!" made him look quite ashamed for some reason. However, he quickly rallied and told his best story, just as he used to do "before the war," as Bob called the "late unpleasantness."

The "Rank and File" were so enraptured at the trend of affairs that they forgot to be bashful, and applauded the baker's story with an enthusiasm born, probably, of experience. They had certainly heard it often enough to know its good points. Their mirth was infectious and pretty soon every one was laughing and talking at once.

The table having been cleared, Mary Ellen rose to her feet and called the assemblage to order. It was conceded that she could rattle off a speech with as much grace as any of the "rank and file" could. She looked fixedly at O'Hara, and he bowed a ready acquiescence. He was willing to repudiate his "official organ" on the spot. "You don't know how it pains me to come back to Santa Juanita to find my old comrades divided. [The baker and clerk looked decidedly uncomfortable.] I am not going to blame any one. Your zeal for our noble cause has outrun your discretion—that is all. You can't make all Socialists think alike on all subjects. You have tried it and you have failed. Now try the other method and tolerate each other's differences of opinion."

"Mr. Merton, your insistence on a high ethical standard to our movement does you credit. [Her father's materialistic brows contracted.] It was certainly needed here when I came home. [The brows smoothed out again.] Mr. O'Hara, your clear insight into the class struggle is certainly commendable; but remember you will find Socialists of other schools of thought shoulder to shoulder with you in the hour of victory; and, comrades all, if you would escape a repetition of recent misfortunes, never forget that the spirit of toleration is the grandest product of the century now drawing to its close." [Enthusiastic applause.]

The "Rank and File" were evidently in a state of volcanic eruption. Old Bob said afterward that it was Mary Ellen's work, but that will never be known. Johnson told Brown confidentially afterward that it was a mystery how he ever managed to do it, but at any rate he rose in great trepidation and moved that they celebrate the new year by sending for a charter from the Social Democratic party—the party that stood for the sentiments so ably expressed by our worthy comrade, Miss Mary Ellen Hartley, and of which member.

"The longest speech of my life," he breathlessly whispered to Brown, as the latter hastily seconded the motion.

There was not a dissenting vote when the motion was put, and after Mary Ellen had been gallantly escorted to the door by old Bob, and the wine was brought out, "The New Woman," "The New Branch," and so many other things were toasted that when the meeting adjourned rumor has it that Merton and O'Hara went home arm in arm, mutually agreed that the new branch must maintain a high moral standard and be strictly class-conscious.

MUSINGS IN MY LEISURE HOUR

By M. Winchovsky

Here, young folks, is something which Capt. Cuttle would have advised you to "overhaul and make a note on." Speaking at the Hanover conference of the German Social Democracy, on the questions raised by Bernstein, Aug. Bebel, on Oct. 10, 1899, said:

"Holding judgment over heretics would presuppose that we have dogmas. But if ever a party was free from them, it is the Social Democratic party, and if anybody ever resolutely opposed dogmatic teachings, then Marx and Engels did. Having no dogmas, we, as a consequence, cannot have any trials for heresy. A party, moreover, among whose foremost demands on the present state is the removal of all limitations to the free expression of opinion, would belie its own principles if it would deny to its own members that which it claims at the hands of existing society. The right of free criticism is something beyond questioning. Criticism is, of course, always unpleasant, because neither individuals nor parties ever change opinions over night. The freedom of criticism is our life principle; it is the very air which we live on."

The crowned swashbuckler who answers to the title, name and number of Emperor William II. is of the opinion that the Social Democracy aforesaid is on the wane. Some fifty years ago Johann Jacoby, who subsequently became a Socialist at the age of 70, told one of William's ancestors to his face that it was always the misfortune of kings that they would not hear the truth. It would seem that they cannot see it either.

By the way, those words of the great Jacoby are engraved on his tombstone. He is buried in Koenigsberg-Prussia, and in the hearts of thousands of Socialists.

On my way home from Philadelphia, where I inflicted a lecture on a patient audience, I made up my profit and loss account.

Gained—Five members for the local branch. Lost—One Sunday's rest, an umbrella and a front tooth. Considering that the new recruits were of the right stuff, while the tooth was a decayed one, the umbrella a wreck of its former self, and the day's rest of a somewhat doubtful quality, I should have very little to grumble at. The trouble is that the new members were acquired not by my eloquence, but by a promise, duly fulfilled, to give them a reading. Such is life in the recruiting business.

John Swinton writes for the New York World. Here is the old fable of the gem in the dust bin adequately illustrated. We can all admire the gem all the same, even those of us who may not find its glittering exactly to their taste. And how young the old man is!

Of course unity obtained at the expense of tolerance and freedom would be an undesirable bargain, but the thing can be discussed without assuming that we are facing or proposing an unconditional surrender. What we ought to be able to bring about is that much of harmony which would suffice to obviate the disgraceful spectacle of a three-cornered fight among Socialists next fall. Our working together would be sure to have amalgamation follow in its wake, if it could not be preceded by it.

The Molineux poison case has already taken up over fifty days. The question before the jury is: Has he or has he not intended to kill Harry Cornish? A miscarriage of justice would result in the destruction of one innocent man, and we are laudably cautious. Of course, homicide on a large scale is quite a different thing, as Mark Hanna and Joe Chamberlain will conclusively prove to you, should they ever be pleased to vouchsafe an explanation.

When the Reveille of Butte, Mont., says the Socialists do not propose to "assist the labor element," it does not understand the attitude of the Social Democratic party toward the labor element, which has always been friendly. It seeks the support of trades unionists for Socialism, but it does not support trades unionists who are seeking jobs in the Democratic Republican camps. If that is the kind of assistance the Reveille is thinking about, then it is quite true that Social Democrats have none to offer.

What guaranty has the workingman that if Democratic expediency attracts his vote, Democratic expediency and not principle will attract the men he votes for?

HERRON NOT A COLONIZER

The Herald referred last week to a new ideal community to be started by colonizers in New Jersey. The fact that the names of Prof. George D. Herron and Mayor Jones were connected with the scheme was not mentioned. We purposely omitted these names until we had some positive information that the use of them by the promoters (who, we now understand, are the publishers of a paper called the Assayer) was, as we suspected, unwarranted and without the sanction of the two gentlemen referred to. We are now able to state positively upon the best information obtainable that so far as Prof. Herron is concerned he never consented to the use of his name in any way. On the contrary, being solicited to give his support and influence to the enterprise, he replied with an explicit declination and declared that he "did not approve of colony schemes." He protested twice against being identified with the proposed venture, yet his name was used and has been given out as one interested in its promotion. Prof. Herron is being subjected to much misrepresentation by the public press because of this improper association of his name with a scheme whose promoters deprecate politics and political parties. Selah!

MORE MISINFORMATION

In answer to a correspondent the Workers' Call (S. L. P.) says in its issue for Jan. 20:

"C. Claus, Walden, Mass.: The national executive committee of the S. D. P. removed the farmers' plank from their platform, and some time afterward submitted their action to a referendum vote."

This is a fair sample of the way misinformation is served out by all the S. L. P. papers, with the exception, which we are happy to note, of the Cleveland Citizen and the Class Struggle. The purpose of it is clear to any man who can tell a hawk from a handsaw. It is to create the impression among members of the S. L. P. and Socialists generally that the Social Democratic party is not free from boss rule, the existence of which within the S. L. P. has played such havoc with that organization.

What are the facts relative to the elimination of the "Demands for Farmers" from the platform?

1. That for several weeks prior to July 6, 1899, the Herald printed a call for a conference to be held on that day at Chicago to consider matters of importance to the welfare of the organization.

2. That such a conference was held with the result that five different propositions were SUBMITTED TO A REFERENDARY VOTE OF THE ENTIRE MEMBERSHIP.

3. That among the recommendations of that conference was one favoring the elimination of the "Demands for Farmers."

4. That this recommendation was immediately thereafter submitted to the members, was voted upon and approved by a large majority.

5. That the "Demands for Farmers" were, therefore, "removed," not by the executive board, as the Workers' Call says, but by the members of the party, according to the rule of our organization governing all such matters.

In addition to the foregoing, the conference was preceded by a full and free discussion of the "demands" and the final action of the members has been accepted throughout the country.

More than this it is unnecessary to say.

A PRACTICAL REFORM

A new stroke of economy is soon to be made as a result of recent agreements and combinations among the railroads. And it is to be a practical reform that will meet with our unreserved approval. The private owners of the great trunk lines east of Chicago—that is, the entire transportation system between the Mississippi river and the Atlantic seaboard—have concluded to reorganize upon a basis that will oust from their easy jobs about fifty thousand men employed as local, general, traveling and district freight and passenger agents and solicitors. Separate city ticket offices in all the cities are to be abandoned and joint offices take their place. Besides this, all forms of commissions heretofore paid for "getting business" will be abolished and the incomes of thousands of agents will vanish. Then, too, the scalper is to be eliminated and an army of superfluous clerks and assistants will be made to hit the cinder path in behalf of this practical reform and stroke of economy. Again, it has been discovered that too many fast trains, put into service as the result of sharp competition, are running. As competition is something the babbler about it don't want, these trains will have to go, and a lot of trainmen will quit howling prosperity when they thrust their hands into empty pockets.

You probably remember that congress failed to legalize pooling, so that the railroad barons could plunder the people with the sanction of more law. But these corporations, the regulators of the commerce of the country, can always find a way to accomplish their purposes. So they will pool anyhow, law or no law. However, it is an excellent reform; its effects will be felt by a quarter of a million people, many of whom, indifferent to the fate of millions of their fellows engaged in productive industry, have imagined themselves among the most important people "in the push." A little practical reform will now convince them that they are of very small consequence—a crowd of parasites, mere clothes-wearing folk, for whom the onward sweep of economic evolution has no use. Such master strokes of economy are doing more for real progress and the settlement of the social problem than all the Bryanite reformers between the two oceans have ever dreamed of.

IGNORANCE AND MALICIOUSNESS

The New York People (that of 184 William street) prints a long article from the Coming Nation anent the subject of Socialist unity, in which the last-named paper repudiates the class struggle and incidentally indorses the Social Democratic party, in apparent total ignorance of the truth that this party takes its stand squarely upon that fact in the social revolution and declares in language that leaves no room for doubt or quibbling that society is divided into two classes with conflicting interests. These interests never can be harmonized under capitalist production.

Now, the Social Democratic party does recognize the class struggle; there would be no place for it, and it would not be a Socialist party if it did otherwise. Every copy of the Herald ever printed has contained the platform of the party; the platform distinctly proclaims the class struggle. Every Social Democrat believes in the class struggle. There has never been any question among honest men as to the attitude of the party on the fact of the class struggle. But what does the People do? It seizes upon an article written by somebody ignorant of the facts and the truth, "whose utterances," it says, "are in general absolutely unworthy of notice," and, with its own comments, occupies nearly two columns of editorial space in an endeavor to make it appear that the Coming Nation "speaks for the Social Democratic party." So this is the way the matter stands, according to the ingenuous editor of the People: "The utterances of the Coming Nation are unworthy of notice, except when it speaks for the Social Democratic party, and then, if in its speaking it misrepresents that party, it is worthy of two columns of space." We say this because, though the Coming Nation is misinformed as to the attitude of the S. D. P. on the class struggle, the People is not, and if the editor of the People should claim that he is, he has but to refer to the files of his own paper and read communications from comrades in the Socialist Labor party to become enlightened.

We have studiously avoided disputation with S. L. P. papers and ignored bitter assaults upon the S. D. P. and its officials, realizing that no good could result to the Socialist movement from engaging in a war of words with another Socialist party. When, however, in the face of the fact that the members of both parties have for many weeks been earnestly discussing pro and con the subject of unity, representative S. L. P. papers like the People and Workers' Call (both anti-De Leon) choose to renew their tactics of misrepresentation, we feel fully justified in publishing this reference to the People's attitude and that of the Workers' Call on the subject of the "Demands for Farmers." It is well, however, that readers of the Herald should understand that the present departure from the consistent course we have followed does not mean an abandonment of that course nor an invitation to controversy with another Socialist party. Both the People and the Workers' Call are clearly wrong and it is unfortunate that at this particular time either of them should have attempted to jeopardize the approachment to fraternal relations between the two parties.

This number contains the announcement of a work compiled by Comrade Frederic Heath and now ready for delivery. If you look over the contents as they are barely outlined in the advertisement on page 4, you will see that "The Social Democracy Red Book" is going to supply a need. Send for a copy—price, 15 cents—to Debs Publishing company, Terre Haute, Ind.

BRYANISM AGAIN

The Herald has received from a subscriber in Massachusetts a letter in which this question is put to the editor: "I want to ask you whether, if Mr. Bryan is placed squarely upon the Socialist platform, we should not vote for him?" * * * It is a question whether we will take the essence through the Democratic party, or whether we shall refuse it and wait another four years for success?"

The writer is not a member of a branch of the Social Democratic party, or he would certainly not propound such a question. A Social Democrat knows that the chances of Mr. Bryan's being "placed squarely upon the Socialist platform"—that is, the platform of the Social Democratic party—are about equal to the chance that Mr. McKinley will next week convert his imperialistic cabinet into a branch of our party and start a Socialist propaganda in the white house. It is worth while remembering, and no restatement of the fact ought to be necessary, that Mr. Bryan is not a Socialist. He has taken some pains to have this understood by declaring against Socialism. In 1896 he would have none of the tenets of Populism, except free silver, in his platform. He was quite willing, with the aid of the Democratic "board of strategy," to corral Populist votes, but he was opposed to being placed squarely or otherwise upon the Populist platform. The sole purpose of any attempt by the "board of strategy" in 1900 to place him upon the Socialist platform would be to get votes. If they succeeded in that to the extent of electing him, the Socialist platform would be relegated to the limbo of the forgotten. Socialism would not be advanced by anything the Democratic party might be likely to do.

Mr. Bryan is a middle-class reformer, an advocate of free-silver coinage and the folly of smashing the trusts by legislation. Like Mr. McKinley, he has a way to rid society of the trust problem. The former wants a commission, with powers similar to those of the interstate commerce commission, which has been a failure, while Bryan wants a licensing board to authorize good trusts to do business and prevent the bad trusts from doing anything. There is no choice between the two, since both are supremely ridiculous.

It is not a question whether we will take the essence of Socialism through the Democratic party, because that party does not understand what that essence is; neither does Mr. Bryan, although he is opposed to it. His unintelligent and illogical method, so far as he may be said to have any of dealing with trusts, shows clearly enough that he does not understand the modern industrial movement and has no real conception of the revolution now going on in society. If his dimwitted following insists that he has, then we in turn insist that no American politician ever so thoroughly covered up his true convictions in a torrent of mere words and an overworked advocacy of fatuous and inadequate reforms. Democrats may take which horn of the dilemma they choose. We take the former. Mr. Bryan, like the Democratic party, is not up to date.

In this year—1900—with a presidential campaign on hand—those who are not for Socialism are against it; those who are not with us are against us, and they who support the Democratic party will be against us and against Socialism equally with supporters of Republicanism. The essence of Socialism can be had only through a Socialist party.

We repeat again that Social Democrats are not supporting Bryanism.

NOTES AND COMMENT

The city officials of Milwaukee who were found guilty of contempt for violating a court injunction are not yet in jail. One of the lawyers, James C. Flanders, who argued in court that the judge could not enjoin the council from passing an ordinance, said:

"I say, if there was any man who was opposed to this ordinance—whether he was a member of the bar or not—that the company of the opposition had the right to procure his influence with money if this could be done. What is there illegitimate about the sale of power or influence to a passage or defeat of a measure? Here is the wrong? Or where the wrong if the person of power or influence with the common council is by a money retainer restrained from using his power or influence to aid either a passage of a measure or to prevent, but is prevailed upon to remain inactive?"

What do you we slaves who have to "submit" think this?

Make a note of this: The chamber of commerce of Cleveland, Ohio, promised to pay each of the 10 militia companies of that city $1,250 a year if they would promise not to solicit subscriptions from the public. The b failed to "cough up" and the militia has brought suit for the amount. The plaintiffs' briefs the following thing exposure is made:

"The truth of matter is that this defendant (the chamber of commerce) did not want this militia company to solicit subscription from the public because it (the militia company) might feel under obligation not to shoot the public when it need to be shot; and this corporation thought if it could stop that it would raise the funds from its own members with which to pay this militia company, so that this militia company would feel obliged to shoot the people whenever this company wanted it to do so."

The working class has the capitalist class on its back; through rent, interest and profit, the capitalist class is appropriating the fruits of the labor power of the working class; the capitalist class enjoys all the privileges and luxuries that unearned wealth can bestow, while the working class, living close to the subsistence line, is eking out a hand-to-mouth existence. And yet there are people who deny the class struggle! A bit of an oasis in Toledo doesn't alter the fact, either.

Mark Hanna unwittingly revealed the motive underlying all the Republican professions of virtue and patriotism, when, having been down to Philadelphia to collect the $100,000 promised for the national convention and failing to do so, he said: "We only went to Philadelphia on account of money. There wasn't anything else to take us there." Your pure and unselfish patriotism is the patriotism of the dollar—the Mark Hanna and Republican brand.

We welcome to our table No. 1 of the Miners' Magazine, published by the Western Federation of Miners, at 1613 Court place, Denver, Colo. Alike in reading matter and typographical make-up, it is a credit to the organization, and under the editorship of the president, Edward Boyce, it will have the good wishes and should receive the practical support of all friends of the western miners everywhere. The subscription price is $1.

Every political party that has ever been in power, in America or elsewhere, has upheld the economic system it found prevailing. No political party can establish justice for the people except one that proposes to control the economic powers of society in the interest of a free life based on economic security for the whole people. Such a party is the Social Democracy.

We have advocates of dress reform and millions scantily dressed.

We have advocates of food reform and millions without enough to eat.

We have advocates of educational reform and millions with no chance for education.

We have advocates of more boulevards and millions rotting in social cess-pools.

The trust managers are supposed to be trembling with fear since some of the reformers have suggested the publicity cure. What a terrible thing it would be to put their names in the papers if they don't behave themselves!

The capitalist employer of labor refuse to recognize workmen in their organized capacity, but they are quick to recognize the value of workmen's services at as low a rate of wages as will buy them.

END OF THE BEGINNING IN THE UNITED STATES

(M. Winchewsky in London Justice)

The history of the young and vigorous Social Democratic party will some day be written for the benefit of our "kin beyond the sea," which, in this case, of course, means the Socialists of the United Kingdom, irrespective of race or creed. Should it fall to the lot of the present writer to undertake that task, he will endeavor to make it clear to British Socialists in general, and his old comrades in the S. D. F. in particular, why, in view of the fact that another organization had been in existence here for upward of a quarter of a century, the new party was established.

For our present purpose, however, a brief outline of the party's past will suffice.

After the great railroad strike in Chicago some five years ago, the American Railway union virtually collapsed. Eugene V. Debs, its president, and some of his associates, got into prison for six months, and the railroad magnates breathed more freely. The most honest and most big-hearted of this country's "labor leaders"—friends and foes are a unit on this score—seems to have done a good deal of thinking while in jail, and the result was that on Jan. 1, 1897, he wrote his famous letter in the organ of his union declaring fully and unequivocally for Socialism.

Five months later he, at the head of a number of people, mostly members of the A. R. U., went to work and brought into existence what was then known as the Social Democracy of America.

The somewhat utopian appendage praised and derided respectively under the name of the colonization plan was, under the then prevailing circumstances, and more particularly on account of the deplorable state of the railway union, with thousands of men out of employment, not quite unnatural. It did not take Debs, however, very long to find out that the "plan" was not only useless owing to its illusory character, but actually harmful, inasmuch as it served to incumber the young Socialist organization with all sorts of undesirable elements.

At the convention held in Chicago in July, 1898, the Social Democracy was captured by the colonists (what they have done with it has never transpired), and the "seceders" right there formed the present Social Democratic party.

When the fall elections of last year came around the party was still in process of formation. Even in the "commonwealth" of Massachusetts it had only thirteen branches. It should be borne in mind that in that state, the cradle of American liberty, the native country of Whittier and Emerson, as well as William Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips, and—what is, perhaps, from the standpoint of modern Socialism, still more important—industrially one of the most advanced portions of the Union, the new party, even in its original shape, was a class-conscious political Socialist organization with no nonsense about it. We were, however, in the autumn of 1898, pretty weak even there.

How great and gratifying was, therefore, our surprise when the election resulted in a most substantial victory for our cause, two of our men—James F. Carey and Louis M. Scates—being elected to the state legislature of Massachusetts. This was followed one month later by the election of John C. Chase to the office of mayor, accompanied by six men (aldermen and councilmen), besides a few minor officers in the city government. All this took place in Haverhill, a city in the county of Essex, with a population of about 40,000, an important industrial center, it being one of the greatest shoe manufacturing places—a kind of Northampton in New England.

Two representatives and a Socialist mayor! The capitalist press, with an acumen born of a class-consciousness much more clear-sighted than is unfortunately that of the proletarians, sized the whole thing up very correctly, and made up its mind that at least in one city in America Socialism had got firmly entrenched. They hoped, however, that the movement would remain localized in Haverhill, and they furthermore consoled themselves with the expectation that the thing would not happen again, seeing that Chase got elected by a plurality, he receiving 2,300 out of a total of 7,000 votes, so that if they united their forces, they would easily defeat us.

As time went on the fond hopes of our friend the enemy grew smaller and paler—that is, with regard to our movement remaining confined to Haverhill. One day the S. D. P. elected a man to office in Amesbury; a little later "alarming" reports began to come in from Newburyport, Whitman, Quincy, Rockland and Danvers. "The red craze," as one of the papers called it, was clearly spreading throughout the state.

And so, when the last full campaign was reached, they made up their minds and a purse of $40,000 to prevent the re-election of our representatives on Nov. 7 and that of the first Socialist mayor in America at the municipal election four weeks later.

Goldbugs, silverbugs and humbugs (of the water-cure persuasion) united against our lads in many cities and towns, notably in Haverhill. Probably for the first time within a generation Republicans and Democrats buried the hatchet, forgot the past, and fought shoulder to shoulder against the theories of Social Democracy. And the result?

Well, they wrested from us one district in the state election, defeating Comrade Scates in Haverhill, notwithstanding the fact that his vote increased by 150 since last autumn.

On the other hand, we re-elected Carey by an increased majority over the combined Republicans, Democrats and Prohibitionists (temperance men), De Leon's "Socialists" bringing up the rear.

We elected in Rockland Frederick O. MacCartney as representative to the state legislature by a clear majority over both old parties.

We more than doubled our vote in the state for governor.

We re-elected Chase as mayor of Haverhill against four parties, of which three were in coalition, Chase carrying nearly every ward in the city.

We elected Charles H. Coulter as mayor of Brockton, our man being on top of the poll in every one of the seven districts.

We elected two aldermen and one councilman in the last-named city and three of each in Haverhill.

We made a fine showing in every other place where we had candidates in the field.

As to the platform on which all this was done, the readers of Justice may be enlightened if the editor can find room later.

This is the end of the beginning. America is falling in line, with the beginning of the end in sight.

New York, Dec. 12, 1899.

Comrade Edlin, delegate from San Francisco to the S. L. P. convention, called upon us last week and passed a pleasant half hour in "the den." Edlin is for union—if not organic, then at least a political union on one candidate for the presidency. With Edlin we can all say "that is a consummation devoutly to be wished."

THE STRUGGLE IN THE RANKS OF SOCIALISM

By Jas. T. Van Ness

The Socialist factions, about evenly divided in numbers, three factions, holding separate Socialist meetings every Sunday evening in San Francisco and Los Angeles—this is the pleasant information I have to report from California. Now, comrades, are we wise in allowing these divisions to sap our strength? In the election of 1898, with the exception, possibly, of Massachusetts, California polled the largest Socialist vote, in proportion to its population, of any state in the Union. We all know of the great growth in Socialist sentiment since then, and many of us believe that with a strong Socialist party in the field we can command a vote of from 20,000 to 40,000 in 1900.

I submit that such a party is now in the field. Further than this, I submit that it is only from an entirely mistaken point of view—an entire misunderstanding of the true struggle in the Socialist Labor party—that two of the factions are not already one and actually drawing in numbers from the third.

To make my point clear, let me ask you to banish from your mind all prejudice, all personal animosity, all theoretical views of taxation, and all individual ideas as to constitutional procedure. Unless you do, it will be impossible to get at the truth, for beneath all the bitterness and vituperation lies a principle over which both factions of the Socialist Labor party are striving, and of the true nature of which, at least so far as I can judge, both seem equally in ignorance.

Any one joining that party is always struck by its correct theory and impossible practice. There we find a nearly perfect economic platform, which is being urged upon the people by the most absurd, discourteous and impracticable tactics. Lord Bacon said: "They be the best churcheons which, being learned, incline to the traditions of experience, or, being empirics, incline to the methods of learning." And, by contradiction, it might be said of the Socialist Labor party that no body of men ever seemed less inclined "to the traditions of experience" or "to the methods of learning."

It is this indifference to the traditions of experience, this self-centered view that they alone possess the truth, that has led the leaders of that party into the ultra-individualism which is rapidly developing the grave errors of bigotry and intolerance. Instead of adapting their policy to new demands made by a growth in numbers, these leaders have actually become more and more intolerant, until now their whole organization is on the verge of dissolution.

But what is the fundamental error which is tearing the party to pieces? I think the Rev. B. Fay Mills brought this out pretty clearly in the Arena. There he said: "The Socialist Labor party has almost an ideal program. It occupies in relation to the social question the position of the more radical of the old Abolitionists in the days before the war. It is possessed of a heroic enthusiasm, and it appears to have engendered the power and sacrifice that accompany the birth of a religion. But, in strange contrast, it seems to be practically without soul! It seems to aim exclusively at the establishment of an economic democracy, and lacks the vital conception of rational, unselfish spirituality." Here is the whole trouble. Instead of building on a sure foundation, which is ethical as well as economic, the founders of the Socialist Labor party eliminated the ethical and built solely on the economic. Hence we have a house built upon the sand.

The weakness of such a position can best be made plain by reference to law. Now, government is both founded and sustained by law, which is of two kinds—(1) the law of things and (2) the law of morals. The law of things is based solely on the existence of private property. As Socialists propose to do away with private property, they equally propose to eliminate the law of things. This can only be done by enhancing the law of morals.

But only in its relation to Social Democrats am I interested in the struggle, and the point I wish to make in their regard is this—that the Social Democratic party is founded on both an ethical and economic basis. Comrades in the Socialist Labor party, you cannot put new wine into old bottles. You are forced by a fight for principle—the principle of Socialism, as opposed to the principle of anarchism—to leave your party. You want to retain a little of the old bottles. To accomplish this purpose you ask us to form with you a new party. We cannot do it. We aim "at the establishment of an economic democracy," but we aim to do so with a "vital conception of rational, unselfish spirituality." You wish that conception dimmed. You have no right to ask it. Social Democrats in no sense can favor anarchism. They advocate pure and unadulterated Socialism. They stand on an absolutely firm ethical and economic foundation. They propose to do away with the law of things by substituting for it an enhanced law of morals, and you have no right to ask them to be shaken in their course. Rather should you strengthen them in their resolve by joining their party at once.

For many weeks I have given this matter the most careful and impartial thought. For no body of men in the United States have I kinder feelings than for the rank and file of the extreme faction of the Socialist party, for I know them to be unselfish, though misguided. But their position is untenable, and they eventually must fall. And so I can think of no good reason why comrades dissatisfied with that party should not become Social Democrats at once. I can find no reason why a new party should be formed. But of one thing I am, and we can all be, certain, and that is that great harm is being done to our common cause by these unhappy divisions. Therefore, in concluding, I urge all Socialists to give this matter full and immediate attention.

Los Angeles, Cal.

AN END OF THE CENTURY OUTRAGE

A few weeks ago I was riding slowly and most uncomfortably through the state of Idaho on a mixed train, learning for myself how great were the discomforts of travel a score of years ago, before the dining-car and the sleeping-car arrived to ameliorate them. In the wretched little caboose in which I rode there were but few passengers, and most of them were so affected by their dismal state that they sat silent and sullen, refusing to respond to any overtures for acquaintance.

One young fellow, clean shaven, alert and intelligent, attracted my attention, and presently we fell into conversation. He was American born, but of Swedish parents, and had a slight foreign accent and a certain simplicity of mind which does not often appear in the thorough American. He was going to the Coeur d'Alene mining district, he said, to get a job. "I was going there myself to study the conditions under which men got and held jobs, and so I questioned him rather closely. He was not a member of a labor union, was a stranger in the west, and practically "broke." That is, he confided to me that he had money enough to pay for one night's lodging at Wallace, the county seat, and for his stage fare to the nearest mining camp.

We disembarked together at Wallace, and the next morning I saw him board a ramshackle stage for the camp at Burke. Two days later he turned up again, mud to his knees, unkempt and footsore.

"Hello," I said, "didn't you find that job?"

He swore viciously. "There's plenty of jobs out there, but a fellow has to come down here and get a permit to look for work before anybody dares to hire him. I spent all my money getting out there, and had to walk back. Now I have to go up to the state office and get a permit and then walk back again. What kind of an American place is this, anyhow?"

That was not my first introduction to the new system of state regulation of employment in Idaho, for I had read before of the intelligent plan of making every man who wanted work in Shoshone county get a permit from the governor's representative to go and look for it. It was, however, one of the most striking illustrations that came to me of the hardships that the system entailed.

Curiously enough, the plan has been forced upon the county by the very influences which last week wrecked two banks in Boston, caused a panic in Wall Street, ruined scores of speculators and almost stopped the course of business in the nation.

A certain mine at Wardner, Idaho, is owned by the Standard Oil crowd. For years it has been a "non-union" mine, while the other mines in the district were unionized. It paid wages more than $3 a week less than those of its competitors and naturally became a menace to the welfare of all miners in the district. One day a gang of men went down to the mine and blew up its concentrator. Standard Oil influence at Boise City and Washington was strong enough to cause a speedy declaration of martial law, and since that time—eight months, now—the whole county has been under military domination.

For some time men were arrested arbitrarily and kept in a stockade for months without warrant or trial. That has been stopped now, but the authority still remains to renew the practice if the whim of the commanding officer shall suggest it. Martial law exists in the Coeur d'Alene now, though it is administered mildly. It was under martial law that my traveling companion was compelled to get a permit before the employer he found could give him work.

The purpose of this system is to drive out of the district all men associated with organized labor. Before getting a permit to look for work the man must forewear allegiance to any union. It is true that the form of the application does not mention by name any union, and apparently does not demand anything except a promise to avoid association with criminal and disorderly organizations, but the man who issues the permits is not so cautious as the verbiage of his printed forms, and, after listening to the conversation when several permits were issued, I discovered that membership in either the Knights of Labor or the Western Federation of Miners was enough to disqualify an applicant.

What all this means is simply this: Mines in the Coeur d'Alene district are so managed that their owners and the state admit that they can only be manned by the aid of federal troops and under the constant supervision of the state. A whole country is kept as far from self-government under our constitution as is Zanzibar. There is no longer a pretense of observing American principles or methods. The employers control the troops and the troops run the district.

That seems to be the latest contribution of the United States to the history of the nineteenth century. Its correction might well be the first duty of the twentieth.—Willis J. Abbot, in Chicago Journal.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness for every man, woman and child are conditioned upon equal political and economic rights.

That private ownership of the means of production and distribution of wealth has caused society to split into two distinct classes, with conflicting interests, the small possessing class of capitalists or exploiters of the labor force of others and the ever-increasing large dispossessed class of wage-workers, who are deprived of the socially-due share of their product.

That capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people.

That the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system, will compel the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare, or result in the destruction of civilization.

That the trade union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its economic, the other its political wing, and that both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system of production and distribution.

Therefore, the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be the establishment of a system of co-operative production and distribution of wealth, the restoration to the people of all the means of production and distribution, to be administered by organized society in the interest of the whole people, and the complete emancipation of society from the domination of capitalism.

The wage-workers and all those in sympathy with their historical mission to realize a higher civilization, the public ownership of the means of production and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic Party will result in the abolition of capitalism and of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting us with millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the world, and to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in this direction, we make the following demands:

1. Revision of our antiquated Federal Constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to full and complete control of government by all the people, irrespective of sex.
2. The public ownership of all industries, telegraph, telephone, all means of transportation, communication, water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.
3. The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal and all other mines; also of all oil and gas wells.
4. Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.
5. The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of a large number of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.
6. All useful inventions to be free to all, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.
7. Labor legislation to be local, instead of local, and international where possible.
8. National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.
9. Equal civil and political rights for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.
10. The abolition of the initiative and referendum, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.
11. Abolition of war as far as the United States are concerned, and the introduction of international arbitration instead.

CALL TO ACTION

ORGANIZE FOR 1900

There are few communities in this country today without one to a dozen Socialists who are not affiliated with a Socialist organization. At the last State election in Missouri votes were cast for the candidates of the Social Democratic Party in nearly every county in the State.

In almost every community a thoroughly wide-awake and earnest Socialist, with little exertion, could in one week effect the organization of a Branch of the Social Democratic Party.

WHAT THEY CAN DO
The Declaration of Principles and Political Demands of this party will be found in this paper; read it and you will see that the party is a UNCOMPROMISING, straight, uncompromising Socialist organization, recognized as such in the International movement for Socialism.

DEMOCRATIC ORGANIZATION
The triumph of the Socialist cause, which is the cause of the world democracy, requires organization, and without it nothing can be accomplished; this party is controlled by no individual, nor by any set of individuals short of its entire membership through the referendum.

THIS YEAR'S CAMPAIGN
The year 1900 will be one of great and far-reaching importance to the people and especially to the intelligent, wealth-producing people of the United States; the latter have surely by this time begun to see the futility of any longer giving support to capitalistic parties.

ORGANIZE WHERE YOU LIVE
Socialists should have as their main object in 1900 the polling of every vote possible for straight and uncompromising Socialism, and to do this the co-operation of every unaffiliated Socialist in the work of organization, where he lives, is necessary.

HOW ORGANIZED
The Social Democratic Party is now organized in more than half the States; it consists of Local Branches, State Unions and a National Council. A Local Branch may be organized with five members. It will nominate candidates for President and Vice-President next March.

SEND FOR INSTRUCTIONS
Full instructions and all necessary supplies for organizing Local Branches may be obtained from the National Secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington St., Chicago, Illinois.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

Astor the Benevolent.

I see by a recent dispatch that our renegade citizen, Astor, has been playing the part of the benevolent philanthropist. Out of the fullness of his English heart and his American pocket, he has given $1,000 dollars to the British war fund.

The soldiers who are being shipped out in consignments by English commercialism to the South African abattoir are being promptly disposed of by Oom Paul. And as the result there are many homes in England full of sorrow and empty of bread. And for the relief of these Astor has opened his purse.

The act in itself was apparently praiseworthy. It won for the giver the warm encomiums of the British press. Doubtless the pious paupers who will share the gift consider it an act of providence on their behalf, and will regard Astor as a Christian.

It was kind—of a kind. One cannot help suspecting that Astor was simply furthering his design to become an "Astoroid" in the constellation of English snobbery. It would give him prestige with the royal 'ighnesses whose interest at present is equally divided between the commercial slaughter of the husbands and the charitable relief of the wives.

Astor the Malevolent.

We are justified in accusing him of motives less noble than kindness when we consider his actions on this side of the sea.

Coincident with the report of his English generosity, came a report of his American greed. The agents of Astor have just raised the ground-rents of their New York real estate to over double their former figure. The rent has gone up from $350 to $750. A large portion of New York is owned by the Astors, and with criminal cunning they have never disposed of it, but have permitted buildings to be erected on land leased from them. And now, secure in their possession, they demand a double figure.

It seems that many homes have been built on Astor property, and that as the result of this act of legalized greed their owners will be unable to retain them. And so, while Astor contributes a paltry sum to support English homes, he extorts a fortune by robbing and ruining American homes.

The elder Astor made his pile by skinning animals. The last of the line, Willy Wally, is carrying on the same business by dealing in human hides.

How long shall we allow this rascally renegade to open his purse and give away our money? How long shall we let the Malevolent play the Benevolent, at our expense? I don't object to china Astors, but I do to American ones!

Bryan's Blunder.

During his recent visit to New York, William J. Bryan sounded the slogan of his presidential campaign in the words "Kill the trusts!" To quote him more fully, "the battle cry of paramount issue is kill the trusts, the big trusts, the little trusts, the money trust, the industrial trust, the international land-grabbing trust."

Poor Bryan! Poor blind leader of the blind! I had given him credit for more sense. Nay, more, after hearing his utterances during his campaign of '96, I am inclined to give him credit for more knowledge concerning industrial affairs, and the futility of his trust-smashing scheme.

It is Bryan's expressed wish and plan that as a nation we go back to free competition again. He wants to see grocery stores on every village corner, with their different delivery wagons passing each other on the street and their myriad mean methods of catching trade.

Bryan really knows better. He must know that the trusts are inevitable. They are simply the instrument whereby the curse of competition is being eliminated from business. There remains now the clear duty of substituting co-operation in its place.

The trusts must be used, not killed. They must be taken advantage of instead, as now, of being permitted to take advantage of us.

The Socialist Sequel.

The sure sequel of all the industrial evolutionary processes of today is Socialism. It is the logical and inevitable concluding chapter of the story of the trusts. "There is no other name given among men whereby ye may be saved."

There are but three stages in the progress of modern industrial evolution. The first is competition, the second is combination, and the third is co-operation. At this present time the second stage is being reached. Combination of capital has displaced competition of capital.

It is not a step backward. It is not a sign of decadence. On the other hand, the trusts denote progress, and along scientific lines. Only the ignorant man deplores the trusts. Only the fool seeks to destroy them.

The trusts are a curse to cowards, but a boon to the brave. They denote oppression to the uninformed, but they prove progression to the open-eyed man who studies the true significance of events.

The pangs of poverty that are convulsing our land today, as the result of the trusts are but the labor-pains preceding the birth of the child, Socialism!

A Canadian Haverhill.

The recent municipal election in London, Canada, gives substantial evidence of the progress of Socialism there.

For many years the mayoralty contest in that city has been fought on strictly party lines. But the socialist sentiment has grown so strong during the past year that the socialists, with the endorsement of the labor unions, put up an independent socialist candidate, Frederick J. Darch.

As the only means of escape from defeat the Conservatives and Liberals dropped party differences and united on a common candidate. Even with their united strength they polled only 2,638 votes, as against the 2,419 votes cast by the socialists.

The latter made this splendid showing in spite of the fact that Mr. Darch did not get the full support of labor, many workmen refusing to subscribe to the socialist platform, or to endorse Socialism in any way.

It was therefore a clear-cut issue between labor and capital, and like our own Haverhill, it was an augury of the time soon to come when labor's right will meet and vanquish money's might. Watch London next year.

A Society Bud's Root.

In this morning's paper I find the following society note: "Miss Katharine Clark is the presiding genius in the big New York palace which her father, Senator William A. Clark, built last year. Her father is a multi-millionaire and gratifies her every wish."

And upon another page of the same paper there is this news note from Washington: "Representative Murray, of the Montana house of representatives, testified that he was offered $10,000 to vote for Senator Clark by persons whom he considered representatives of that person."

The second article explains the first. The fortunes of the rich are based upon bribery and theft and falsehood. The gay flower that blossoms in the blaze of society is supported by roots that twist their sinuous way through darkness and filth. At one end of Senator Clark's fortune is a pampered daughter; at the other end is the sneaking agent, who lurks in the dusk of lobbies.

"He gratifies her every wish." So does the tiger gratify the wish of its whelps, but only when some unsuspecting deer has fallen into its bloody clutch. And many an exploited workman has had to deny his daughter almost every wish in order that he might pay tribute to the highwayman of politics and trade.

History repeated.

Just previous to the fall of Rome the aristocracy indulged in all manner of insane pleasures and riotous dissipations. They threw aside all restriction and abandoned all decency and propriety.

Such a period seems to be coming in our own land today. Every here and there may be seen a premonitory bubble in the volcano of vice, predicting a social eruption.

This week three such cases are worthy of note. The French ball of New York was marked by an equal absence of decency and clothes. Feminine poverty and masculine wealth met in riotous licentiousness.

A Chicago dispatch gave an account of a new dance that had been indulged in by a club in that city, particulars of which are not printable.

And strangest and worst of all, is an account of a young woman's "Degradation Club" in Toledo, one of whose members, chosen by lot, voluntarily went into a life of vice, in fulfillment of her promise to live the most degraded life possible, and died in a hovel!

Dark is the augury of these things. They show that the links of civilization are snapping beneath the weight of social sin and industrial injustice, and that we are drifting back to barbarism.

There is but one hope, one chance, one escape, from the chaos of vice and tumult, and that is—Socialism! Merlin.

GEORGE D. HERRON DECLARES FOR SOCIALISM

On the eve of his departure for an extended trip abroad, Prof. George D. Herron, speaking in New York City, January 27, declared that "Socialism is the only living religion, the only program of faith that is offered at the present time." The real significance of this utterance will be understood by those acquainted with the mental processes through which Prof. Herron has passed during the last year. The speaker's subject was "Socialism and Religion." The address, delivered before the Social Reform Club of New York, was intended as a definite pronouncement in favor of Socialism. It distinctly shows that Prof. Herron has come to accept the social revolution and the class struggle. He said: "It is no wonder the cries for Socialism are heard when we look into the wheels of this hideous machine called civilization and see men dead in body and soul who are its grist," and "it is no longer a question whether you will have a social revolution—it is only left you to decide what kind of a revolution you will have; there is nothing else left for the class disinherited."

The New York Times says the address was given "before a gathering which would have filled an auditorium twice the size of the club's quarters; many had to leave, being unable to get within hearing distance." From the Times' report and the dispatches we take the following in addition to the quoted passages above:

"I have no expectation that the present system can be mended—it can only be ended. Socialism comes to us as an uncompromising fact without regard as to whether you or I want it or not. It stands for a new spirit and a new world."

"From the various forms of individualism, through capitalism, from what a man is supposed to earn and what he really needs, we must finally reach that stage where human need is the only recognized coin of the realm for a decent society. But the central idea of Socialism is that of every human being an equal inheritor of social wealth and benefits. And in this day all things objective and subjective are tending toward the socialistic idea."

"Progress up to date has been largely a progress of slaves. We still live in a miserably enslaved world. When men take it into their heads that they can make any kind of a world they choose, history will begin to go across-lots, wandering no more through tragedy and failure."

"One of the grave questions is the effect Socialism will have on religion. What will be the effect on the general mental attitude of human life if Socialism should predominate? What will be the effect on the creeds and the dogmas, the gods and the temples?"

"The effect of a socialistic idea possessing the world would change the whole attitude of human life toward the future. Protestantism stands (though it does not stand very well to-day) by menacing the integrity of the human soul. The element of fear has been dominant in men for centuries. They are afraid of the gods they worship and must propitiate them. They must sacrifice to their unknown gods more fruits of one kind of monopoly or another—perhaps by founding universities of theological seminaries."

"There is not a bit of spiritual difference between the Standard Oil combination and the Protestant Church, or, rather, take the Presbyterian Church, in which I was born and reared. One demands tribute in the form of cash and the other in the form of enslavement of souls and all the cash it can get besides. But when the social revolution comes to something like a really defined conflict with the capitalistic classes it will come as a programme of uncompromising Socialism without regard as to whether you or I want it or not."

"If we really had democracy—if it were a fact instead of a dogma—in the state and in industry, we could not escape democracy in ethics. No human being has a right to impose ethical or religious authority on another human being. All imposed authority is essentially atheistic. The man who seeks to coerce another into accepting his views is atheistic, and cannot believe in a god. What you call religious authority is essentially a monopoly."

"Socialism is the only living religion, the only programme of faith that is offered at the present time."

After the address Prof. Herron said that he meant to make no discrimination in favor of Roman Catholicism, but had referred only to Protestantism because he was a Protestant himself.

SOCIETY'S "DARE-BASE" GAME

"Dare-base" is a familiar game to every school child, and possibly to every American who has ever attended school. To play the game successfully, the company should usually be divided into two equal parts; but many times have I seen one swift runner take a stand by himself and win over to his side the entire school.

Society is so perfectly organized on the plan of "dare-base" that the features of the latter are boldly stamped on life's practical game—the struggle for wealth and worldly position. The successful members of society have planted their "legal line," "dare-base," and stand bantering the other side, the unsuccessful members of society, to cross it. And, on the other hand, the unsuccessful members, in order to win in this desperate game of life, are obliged to keep dangerously near the "dare-base" line, and if opportunity is offered, they make a desperate grab for anything in sight. Only to the by-stander, who has become tired of this ceaseless running to and fro and halting midway in the game, can anything like a definite knowledge of the end be determined. He sees at a glance the enthusiasm manifested on both sides, and his opinion of the finality is worth more than the opinions of all the participants combined. And when the passion for life is arrayed against the passion for approbation, it should not take a prophet to foretell the end.

"You are at liberty to cross this line," says society, "but if you do, I have a place prepared for you, and I dare you to cross it!"

The rush is on, and if one of the unsuccessful catches his man, and the catch proves to be a good one, he immediately changes places with the man he caught, takes his position in the ranks of the successful, and turns over his old position to his victim. If the catch is not something extra, they are both compelled to take their positions among the unsuccessful. And thus this disgusting game of national "dare-base" goes on.

How natural it is for those who have not learned the lesson of justice to desire to show their strength and authority! I once saw a boy place a chip on his shoulder and dare any boy in the crowd to knock it off. It fell before he could wink his eye. And when I see the majesty of the law walking up and down the earth in that same imperious, chip-on-the-shoulder spirit, I say to myself: "Your majesty will surely get that chip knocked off."

True, the majesty of the law, when directed by love and justice, should, and, I believe, would, be upheld; but when it seeks the enslavement of 90 per cent of the human race for the benefit of the remaining 10 per cent, it ceases to command respect, and deserves the full measure of loyalty which it is today receiving.

Instead of directing their attention toward the amelioration of existing conditions, the successful members of society, generally speaking, notwithstanding their vapory protestations to the contrary, are frantically engaged in making laws with which to grind the less fortunate still harder, and thousands and thousands year by year are thus being swept to the opposite of the "dare-base."

The problem of the law should not be how to catch thieves, but how to avoid making thieves. Millions of dollars—enough to actually hire the thieves not to steal—are spent annually for jails and locks and officers, and the very people who are already dangerously near the "dare-base" line are taxed to their utmost, and sometimes taxed entirely across the line, in order to provide a place to keep them when they are bagged.

Is there no better way than this to prevent crime? If not, let us quit calling ourselves civilized?

If President McKinley would take that chip off his shoulder and turn his attention toward "benevolent public improvement," instead of "benevolent assimilation of the Philippines," he would certainly confer a blessing upon a grateful but hampered people; but if he continues to disregard the wishes of the people, some one will knock that chip off his shoulder as sure as his name is Mack.

The ranks of the unfortunate are steadily growing. Thousands of our best business men find themselves being daily crowded nearer and nearer the "dare-base" line. The one swift runner—adversity—is about to proclaim himself the champion of the game. These men, notwithstanding they have sold their birthright for a mess of pottage, are neither fools nor jumping-jacks designed for the entertainment of Rockefeller and his clerks at Washington, and some day, when we get enough of them on the side of the unfortunate, they'll stand up in the vigor of renewed manhood and demand the restitution of their good names and at least an opportunity to win back by honest labor that which has been stolen from them. "Kelpie."

A TRIBUTE TO RUSKIN

By Leonard D. Abbott

One of the greatest, noblest and purest men of our generation is gone. Ruskin was an intellectual giant; we are as yet hardly able to conceive the vast influence that his books have had upon every department of our thought—art, literature, religion, science and sociology. Like his disciple, William Morris, he was consumed by a passion for beauty; in an age which is frankly abandoned to Mammon, and which has blasted and blackened the face of the earth in its mad struggle for money, he held up before manhood superb, artistic ideals. He was one of the most finished and exquisite writers that the world has ever known, and his books will live as long as the English language. Yet, after all, the important thing in his life was not his art nor his literature, but his social idealism. From earliest youth his whole soul was in revolt against the brutalities of capitalism, and he could never be happy unless he was fighting the injustice around him. We find this current of revolutionary thought gathering strength in his earlier writings—through "Sesame and Lilies," "A Crown of Wild Olives," "Time and Tide," and "Unto This Last"—and finally bursting the floodgates in that burning series of letters to workmen entitled "Fors Clavigera," which was almost the last of Ruskin's writings. "Fors Clavigera" is one of the most stinging indictments of modern society and religion ever penned, and in one of these letters Ruskin plainly avows himself a Communist. Ruskin considered "Unto This Last" his greatest book. It was a bombshell thrown into the camp of the conservative political economists of his day, and in this book Ruskin states that the sole test of a country's wealth is the character of its men and women. "THERE IS NO WEALTH BUT LIFE," he said, and this noble sentence sums up Ruskin's message to the world.

On a bright spring morning, nearly three years ago I was at Coniston Lake, one of the most beautiful spots in the British Isles, and for many years Ruskin's resting place. As I passed by the gate of his home, "Brantwood," the old man himself walked out slowly, leaning on the arm of an attendant. He was ill at the time, and his back was bowed with age, and yet there was a light in his eyes, and a massive sweep of his great brow and white beard that proclaimed him a king among men. I watched him walk down the country road, to the lakeside, and there he parted the hedge, laden with honeysuckle and wild roses, and gazed wistfully over the water to the storm-clad mountains beyond.

And there let us leave him, amid the flowers of his idealism, looking with yearning eyes toward the sunrise of Socialism! Leonard D. Abbott.

Attacks the Constitution

It is not often that a public man, a professor in a state university, so boldly and learnedly attacks the constitution of the United States as did Prof. J. Allen Smith of the economics department of the University of Washington, last night. The occasion was the regular Sunday evening meeting of the Social Democratic party at Labor hall.

Prof. Smith spoke of the relation to the government of all forms of social reform, pointing out the present dire need of political revolution. In the course of his remarks he called attention to the fact that the constitution was formulated by representatives of the aristocracy of the colonial days; that it was written and considered behind closed doors; that the people as a whole were allowed no voice in it, and that it is and always has been a constitution better fitted for an aristocratic than a democratic form of government.

"It was formulated," he said, "with the view of protecting the well-to-do classes against the masses rising up and overturning the existing form of government. It was made a difficult matter to amend the constitution, solely with this object of stability in view. In fact, it is an extremely difficult matter even by popular vote to propose an amendment. This is wrong. The people of this country should be given power by popular vote to change the constitution of the United States whenever they see fit. I maintain, therefore, that the American constitution was not a democracy at all. On the contrary, it was a system of government in which public opinion is not allowed to dominate the governing power. Its mission is also to protect the few against the many—the aristocracy against the lower classes."—Seattle (Wash.) Star, Jan. 22.

JOSEPH H. SCHWERZGEN

When Comrade Joseph H. Schwarzgen, after a wonderfully heroic struggle for a year against the insidious encroachments of disease, died at his home in Chicago early in the morning of Friday last week, there passed away one of the noblest men it has ever been our privilege to know. A man of buoyant, hopeful nature, courageous to an extraordinary degree, true as steel to the cause we all love and to all true friends of that cause, Joseph Schwarzgen won the affection of men in the busy mart where fortunes come and go, and in the street, the shop and the mine, where the poor struggle to sustain life; wherever there were human suffering and need that he could reach and alleviate, his generous heart and ready hand went forth.

From the time the Social Democratic party was organized until he died he was in full sympathy and accord with our purposes, a Social Democrat, and a most liberal contributor to the propaganda. Among the last to be called to his bedside were comrades living in Chicago, and while it was his own wish that his old friend, Eugene V. Debs, should speak a few words over his bier, that duty was necessarily assigned to another, Comrade Jesse Cox, who expressed in words of love and tenderness the loss felt by those who had known "Joe" as a loyal friend of labor and the Socialist movement.

He died as he lived, with supreme confidence in the cause where his heart was, and as we placed beautiful flowers upon the casket last Sunday morning and they carried his body away to be laid in the earth, with tears we enshrined him in our hearts, where, let us hope, his devotion, his courage, his sweetness will live again.

FRATERNAL GREETINGS

The following letter from the executive board of the S. D. P., signed by Chairman Cox and Secretary Stedman, was sent to the convention of the Socialist Labor party at Rochester:

"To the Officers and Members of the Socialist Labor Party, in Convention Assembled—Comrades: The national executive board of the Social Democratic party sends fraternal greetings. The board has learned of the divisions which have arisen within the ranks of the Socialist Labor party, and, recognizing the desirability of concerted action of all class-conscious Socialists in this country, hereby extends a hearty invitation to your convention, as well as to all members of your party, to join the Social Democratic party in the struggle to emancipate humanity from class rule and the slavery of capitalism by the establishment of the co-operative commonwealth.

With an earnest desire for the success of the cause, we remain, yours fraternally,
Jesse Cox,
Chairman National Executive Board.
Seymour Stedman,

HEADED FOR THE MILLENIUM

The news that a prominent company of labor exploiters at Chicago has decided upon a new departure that will result in the speedy inauguration of the millenium will be received with joy by readers of The Herald everywhere. It appears that the John V. Farwell Company, manufacturers of overalls, shirts and coats have made the discovery that the air of Chicago is smoke-laden and foul and is not fit for girls and women employed at overall and shirt making to breathe. If there is any one thing that employers of labor are solicitous about in these times of benevolent assimilation of the fruits of labor, it is the health of the people employed. We have noticed that large employers have been engaged in a strenuous effort to outdo each other to better the condition of their slaves. The Farwell company, however, proposes to beat the record, and is looking for a country town where a factory can be built to employ 500 girls and women under conditions that will enable the latter to retain their health. The city is not conducive to health and the importance of keeping slaves in a fit condition physically to perform their work is at last being recognized.

But, hold on! The report says further down that something else actuates the Farwell company. It says: "Fear of strikes and the belief that country-bred girls are better workers than their sisters in the cities has caused the Farwell company to seek one of the smaller towns near Chicago in which to establish a factory." And—what's this? "Benton Harbor agrees to furnish a suitable building free for five years." So the truth is that the Farwell company, while professing deep concern for the welfare of their employees, is interested quite as much in getting free rent for itself as in securing fresh air for its factory hands. It is a perfectly safe proposition that the company's main object is fresh victims instead of fresh air for old ones, for one of its managers said: "The girl who is raised and lives in the city is not as strong nor can she accomplish the work as can the girl who has been raised amid green fields."

So it is not the millenium that the John V. Farwell Company are headed for after all, but fresh victims and free rent, more work and larger profits. By and bye the bloom of youth will fade from the cheeks of the "country-bred girls" at Benton Harbor, while the hideous factory system goes on with its horrible grind and their sisters in the cities eke out an existence by resorting to ways that a brutal economic system forces upon them and then shamelessly calls them criminal.

For all this there is no help, no cure, no reform, only in the substitution of social production and distribution in place of the private factory system which destroys body and soul in the interest of profit. Socialism, with its free life and its economic security for women and men is the hope of the world. Workingmen and workingwomen unite for the overthrow of oppression!

GEORGE D. HERRON, SOCIALIST

On the first page of this paper will be found as full a report as we are able to give of Prof. George D. Herron's declaration for Socialism, made just before leaving New York for a trip abroad. The significance of Prof. Herron's coming out, taken in connection with what must be the inevitable future attitude of a man of his profound convictions to the Socialist movement, seems to have been fully appreciated by the journalists of capitalism, for, with few exceptions, they found it convenient to ignore the speech. So long as Prof. Herron presented to the people his high ideals—and no man living has purer ideals than he—there was scarcely any limit to the space given his utterances. But now, when after years of serious preparation for bearing a practical part in the arena where all questions are decided in this country, still holding to his ideals, he declares for action, the overthrow of the capitalist system, and proclaims the co-operative commonwealth, the truculent penmen find a sudden pressure on their space, and his speeches are thrown out. It makes a vast difference to the apologists of capitalism whether one regards the social problem from the academical point of view or from that of the masses who feel the galling chains of oppression and struggle to cast them off. The one is a harmless speculator to be tolerated, the other a menace to property and to institutions maintained to conserve property, therefore an object for derision or neglect. But all history proves that the tactics of oppression ultimately prove futile and react upon those who use them.

In addition to his address before the Social Reform club, Prof. Herron spoke at Dr. Rainsford's church, the Get-Together club, and wrote an article published by the New York World. In the latter he distinctly declared against Bryan and the Democratic party. He said:

"Bryan's election will not help conditions. His election would not help solve the social problem. Anti-trust legislation is child's play. In the white house his hands would be tied. Bryan does not understand the great social economics of the present day."

Prof. Herron strongly insists in the World article that existing politics must be overturned, and says:

"There is no remedy but a changed economic system."

A system that enables one man or a set of men to starve thousands at his will, this is the disclosure that will awaken the masses, this is the rapidly approaching climax to which Social Democrats direct attention, and Prof. Herron says "the result is inevitable."

More than this it is unnecessary to say to convince Social Democrats that ere many months have come and gone this man who has done so much to awaken the social conscience to the dangers that threaten society and is so admirably equipped for effective appeal to the people to avert the storm by intelligent, collective action, will find comradeship and a welcome and a place to work in the Social Democratic party.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Who are the prosperous? Well, there's the Standard Oil company, with a prospective dividend this year of 45 per cent; and for last year, the Central Trust, 263; Farmers' Loan and Trust, 88; New York Life Insurance and Trust, 80; Union Trust, 78; Mercantile Trust, 44; Continental Trust, 41; Guaranty Trust, 40. And while this sort of thing is going on the workingman who is sure of a dollar and a half a day for the year round is exceptionally fortunate. And this is the sort of thing most workingmen vote for—prosperity for the rich and those who speculate to get rich and a mere subsistence for themselves.

F. W. Reitz, the Transvaal state secretary, has written a parody upon Mr. Kipling's "Recessional." It is entitled "Progressional" and is dedicated to "Mudyard Pipling." The first stanza follows:

Gods of the jingo, brass and gold,
Lords of the world by right divine,
Under whose baneful sway they hold
Dominion over mine and thine—
Such lords as these have made them rotten,
They have forgotten. They have forgotten.

The teachers' organizations of Chicago are in favor of quitting work when the appropriations for their wages become exhausted. They think there is no justice in requiring their services without remuneration. And we think so, too; but it seems rather a funny position for teachers to be in. As a class they are arrogantly patriotic and indifferent to the struggle of other people who work for wages. Wonder if they will learn anything from the cut in their wages, due to the tax-dodging corporations?

The Pullman Sleeping-Car company wants to build a monumental school in honor of the individual who caused the strike of 1894, and in order that it may be able to do so in a manner worthy of the great labor oppressor, a 20 per cent cut has been ordered in the wages of its sleeping-car conductors. Such a canting, hypocritical outfit, with enormous wealth at its command, deserves to be wiped off the face of the earth in order that decent people may breathe freely and enjoy life.

Senator Thurston has accepted employment with the Standard Oil company, and will represent that corporation in the senate for the next year. Senator Depew is a director of the Western Union Telegraph, so is Secretary Hay. All three are Republicans and supposed to be representatives and servants of the people. But they really represent capitalism and are serving the corporations.

A record-breaking meeting is what Comrade Debs had at New Orleans. For two hours and a half, says the Daily Picayune, he spoke to an audience that overflowed Washington Artillery hall, and it was the great popular demonstration in the history of the city. All classes of men and women heard him and applauded to the echo his eloquent presentation of Socialism.

Mark Hanna's organized raid on the public treasury for $20,000,000 to promote the building of ships to be privately owned is getting along very nicely and promises to go through. Hanna is a Republican and the closest personal friend of that esteemed patriot and friend of the working class, William McKinley.

It is really too bad that Mr. Roberts of Utah ever tried to break into our moral congress. He seems to have been quite unaware of the high Christian character of the political tools of capitalism at Washington.

A bible trust and a raise in prices owing to increased cost of production is the latest phase of the industrial question with which the gospel promulgators have to deal. It's all an economic question from whatever point of view you regard it.

Since a union of all the "reform forces" to support Bryan is impossible, all who believe in the order of society that Socialists propose will vote for Socialism this year.

WHAT JOHN RUSKIN SAID AND WROTE

The true veins of wealth are purple, not in rock, but in flesh. The final outcome and consummation of all wealth is in producing as many as possible full-breathed, bright-eyed and happy-hearted human creatures.

You were ordered by the founder of your religion to love your neighbor as yourself. You have founded an entire science of political economy on what you have stated to be the constant instinct of man—the desire to defraud his neighbor.

Luxury at present can only be enjoyed by the ignorant. The cruelest man living could not sit at his own feast unless he sat blindfolded. Raise the veil boldly! Face the light! And if, as yet, the light of the eye can only be through tears, go thou forth weeping!

Dick Turpin is blamed (suppose) by some plain-minded person for consuming the means of other people's living. "Nay," says Dick to the plain-minded person, "observe how beneficently and pleasantly I spend whatever I get!" "Yes, Dick," persists the plain-minded person, "but how do you get it?" "The question," says Dick, "is insidious and irrelevant."

The guilty Thieves of Europe, the real sources of all deadly war in it, are the Capitalists—that is to say people who live by percentages or the labor of others; instead of by fair wages for their own. All social evils and religious errors arise out of the pillage of the laborer by the idler; the idler leaving him only enough to live on (and even that miserably), and taking all the rest of the produce of his work to spend in his own luxury, or in the toys with which he beguiles his idleness.

I have been asked to contribute to the purchase of the Alexandra Park, and I will not; and beg you, my working readers, to understand, once for all, that I wish your homes to be comfortable, and refined; and that I will resist, to the utmost of my power, all schemes founded on the vile modern notion that you are to be crowded into kennels till you are nearly dead, that other people may make money by your work, and then taken out in squads by tramway and railway, to be revived and refined by science and art. Your first business is to make your homes healthy and delightful; then, keep your wives and children there, and let your return to them be your daily "holy-day."

We, of the so-called "educated" classes, who take it upon us to be the better and upper part of the world, cannot possibly understand our relations to the rest better than we may where actual life may be seen in front of its Shakespearean image, from the stalls of a theater. I never stand up to rest myself, and look round the house, without renewal of wonder how the crowd in the pit, the shilling gallery, allow us of the boxes and stalls to keep in our places! Think of it;—those fellows behind there have housed us and fed us; their wives have washed our clothes, and kept us tidy;—they have bought us the best places,—brought us through the cold to them; and there they sit behind us, patiently, seeing and hearing what they may. There they pack themselves, squeezed and distant, behind our chairs;—we, their elect toys and pet puppets, oiled and varnished, and incensed, lounge in front, placidly, or for the greater part, wearily and sickly contemplative.

Fort Smith (Ark.) Democrat.
Socialism is the hope of the just man in things governmental. When we have a socialist government many abuses now existing will depart. We shall get the benefit of the corporate trust and not its extortion. We shall get the good of a monopoly and not the effect of its rapacity. We shall profit, for we shall run trusts ourselves.

WHAT THE EDITORS SAY

Public Ownership, Erie, Pa.
Quitting work and being starved into submission will never solve the trouble between the masters and the men. Not quitting, but working and keeping all the products of their labor is what will solve it. The miners of Pennsylvania are now engaged in trying to starve the mine owners into submission. And at the last election they voted all their power into the hands of the masters! They never will get relief until they learn better than that.

Farmers' Review, Bonham, Tex.
We must have united labor for the advantage of every human being, and united enjoyment of the fruits of labor. The present injustice can only be abolished by labor working for itself instead of for the idle rich, who make profit off of labor. Labor should reap the fruits of labor and not a few idle capitalists. This can only be done by labor owning all the machinery, all the land, in fact all means of production and distribution. These opportunities should all be free for labor to apply its energies to, in the creation of the necessities of life.

Appeal to Reason, Girard, Kan.
So you think there would be no incentive for men to do the work assigned to them when the income were an approximately fixed sum, eh? Sure of that now? Well, how do men work today who have fixed salaries—congressmen, senators, postmasters? Do they see how slow they can work because they cannot hope for increase in pay or even permanency in position? Do teachers, foremen, clerks soldier on their work more than those in private employment? Do postmasters and letter carriers become drones and sluggards and lose all interest in progress?

Warren (Mass.) Herald.
Representative James F. Carey of Haverhill, the Socialist leader who was re-elected last fall, does the state a service by attacking the lobby directly with a bill which he has introduced, obliging each lobbyist to wear a badge inscribed "legislative counsel" or "legislative agent." The bill further forbids any person employed as legislative counsel or agent of any corporation, firm or person engaged in mercantile, manufacturing, transportation, insurance or commercial business to enter the smoking, reading, writing or other rooms appropriated to members of the General Court, or the halls upon which such rooms open.

Chicago Evening Journal.
The only change for the better in the relation of the people to the street car monopolies of which there is the slightest hope, is the acquirement of the roads by the municipalities and their management for the people. This is not Utopian, not beyond the possibility of accomplishment—though it must be admitted that Mr. Johnson himself has dealt it a staggering blow by trying to sell his Detroit railways to the city at a price scandalously above their value. Probably when the people get ready to take the street railroads for themselves they will find safer guides than Mr. Tom Johnson, whose principles shine so much brighter in the preaching than in the practice.

The Co-Operator, Burley, Wash.
"Non-partisan" movements are always one man movements. They grow up around some one man's personality, and their object is always to give political expression to his views. The views are always good, and the man who holds them is always a strong, self-poised man, lacking, however, in the essentials of political leadership, because egotistical to a degree that prevents him from rallying his following around a set of principles that are dissociated from his personality entirely, and will not permit him to see that a party organization is the only thing that in the long run can accomplish the purpose he aims at. It must be a party, and a strong one at that, that will put in practice the principles the mayor stands for, and he will find before he is many years older that his "non-partisan political action" idea is a delusive dream. If he would throw his support to the Social Democratic party he might be able to make an impression on things political within a comparatively short time—but that is not a Jones movement!

LABOR AND PROGRESS

The Pennsylvania Railway Co. on January 1 relieved from active service about 660 employees, as a result of the operation of its new pension system.

Stenographers at Memphis have formed an organization, with registry office and headquarters for the convenience of business men requiring their services.

Under the wire trust the increase in the price of nails since 1897 is 100 per cent. The increase in nailmakers' wages in the same period amounts to only 12 1/2 per cent.

Woodworkers' Union, No. 15, San Francisco, has passed resolutions urging the members of the International Union to support such political parties as advocate Socialism.

The intercolonial labor conference at Sydney, Australia, has adopted the following fighting platform: "To one adult, one vote; the national referendum for exclusion of undesirable races; and old age pensions."

At the recent municipal election in London, Ont., Canada, Fred J. Darch, the Socialist candidate, received 2,419 votes, against 2,638 for the coalition ticket. David Ross, Socialist alderman in Ward 3, was elected.

A glass factory has been started at St. Helens, in which the whole system of blowing is replaced by an automatic arrangement of molds and blow-pipes worked by compressed air. The output has been much increased.

An English commission is busily engaged in investigating and preparing a report on the automatic coupling of railroad cars, as the percentage of injury and death caused by the present system has been so great a reform in the system has been demanded.

The Ohio miners declared for Socialism and the Associated Press suppressed the news. They declared in favor of "harmonizing with the economic emancipation movement of the world, whereby finally through political and legal means the present planless production, industrial warfare and social disorder is to be substituted by the co-operative commonwealth, and all means of production shall be owned collectively and operated scientifically by the people."

ANOTHER PRIZE OFFERED

Last week the announcement was made of three prizes offered by Comrade Albert Forman, of Milwaukee, for the three largest lists of new subscribers to The Herald sent in between February 1st and April 30th. The Forman prizes are as follows:

For the Largest List—One set of Carlyle's "French Revolution" and Dickens' complete works in fifteen volumes.

Second List—One set of Carlyle's "French Revolution" (two volumes).

Third List—One set of Carlyle's "French Revolution" (two volumes).

Comrade Geo. H. Goebel, of Philadelphia, believes this is a good way to increase The Herald's circulation and endorses Forman's initiative with the offer of a fourth prize of a first-class fountain pen for the fourth largest list.

Now let everybody hustle three months for The Herald.

NEW BRANCHES

The signs of the times, to eyes that are open to see, are multiplying upon every hand, and at no time since the organization of the Social Democratic party has there been so much activity or more substantial cause for encouragement to the comrades than now.

Not the least important event of the past week was a public declaration of Socialism by Prof. George D. Herron, and if the comrades will read between the lines they will doubtless discover suggestions as to what will probably be Prof. Herron's line of action on his return to the United States.

The month of January was one of marked growth in the membership of the organization, and when, as in this issue of The Herald, we report one branch a day, it will be seen that if this rate of new branches instituted is maintained, the whole country will soon be alive with Socialist activities. All the branches reported below start the work with enthusiasm and a determination to make themselves felt in the communities where they stand for emancipation from wage slavery and the inauguration of international Socialism. Not a day should be lost in effecting the organization of more branches and the affiliation of unattached Socialists with the Social Democratic party. The new branches are as follows:

BOSTON, MASS.—Chairman, H. A. Goodwin; secretary, A. G. Clifford; financial secretary, W. E. Tibbitts; treasurer, H. A. Goodwin.

ROSLINDALE, MASS.—Chairman, T. Goetz; secretary, Gustav Oberacker; financial secretary, Andrew Seidel.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—Chairman, John Bettendorf; vice-chairman, Christ Stein; secretary, Jacob Reidenback; treasurer, Joseph Korbel; organizer, Henry Zens.

OMAHA, NEB.—Chairman, Clement Ryan; vice-chairman, James S. Collins; secretary, Walter M. Breen; treasurer, Joseph T. Miller; organizer, T. A. Edwards.

HIGBEE, MO.—Chairman, O. D. Wallace; vice-chairman, J. S. Watkins; secretary, Adam Young; treasurer, William McDonald; organizer, William Richards.

MANITOWOC, WIS.—Chairman, R. W. Burke; vice-chairman, John W. Steible; secretary, Joseph Spevacek; treasurer, Charles Frisemuth; organizer, Fred M. Althen.

WASHINGTON, MO.—Chairman, E. V. Mealer; vice-chairman, J. C. Eklers; secretary, S. K. Caldwell; treasurer, C. Hollmann; organizer, A. H. Vitt.

Washington on the Watch

What we want is organizers in the field to boom our party and to put them in the field it requires money.

Now, we have talked this matter up here amongst ourselves and the boys are willing to do their share towards this work. We have found eight comrades that have agreed to contribute $1 per month for an organizer for the state of Washington, and I think we will be able to raise more than that per month. With the support of Seattle and other towns in the state we ought to have an organizer in the field all the time.

Frank Callahan.

Look Out for Swindlers

At the last regular meeting of the Evansville branch the following resolution was introduced and unanimously adopted:

Whereas: It has come to our knowledge that certain unscrupulous persons, calling themselves Social Democrats, have collected money in this city for the purpose, and that they have failed to devote the money to the purpose for which it was collected; therefore, be it

Resolved: That the public of this city be and hereby is warned not to pay any money to any persons claiming to be Social Democrats unless such persons shall first produce his membership card in this branch and shall by it be shown to be a member in good standing; and be it further

Resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Social Democratic Herald for publication therein.

Branch 7, Indiana.

Measures Introduced

In the Massachusetts house Representative MacCartney of Rockland introduced a bill to change the designation of the Democratic Social Party on official ballots to the Social Democratic Party; also a resolve to provide for the submission to the people, at the next state election, of the Boston & Albany railroad lease to the New York Central railroad, and the question whether the state shall own and operate the road.

Representative Carey of Haverhill introduced a bill to prohibit corporations requiring their employees to give bonds to cover damages or injuries suffered by such employee; also a bill giving any person except peddlers, book-agents, upon commercial business, the right to a private interview during working hours.

From Terry Hut

Although the comrades have not heard from the "Hut" for some time, it does not follow that we are dead or even dying. On the contrary, we are very lively in this part of Hoosierdom, and a constant agitation is being kept up all along the line, and scarcely a day passes that does not witness the surrender of some "Fillies." The branch is now holding regular educational meetings, and a committee has been appointed to arrange for a programme extending to the hot days of summer. Such questions as the class struggle, is Socialism a science? historic materialism, etc., will be discussed by the different comrades, which will be followed with questions from the audience and five-minute speeches from those who desire to take part in the discussions. We are adding some good material to the branch and weeding out some that have been a hindrance to us in the past. On the whole the outlook is bright for the comrades of T. H., and their work is just beginning to bear the fruit we have so long looked for. The branch has also put on sale photo buttons of Comrade Debs, and which can be had for 10 cents each or $1 per dozen. Those who desire these buttons can have them at the price mentioned above by addressing The Toiler, Terre Haute, Ind. The profit on the sale of these buttons will be used as a campaign fund for the municipal campaign next spring. We intend to place a full ticket in the field, and expect to give the cohorts of capitalism a jolt in the solar plexus that they will not forget for some time. Remember what "Merlin" says about the button. Send in your orders, comrades. Come early and avoid the rush!

James Oneal.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY AND TRADES UNIONISM

For the information of new members and readers of The Herald the following resolutions, adopted when the party was organized, are printed:

"Whereas, We hold the trade union movement to be indispensable to the working people under the prevailing industrial system in their struggle for the improvement of their conditions, as well as for the final abolition of the wage system; we further recognize the need of organization among the workers; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we commend an honest co-operation to that end by the members of the Social Democratic Party of America, by becoming members of the unions in their respective trades or callings, or of the Federal Labor Unions, and strive to organize all such trades as have heretofore not been organized and assist the organization of labor in every way possible.

"Resolved, That in order to more effectively resist the encroachments upon labor we advise organized labor to combine into national and international unions, pledging ourselves to extend to them all possible assistance to accomplish this end.

"Resolved, That we reaffirm the truth expressed in the proceedings of the International Labor Congress, held in London in August, 1896, that while it is absolutely necessary for the working people to make use of the political power in order to secure and enforce the demands of labor, yet differences of political views held by members of the labor organizations should not be a reason for separate organization in the economic struggle, causing dissensions and disruptions.

"Resolved, That we consider strikes and boycotts as historically necessary weapons to obtain the demands of trades unionism; we further recognize in the union label an important factor in strengthening the power of organization, and educating the public to demonstrate in a practical way its sympathy and assistance to the cause of labor; and we therefore indorse all the labels of the bona fide trades unions, earnestly recommending to the membership of the Social Democratic Party of America to patronize only such concerns selling products bearing the same."

A SPECIAL EDITION

"To signalize in an appropriate way the first national campaign of the Social Democratic party, the issue of The Herald for March 17 will be a special eighth-page paper of extraordinary value to the movement. It will contain the most complete exposition of Socialism in all its phases we have ever attempted to present to our readers, together with portraits of writers and of our candidates for president and vice-president who will be nominated at the Indianapolis convention; also a vast amount of interesting information about the Socialist movement in general, making it a paper for effective propaganda and a worthy opening of the great campaign for Social Democracy. We want the comrades in every branch to assist in putting a copy of this number of The Herald into the hands of all their friends. We shall be obliged to charge 1 cent per copy in bundle orders, but this is a small item for consideration in these times and on the eve of our first campaign. Every branch can raise a purse, large or small, for the purpose of carrying the good news of Socialism to the homes of those who do not yet understand it. Orders for this special number may be sent in, with cash, at any time up to March 12. We know of nothing more important than that the branches immediately after the national convention devise ways and means to attract the attention of the people at large to our candidates and our principles, and The Herald for March 17 will be just the thing. Don't pass this by till later, but take it up now and give it your best support.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

There are now eight branches well organized in Boston.

Comrade William Horgan is actively at work preparing the way for organization in Chicago.

Comrade Victor L. Berger has visited Brockton, Haverhill, Boston and other places in Massachusetts.

Comrades F. O. MacCartney and Howard Gibbs were speakers at a meeting at North Abington, Mass.

Prof. Geo. D. Herron left New York Wednesday morning, Jan. 24, on the steamship Augusta Victoria for Europe.

Comrade Leonard D. Abbott speaks before the Printers' Club of New York, Feb. 21, on "Art and Socialism in England."

Comrade H. Gaylord Wilshire is announced to lecture before the branch at Los Angeles, March 4, on "The Danger of Thrift."

Old Missouri has "moved." She is setting a hot pace for other states. Hoehn and Putnam make a warm team and are watching the run with great satisfaction.

The Los Angeles branch, at a meeting held January 21, adopted a resolution welcoming all members of the antileon S. L. P., but strongly opposing any change of name, which would be detrimental to the best interests of the cause of Socialism.

A fact worth noting is that the new branch organized at Washington, Mo., by Comrade Hoehn, consists wholly of farmers. This is the first farmers' branch in the country, and we hope it will prove to be the forerunner of a thousand. This, by the way, is another sign of the times.

If fifty Social Democrats will hustle lively during the next ten days for new subscribers to the Appeal to Reason, that band can be won for this city. G. H. Merridith, 3501 Wabash avenue, authorizes us to say that he will be one of a hundred to contribute $1 to cinch that band. If you want to co-operate with him, drop him a postal card.

Resolutions commemorative of the life and work of Comrade Henry Lenarz, recently deceased, have been engrossed upon the records of Branch 3, New Haven, Conn. Comrade Lenarz was a most devoted and unselfish worker. We extend to his family our deepest sympathy and to his co-workers our appreciation of their great loss.

Brockton's solitary Social Democratic common councilman will not lose his seat, a recount of the votes showing that he received more votes than did Mr. George E. Horton, Republican, who petitioned for a recount. Horton gained one vote and Brodeur lost two, and the vote as finally announced was Brodeur 323 and Horton 320.—Brockton Journal.

Branch No. 7, Evansville, Ind., will give a public entertainment at Weber's hall, Fourth avenue and Franklin street, Sunday evening, February 4th. Music will be furnished by Miss May Wytenbach, Mrs. Farrel, Bertha Hahn and others. Speaking by Dr. Ruminer, Russell Wytenbach and Mat Hollenberger. The public is cordially invited to attend. Admission free.

Comrade Eugene V. Debs during his visit to New Orleans was invited by Miss Lily Richardson, president of the Woman's Club, to speak before that organization. The Daily Picayune said his visit "is attracting the greatest attention from the thinking women of the city, and the representatives of all the prominent woman clubs and literary organizations have signified their intention of being present. The Local Council of Women will attend in a body, having been requested by Miss Sophie B.

The secretary of Branch No. 2, Vaclav Jelinek, 606 Blue Island avenue, Chicago, is authorized to receive contributions, and any assistance rendered will be gratefully appreciated and acknowledged in the columns of The Herald. Bohemian comrades can give valuable service by soliciting subscriptions to the paper, which will be $1.50 per year.

BEER DRINKING AND OTHER FORMS OF RECREATION

"I'll agree that drink leads men to ruin and poverty," said the carpenter to the Prohibitionist, at our last lodge meeting; "and yet poverty is not a result of drink. Does that seem to you a queer statement? How so? Have you figured out, from statistics on the liquor business, how many nickel glasses of beer and pints of whisky the workingmen buy in a year and how many homes that beer and whisky will ruin? Then look over your figures and see if you have allowed a greater per cent of the whole money spent during a year, for the expensive wines and drinks of the rich. Having done so see what a small factor this liquor business is in making poverty-stricken homes."

"That's good," said I, "but the profit system is the important point on this subject. Take the profit out of beer dealing and treating will drop out; many saloonkeepers will work at useful trades, the national brewery will make only pure drinks and will not encourage its use. No man will be able to buy enough to get drunk."

My namesake, Joe, the gardener, was the next to speak. "I'm not so sure," he said, "about the present form of government being able to do all the things you say. This whole drink business is a matter of recreation. Sir Lipton comes over to this country for a yacht race and spends a quarter of a million on the operation. That's his way of having fun. Another sport spends three thousand dollars on a race horse. That's all the fun he can afford. The next man, some of us fellows, spends a dollar, or fifty cents, on the theater. That's our fun; our way of forgetting business cares. Now the last one I will speak of is the man with a nickel. It won't buy much. No yachts, horses, bicycles, theater tickets, tennis courts, or even a ticket to the ball game. Yet this man needs recreation most of all. His work is the most unpleasant and his home the poorest. He must forget business cares and pains, and he has only a nickel. Well, that's all, men. He takes what his money will buy. It's just a straight question in economy."

I don't think even the carpenter had thought of it just that way before; I'm sure none of the rest of us had.

The meeting broke up soon after that speech, but before they all left I heard one of the boys say, "Nothing short of Socialism will settle this question and I will be a member of the Social Democratic Party before you see me up here again."

Forshoe Joe.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

Art in China.

Once upon a time the Goulds used tin basins to wrestle with dust. That was before they began to smash railways, and accumulate dust of another sort.

Lately, presumably in a revulsion from the plebeian habits of his ancestors, Gould invested in a European basin and ewer. The article in question evidently was possessed of rare beauty, as it cost him $14,000.

Bringing it across to his American palace, the government officials, in accordance with the law, charged the usual duty levied on decorated china.

Gould entered protest against this customary tax, and brought the matter up in the courts. It was a contest between legal right, on one hand, and moneyed might on the other.

Last week Judge Wheeler handed down a decision against the government, and permitted Gould to bring in his basin. The crockery, decided the learned judge, could be classed as oil and water paintings!

And so Gould, as the result of this brilliant decision, is spared the extra expense of $8.00 for the privilege of scrubbing his ears in a concave oil painting.

Your ewer.

This is no trivial incident. It is pregnant with lessons that should be learned. It is full of warnings that should be heard and heeded.

It was Gould's ewer, but it was your gold. No man has ever yet, by reason of industry and economy, been able to indulge himself honestly in a $14,000 wash-basin. The fact that some of you are not able to replace the old cracked basin you use by a new one, is coincident and explanatory of the fact that Gould is able to buy this bit of costly china.

Every pound of food, every yard of cloth, every dollar of rent, every ticket of travel that you buy contributes indirectly to the incomes of these princes of capital.

We are taxed that the rich might purchase their European crockery and we pay the tax. The rich are taxed that these luxuries might be imported into the country. They refuse to pay it, and succeed.

Why not imitate their example? If one man can resist a rightful tax, why cannot a majority of millions resist and escape an unjust tax?

The Social Democratic party, with some optimism, says we can.

Colts and Children.

At the annual meeting of the National Live Stock Association last week, Col. Henry Exall made an address showing the profitable character of colt-raising. He quoted his own success as proof of his assertion.

In marked contrast, is the case of George Simonds, of Boston. He was a tailor, whose marriage was blessed—an old phrase—with ten children. The family circle increased, until a dozen chairs surrounded the home table.

But all the father's troubles were not "little ones." The time came when he was unable to get work, and hence he was compelled to return, time after time, to his hungry brood without the means of satisfying their hunger.

At last, impotent, thwarted, foiled, he awoke one morning without the courage to face another day of disappointment, and thinking himself a hindrance, rather than a help, he swallowed a bottle of carbolic acid.

What hellish conditions have we when the man who raises colts makes money, and the man who raises children is crushed by the fact of fatherhood into failure and death?

Heart-breaks.

Dr. Seymour, a veterinary surgeon of Wolcott, N. Y., tells a story of a horse dying of a broken heart. When the horse died suddenly and strangely, an autopsy was made, showing that the animal's heart had been ruptured longitudinally. In looking for a cause, it was found that the horse had been suddenly separated from its mate, a young mare, and from the day of separation, had eaten nothing and had finally died, literally, of a broken heart.

How often, as the result of our competitive system of industry, are human beings forced from the side of those they love! How often are men compelled to pursue the will-o'-the-wisp of a job from state to state, leaving their wives and children behind! How often does the selfish negligence of the employer allow whirling wheels to permanently separate the husband from the wife!

If a horse can feel such grief as to break its heart, what must be the agony of the desolated human heart? Who shall measure the sorrow of the one who mourns beside the corpse of a loved one stricken by the plague of poverty? Who shall compute the guilt of that one who, seeing the hearts broken by the cruel wheels of capitalism, persists in pushing them around?

The Criminality of Riches.

The rich are not to be blamed for the evils caused by the system that made them rich. Wealth is not a guarantee of vice, any more than poverty is a badge of virtue.

Still, while we must blame the mass, instead of the class, there are still indictments against the rich, strong enough to deprive all of them of the title to virtuous life.

A house is burning. The flames creep from floor to floor, breathing death at every lurid breath. The inmates rush to the upper windows and shriek for help. A ladder leans against a neighboring house. With it the endangered ones may be saved. The owner refuses its use. The flames spread. "The ladder cannot be used. It is mine. It will be burnt." The walls fall. The flames gush forth. The victims perish. And the man's ladder is unhurt.

So today the flames of poverty endanger a multitude of lives. In many cases there is no choice save starvation or suicide. Every paper chronicles a case of one or the other.

The millionaire has a ladder of wealth which might save thousands. Every millionaire represents 20,000,000 loaves of bread. That means a solid pyramid of bread 100 feet square, and 500 feet high.

Now, when thousands are starving, I say that no man has any moral right to retain, in his private greed that which is essential to the life of his fellow men. He has a legal "right," but it is a right he exercises at the cost of character and conscience.

Sometime we shall apply the law of eminent domain, not only to real estate, but to wealth as well.

Blind Man's Buff.

A one-time socialist, now a "reformer" a la "The Golden Rule," who has extinguished his socialist lantern in order to make money in the dark, gives utterance to the opinion that nothing can be done for Socialism so long as times are so prosperous! He says that money is so easily got, and that everybody in New York has a job!

In the words of Dooley, I can only say "The divvie he has!" Last week a man in New York found a two-dollar bill. He rushed to a restaurant, ordered a meal, and in his ravenous hunger choked to death.

The aforesaid opinion reminds me of an expression of a wealthy clergyman, who said he had lived in New York for five years and had only seen two cases of poverty in that time. He evidently lived on Fifth avenue, and was too lazy to walk.

The same parson, in speaking of the bonds of poverty, said he "felt no chains," and therefore denied the existence of any chains at all. The driver has no reason to complain of the steepness of the hill up which he whips his horse.

When a blind man declares that something does not exist because he cannot see it, it is not wise to accept his opinion as conclusive or correct.

Is Poverty Necessary?

But, to consider the assumption seriously, is it true that nothing can be done for Socialism, so long as men are prosperous, or fairly so? Is it wise to leave all effort looking toward the change of the industrial system until humanity shall have been crushed by the iron heel of poverty into a puttyish and pliable pulp?

On the contrary, I believe that the only hope of a peaceful and orderly solution of the question is to educate people in Socialism now. Otherwise, we shall be plunged into the horrors of mob rule, as the ignorant dash blindly for an unknown gate.

If all the prosperous will not listen to us, none of the pauperized can. You cannot talk sense into a starving man. You may urge him to do some desperate deed, but you cannot make him an intelligent believer in a just system.

It is an encouraging sign that so many of the better class of workers—financially and socially considered—are becoming active members of our party branches. It is a manifestation of that high ethical and moral feeling that is the mainspring of a true socialist's activity.

Merlin.

The Democratic party, which clamors for the annihilation of the trusts, had an opportunity to put that policy to the test under Cleveland. Did it do any "smashing" then? No, and it will not if the opportunity should occur again. But the opportunity will not come; and besides, the people are beginning to understand the trust problem—thanks to the Socialists—and they have serious doubts about the wisdom of trying to "smash 'em."

SOCIALIST'S VIEW OF BOER-BRITISH WAR

By Edward Carpenter.

"But what they fought each other for I could not well make out."

Yes, what are we fighting about? The Dutch are our nearest neighbors on the continent—nearest by ties of blood, language, customs and traditions. Amity has always prevailed between the English and Dutch peoples, bound together as they are in Europe by a common tradition of liberty and independence. Why then are we fighting each other in Africa? What are we fighting about?

This question has never been answered. We are plunged in war. The soil of Africa runs red with the blood of Boer and Briton; but as to the reason—we have never had a solid one, or anything like a solid one, yet. Chamberlain certainly, in his cheapjack style, has slid from pretext to pretext, pocketing one and producing another with unblushing effrontery. At one time we were treated to "wrongs of Outlanders"—but then, unfortunately, Cornish miners, themselves Outlanders, came home and told us they had little or nothing to complain of; and it turned out that of the 21,000 names to the petition which started this subject, many, perhaps most, were signed under pressure or without the contents being known, while many were actually written down unbeknown to their owners. And so that matter fell through.

Then came the franchise. But the difference between a franchise obtainable after five years' residence and one obtainable after seven, obviously could not serve as an excuse for a war—especially for a government which at home opposes every spread of the franchise! So that was dropped.

And a move was made to the suzerainty question. The cheapjack, in his slippery way, alluded to the suzerainty, in his dispatches, as if we still retained a right to interfere in the private affairs of the Transvaal. But a glance at the convention of 1884 showed that we had abandoned that claim fifteen years ago, and that it could not be openly revived now.

So at last there was nothing for it but to hurry out troops to Africa, and say we were doing so for fear the Boers would invade us—for fear, as Mr. Stead says, that the lamb would eat the wolf! for fear that the little Transvaal, with a population equal to that of Brighton, would attack against the great British empire. That ruse was successful—as, of course, it was bound to be. And Boer and Briton are now in mortal combat.

But what are we fighting about?

Every one knows, yet every one is silent, because we are ashamed to say.

Just think for a moment of the situation. Think of these Dutch basters or boers (farmers) who emigrated to South Africa in the 17th century; and one of the French Huguenots who followed—some of the best people in Europe. They settled at the Cape; but the English coming there a hundred years ago, soon began to crowd them out. And so, in 1836, occurred the Great Trek. Harnessing their bullocks to their wagons, and putting their wives, their families and all their possessions on board, they tracked a thousand miles up into the interior, and made for themselves a home afar from the English, in an arid, unfertile land where before the wild beasts had been. If ever a people on earth made good their right to their land these people did. They loved it passionately—it was the Promised land of their wanderings—and they love it still. (Perhaps our people who have no land, cannot understand that!) And they will fight for it to the end.

They may have their faults. They have been hard on the Kaffirs and other natives, barbarous at times, but I doubt whether they have been so systematically cruel as the English. They may be narrowminded and old-fashioned in their ideas, but so far in the present war they seem to have acted more humanely than our professional troops. Religious, almost puritanical (for they descend from much the same puritan sources as we do), simple in their lives, loving their land, their cattle, their homes—they have only asked to be left alone in their own country.

Well, think of this people so living; and then think again of Johannesburg since gold was found there, since the gold fever set in—a hell full of Jews, financiers, greedy speculators, adventurers, prostitutes, bars, banks, gaming saloons, and every invention of the devil. Think of this people, these peasant farmers, not only witnessing with utmost disgust this open sore of commercial corruption, but seeing the covetous eyes of Rhodes and his crew fixed upon them for their undoing, and the certainty that ere long their land would be completely overrun. You see, if the boers had chosen to pack off the whole crew they would have had a perfect right to do so. (Think for a moment, if Liverpool were to be overrun by 100,000 Chinese, smothering our civilization, and introducing their hated customs and ways—what should we do?) They would have had a perfect right to pack them off, according to the very ideas of independence and freedom which the name of England has always stood for.

Instead of doing that Kruger and his people gave way. They climbed down from point to point. They offered terms of franchise, etc., most reasonable terms. But when, each time, our government evaded coming to a settlement, the meaning of it all became clear. It became clear to Kruger, it became clear to his people, it became clear to the whole world (except those among ourselves who were deluded by the press)—clear that if "the cry of the women and children" in 1895 was but a trumped-up excuse for the Jameson raid, "the wrongs of the Outlanders" and the other cries of '99 were only a pretext for another raid, and this time on a much larger scale.

So at last, and quite recently, the boers turned (our troops were already massing on the frontier)—they turned, took John Bull by the horns and declared war on him. They could do nothing else. Ever since 1895, and perhaps before that, they had foreseen these dangers; and had—and very rightly, too—prepared themselves.

And now, because they are prepared and can show fight, Chamberlain (having perhaps hoped that they would not venture to fight) makes his latest accusation—namely, that they have been intending this invasion for years, and that we are only defending ourselves against a deeply laid plot! (And yet after that we call Kruger a hypocrite!)

If ever there was a case of Naboth's Vineyard it is this one.

And now listen again! Commercial capitalism has been rampant in South Africa for years. Capitalism, the bloodless, soulless rule of companies, is bad enough here in England; but in Africa it is far worse. There is no public opinion to restrain it there; the Kaffirs and even the white wage-workers are at its mercy. Terrible have been the cruelties perpetrated in the diamond fields of Kimberley, and in the gold mines of Rhodesia. Kimberley itself, about which there is a good deal of sentiment just now, has been of late years uninhabitable except by minions of the De Beers Syndicate. A commercial tyranny reigns there, exceeding anything we know in England. Conditions in Johannesburg were rapidly drifting in the same direction. The financiers have been looking forward to complete control of the labor conditions there. "Wages would be cut down, dividends would be increased," said Mr. Hammond to the South African Goldfields Company, "by two million sterling per annum" as soon as the English obtained control. The Stock Exchange shouted itself hoarse with fiendish delight when war was declared. Rhodesian stock went up; the Chartered Company's shares rose from 25-8 to 41-4. Lies were circulated by a corrupt press; and a wave of silly jingo-imperialism swept over our land. And so in obedience to this money-mongering capitalism—our princes, our government, our official classes being all more or less entangled in it—we are fighting an inglorious war—a war to which there can be no satisfactory end, since with it the flames of disaffection spread faster than they can be extinguished.

HERE AND NOW

Stand not aloof nor apart,
Plunge in the thick of the fight;
There in the street and the mart,
That is the place to do right.
Not in some cloister or cave,
Not in some kingdom above,
Here, on this side of the grave,
Here should we labor and love.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

British Land Grabbers

One hundred and twenty thousand square miles of country north of Alice Springs, in the northern territory of South Australia, has been applied for and granted to the Lands Department Syndicate, London. Australian papers say that Mr. Chamberlain is up to his neck in this land-grabbing scheme, and that all his influence and that of the Colonial Office is behind the gang who now seem to have got possession of this vast amount of territory. The next step will probably be to bring pressure to bear on the federal government to build a trans-continental railway, and thereby enhance the commercial interests of the earth-stealers. The territory will be worked by black and Asiatic labor to produce goods in competition with the goods produced by the better-paid labor of the eastern states. This will be called developing the colonies, but the profits will belong to the London syndicate.—Labor Leader.

MUSINGS IN MY LEISURE HOUR

John Ruskin, too, is now out of the ranks of the living. There are very few left of the intellectual giants of the Victorian age, except the aged Victoria, and she is only a figurehead, varnished and gilded, made to look as much as possible like a real live monarch, and preserved in good condition by being kept out of use.

Poor woman! To the ignorant she is still a picture card. She is queen of spades to the yokel, queen of clubs to the "policeman," queen of diamonds to the snob and his helpmeet and queen of hearts to the country parson who worships God in heaven and the squire on earth. But she is always conscious of being nothing more than a card in the governmental pack, to be produced every time the political game is on, when the shuffling and dealing are duly completed.

Britanniarum regina! A doll playing the part of a queen! Well, it may not do honor to my Socialist heart, but I pity her.

I always did.

Years ago I witnessed in London the performance of an unusually clever ventriloquist. The fellow had a dummy rigged out like a lady, whom he made say all sorts of things, to the great delight of a large deception-loving audience. A day or two later parliament assembled, the Grand Old Man was to come out in a new part, having, like all modern histrionic stars, the chief monologue and the best part of the dialogue. In due time he appeared before the footlights and the performance began. Before, however, he started, he had the time-honored queen's Speech (a capital S, please!) blazoned forth. As I afterward read it I heaved a sigh, and speaking to myself I said: "Alack-a-day! Here is the ventriloquist and his doll over again."

To start with John Ruskin and switch off to Queen Victoria! This is another illustration of the old adage that there is but a step between the sublime and the ridiculous.

What was Ruskin? William Morris has unfortunately gone before him, and he was the only one besides Ruskin himself who could have given us the true definition. To us of the disinherited class who have been reared in poverty and brought up amid scenes of misery, squalor and suffering; who have all through life been divorced from nature without ever being wedded to art; who have seen no pictures but to have our eyes ache, as we have never listened to strains of music but what were in our ears mingled with groans and sighs—what are to us Ruskin's word-paintings? How can we understand his "Stones of Venice," his "Modern Painters" and all the rest?

"We whose right to light

Heaven's high noon denies,

Whom the blind beams smite

That for yet shine bright

And but burn our eyes!"

As Swinburne, addressing the rich, has put it.

But then there is, of course, the other Ruskin, the philanthropic sage, the seer, the workman's friend, the man who takes up the cudgels in behalf of humanity against the British school of political economy, the author of "Fors Clavigera," "Time and Tide" and "Unto This Last"—the enemy of humbug and the truth-seeker. Him we understand. We cannot help it. The ancients said that the Gods must have spoken the language of Plato; if so, Wisdom and Logic could only have used the English of Ruskin if they hoped to find a place in the minds of men.

But he is not up to date? Of course not, Ruskin, don't you see, was the connecting link between the outgoing and the incoming order of things. He was the early dawn that has not yet quite shaken off the night but is already a promise of the bright day to come. He was the April that links the warm fruit-bearing summer to the winter just past and gone, the winter with its gloom and chills and barrenness. He was the light-winged dove that left the ark and proclaimed the end of the flood. Him we understand and love and honor, while we battle for freedom and right.

NO INFLUENCE AT WASHINGTON

The correspondent at Washington of a Chicago daily newspaper directs attention to the opposition of private concerns to any attempt of the government to engage in any enterprise that would compete with their interests. The navy department wants an appropriation of money to build a plant for the manufacture of powder; but the powder manufacturers are making big profits by supplying powder to the government and oppose the plan. Millions of people favor postal savings banks, but they cannot get them because private savings banks are opposed. The parcels post has been urged and approved by the people, but the private express companies see in it a loss of revenue, so there will be no parcels post. For years a public telegraph system has been urged by strong delegations representing the people, but the private telegraph companies have more influence at Washington than the people, and there will be no public telegraph.

All this proves what the Socialists have long declared—that government is controlled by the masters of the economic system under which we live; it also proves that the people have no influence at Washington. And they will have none so long as the present economic system, which involves government by capitalists, shall continue.

GLAD WE CAN'T DO IT

We have received a beautiful political mosaic from Pittsburgh urging a union of Social Democrats with Bryan Democrats, Prohibitionists and other people having confused ideas of the social problem, "to win Nov. 6." We can't do it. Fact is, we don't want union of that kind. If we did, the Prohibitionists and Bryan Democrats have made it impossible by uniting against us, as they did at Haverhill. Yes, with loud protestations of love for the workingman and a deep yearning to save him from the saloon, both combined with the Republicans to beat us. Perhaps the "unionists" are not aware of this. Another fact is that Socialists do not combine or trade with any party, however lustily it may proclaim its profound concern for the workingman or its high "moral" principles. There is only one escape from the tyranny of capitalism, and that is into Socialism, and that is something more than "direct legislation or public ownership of street railways," etc. Unless your etcetera includes the land and the entire productive capital of society, you are not favorable to Socialism. Neither Bryanism, Prohibitionism, Populism nor Single-Taxism stand for the adequate programme; therefore, save yourselves disappointment by abandoning the hope that Social Democrats will unite with any movement having as its objective anything short of the Co-Operative Commonwealth.

"UNPRECEDENTED PROSPERITY"

An "unprecedented year of prosperity" is followed by a winter of the usual hardship and deprivation for the poor, and the daily newspapers throughout the country are telling of great suffering among people whose poverty and wretchedness are due to inability to find employment. One Chicago paper appeals to the well-to-do to "give, give, give," and thus relieve the distress, and a Chicago merchant is giving soft coal by the half-ton to "deserving poor people," and thousands of such people, it is admitted, are in need of this help, after a year of "unprecedented prosperity." Many of those in need of assistance this winter are young married men who are compelled for the first time to ask for charity. They have failed for months to procure any sort of employment, have been living on credit, but the small merchants' inability to any longer carry their forces these young men to the extremity of seeking aid from public sources and charitable organizations. Poor men without work froze to death in the streets of Chicago last week.

Even property-owners, failing to collect rents because of the pecuniary distress of tenants, are seeking relief, and in Buffalo, N. Y., the authorities have been compelled to pay the rent for occupants of their houses who have not been touched by the "unprecedented prosperity." Women and children are found every day in every great city in the country sick and without food or proper clothing. Men, disheartened by failure to get work, are asking the police to arrest them, declaring that they are slowly starving to death.

But the other class—the class which appropriates the earnings of the poor when they have work—is wearing silk stockings at $10 a pair, and the great labor-skinning corporations are declaring dividends ranging from 40 to 400 per cent, and the country is enjoying a season of "unprecedented prosperity!"

THE S. L. P. CONVENTION

The convention of the Socialist Labor party at Rochester, N. Y., was attended by fifty-nine delegates, representing California, Connecticut, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Ohio and Pennsylvania. The subject of union with the S. D. P. occupied the attention of the body for one day, following the reading of a communication and greetings from our national executive board. A reply was adopted conveying the notification that the S. L. P. will communicate its views on the relation of the respective parties to the national convention of the Socialist Democratic party at Indianapolis. Resolutions were adopted favorable to union by a vote of 55 to 1, three delegates not voting. A committee of nine was elected to convey these resolutions to the Indianapolis convention and invite the S. D. P. to choose a similar committee, the two to act as a permanent committee on Socialist union until the question is definitely disposed of. The members of the committee are: Hayes of Ohio, Harriman of California, Hillquit of New York, Sieverman of New York, White of Connecticut, Barnes of Pennsylvania, Fenner of Massachusetts, Stone of New York and Benham of California. The comrades of the S. L. P. will be cordially welcomed at Indianapolis, and it is our sincere hope that the work of the joint committee on union may in due season be crowned with success.

A CAPITALISTIC WAR

All wars are capitalistic and have as their procuring causes the extension of the dominion of capitalism over the world. The Boer-British war is peculiarly so. It had its origin in an economic question—the desire of the British to gain possession of the natural resources of the Transvaal. Of this there is no doubt, and no amount of sentimental or patriotic gush, no pious asseverations concerning the purposes of the Almighty, and no hypocritical cant about extending a superior civilization can alter the fact. In this issue of The Herald appears the view taken of this war for the extension of the empire of British capitalists by Edward Carpenter, the well-known English author and Socialist. It is well that Socialists in America should know that the war has from the beginning been denounced as unnecessary and brutal by our comrades across the sea.

The controversy over the war in England has brought out a statement from one writer which throws a flood of light upon the whole question of militarism, and plainly shows to what purpose the burden of taxation is placed upon the producing classes of the world. It is for no other purpose than to provide privileges for a class of aristocrats whose lives are spent in dissipation and intrigue resulting in war and the legalized murder of people between whom there is no quarrel.

This writer says that the British army in its higher branches is a great social class; that the society from which British officers are drawn is "distinctly degenerate, due to lack of intellectual training and the dissipation and vice of the aristocracy." "The class commonly known as society," he says, "provides 99 per cent of the officers." He then declares that if England is to win this war it can only be done by the English democracy.

If the English democracy and the American democracy—the common people everywhere who do the work of the world—would organize themselves to seize the political power of their respective countries and put an end to capitalist exploitation, they would be doing more good for themselves and future generations than by killing Boers in South Africa or Filipinos in Luzon.

NOTES AND COMMENT

The bankers of New York had a banquet and wanted the ice-cream served in a novel style. Each plate was put up to represent a pile of gold eagles with milled edges and the stamp; the motto "In God we trust" was changed to read "In good we trust." That was more than the vigilant and moral officers of the law could stand and the ice-cream counterfeit of the coin of the realm was confiscated. If the bankers had only stamped the delicacy "In gold we trust" they would have been nearer right and the law officers, recognizing the appropriateness of the motto, would probably have allowed them to finish the banquet according to the menu card.

A writer in the Forum calls attention to the futility of anti-trust legislation by pointing out that the Sherman law of 1890 has been a complete failure for ten years. The reason for this is that the trusts have always been powerful enough to decide the choice of the attorneys-general under both Republican and Democratic administrations. The writer says, and of course Socialists do not believe it, that the Sherman law was adequate to reach every form of combination or monopoly. The Sherman law never was meant for anything more than a vote catcher, just as the Republican and Democratic anti-trust clamor now is. There is not a Republican or Democratic politician living who really believes the trusts can be disbanded; but they must have votes, hence the talk of regulating or smashing the trusts.

One of the pretenses for war set up by Great Britain was the excessive taxation put upon food by the Boers in order that a corrupt and riotous government might wallow in wanton luxury at the expense of the unhappy outlanders. What are the facts? Keir Hardie says in the Labour Leader that, in common with every colony in South Africa, the Transvaal republic has its customs tariff, but it is the lowest on the Dark Continent. Comrade Hardie gives the following comparison between the Transvaal and Cape Colony (British):

Taxes per 100 lbs.	Cape Colony (British).	Transvaal Republic.
Butter	£1 5 0	£0 5 0
Cheese	1 5 0	0 5 0
Coffee	0 12 6	0 2 6
Sugar	3 6 8	0 2 6
Soap	0 4 2	0 5 0

The assassination of Goebel in Kentucky is the logical outcome of a system of politics that is dominated by the interests of capitalism. Such occurrences ought to have the effect of opening the eyes of the working class to the fact that the real anarchists and disturbers of the peace in this country are the political tools of the corporations in both the Republican and Democratic parties. No really sane and unprejudiced man doubts for a moment that if the position of the two capitalistic parties in Kentucky was reversed Mr. Taylor instead of Mr. Goebel would have been the victim.

Socialists did not make the classes, be it remembered. They have been made by the economic evolution, and their existence in every country where capitalism holds sway is undeniable. In affirming the class struggle Socialists merely recognize the FACT. While the means of life are possessed by a few and the workers are dependent upon the few to gain a livelihood, there will be classes and a necessary struggle of classes.

What "cause" is it you want to aid? The Bryan cause? Then don't bother us; you are coming to the wrong shop. If you read The Herald and understand the language it is printed in, you should also understand that in sending your frenzied clamor for union here you are wasting both time and money.

Never hesitate to support a principle if it is right. You know Socialism is right. Don't wait for it to become popular before joining a Socialist organization. Unite with the Social Democratic party now and share with us in the great national campaign we will make this year for Socialism.

The answer to the question "What are the English fighting about?" is given in an article by the well-known Socialist writer Edward Carpenter, which The Herald received from England a few days ago. It is being extensively circulated among English workingmen in leaflet form.

The American Fabian has been eliminated from our exchange list by reason of suspension. The Fabian was in some respects an excellent publication, but so many Republican and Democratic journals in this country have adopted Fabianism that there was really no place for it.

Twenty-six millionaires legislating (for the people? nit!) in the United States senate. No wonder that all influence at Washington is monopolized by corporations and the tools of corporations, while the people who foot the bills are no longer in the governing business!

A woman living at Frederick City, Md., is trying to sell the Bible once owned by Barbara Frietchie, the heroine of Whittier's poem. The book is highly prized by the owner, but poverty compels her to sell it "to make my dear mother comfortable while she lives."

With all the brag and insolence of the military jingoes, it should be a source of real gratification to all lovers of freedom that the trained troops of one of the great military powers of the world are fought to a standstill by a band of farmers.

It is amusing to notice how some of the big trust managers insist that their concerns do not come within the provisions of any anti-trust laws. But suppose they did—what of it? Nobody doubts the ability of trusts to evade the provisions.

The most effective work that any man can do is to organize for the new order of things for which the Social Democratic party stands—the order that is to succeed the present state of political and industrial anarchy.

A Socialist in this year 1900 is a man who, understanding the platform of the Social Democratic party, votes for its principles this year and at all times, to emancipate himself from wage slavery and the tyranny of capitalism.

Members of the party are now selecting delegates to the national convention of the party at Indianapolis, March 6. Let no branch go without representation, though some sacrifices are necessary.

The poor are with us yet, as reports from every city in the country when the mercury is low clearly indicate. Where's your vaunted prosperity when people can't get employment enough to sustain life?

A curious but not inapt typographical error occurred in the Chicago Tribune a few days ago. It was in the narration of a Philippine war incident, the word comrades being spelled "comraids."

Free speech in the United States senate means speech that is in accord with the knavery and hypocrisy of the administration.

If "God is a Republican," as Mark Hanna said, one wonders whether He approves assassination.

AN OBJECT LESSON

By Charles Trench

There was a time, within the memory of men not yet old, when authors, statesmen, actors and men of science formed interesting topics of conversation in both the press and in society circles, but all this interest has been supplanted by news and anecdotes of millionaires and their families. We are informed, for instance, of Miss Shoddy's coming marriage with an earl or a duke, and that the fortunate couple are to set up housekeeping with twenty millions of dollars. Then the public is told about Mrs. Bullion's ball, the jewels she wore, and the great people who honored the occasion with their presence, not omitting the fact that the whole affair was a brilliant success and cost fifty thousand dollars.

All this is not to be wondered at, seeing that the orthodox press has degenerated into a mere tool to flatter and promote the gigantic interests of the moneyed power. Hack journalism now finds its most profitable field of enterprise in pandering to the vanity and greed of mammoth swindlers. No wonder that titled spendthrifts and scapegrace scions of nobility seek to retrieve their ruined fortunes by marrying American heiresses! What signify twenty or thirty millions to an American money king who can "jam" an appropriation bill through congress and obtain any amount he wants from the national treasury?

"The amount of money," says Prof. Davidson, in the Forum, "of which this country is annually drained in providing titled husbands for the daughters of millionaires is enormous. Such is the craze for title among the moneyed classes that no degree of iniquity will stand in the way of its attainment. If all the sacrifices which American fathers and mothers have made to buy titled husbands for their daughters were recorded, they would form a revelation so ignominious that it would not be believed. And after such a revelation patriotic Americans would hardly dare to look foreigners in the face."

It is not, however, the fathers and mothers of the brides who make any of the sacrifices just mentioned, but those fathers and mothers who struggle in hopeless and desperate poverty—a countless multitude of men and women whom protected barons can fleece at will. Never did eastern despots, in the olden time, hold their subjects more securely by the throat than do monopolist magnates hold the American people today. When King Oil, King Coal, King Meat, or king anything else wants to purchase a title for his daughter, or to reimburse himself for a bad speculation, he has only to increase the price on the commodity he controls, and the job is done!

What can the workman do under this grinding tyranny? A great deal besides scratching his head and dolefully repeating that phrase so familiar in every toiler's household: "Coal has gone up! Meat has gone up! Oil has gone up!" The way out of this wilderness of spoliation and robbery is straight. Socialism is that way. The power of the masses is unquestionable. It is only intelligence and determination that are needed.

Haverhill (Mass.) Social Democrat. The ubiquitous reporters of the capitalist press are nominating Mayor Chase for Congress, and we should humbly suggest that the Social Democratic party be given a voice in the choice of a candidate. When the time comes the party will name the man to make the race from this district and whoever he may be, Mayor Chase, or anybody else, he will be worth voting and fighting for.

LABOR AND PROGRESS

Mr. Ernest H. Crosby tells of a factory he inspected where the manufacture of cheap socks was carried on. The manager showed him 400 machines that did the entire work of making a sock without the aid of human hand. Twenty boys did the work necessary in oiling the machines and putting the material in place. The machines run twenty-four hours in a day, and only fifty boys are needed for all shifts. Five thousand dozens of socks are made daily. Under the old method this work would have required 50,000 men.

The Hamburger Echo says that the doing away with school fees, one of the demands of the Social Democracy, which has been refused in Hamburg, on the flimsiest grounds, has been accomplished in great part in the grand duchy of Hesse. Up to the present, 676 parishes have abolished it, leaving but 310 in which the reform is yet to be accomplished. In all the common schools of the Mainz and Bingen district the fees have been abolished.

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE

ADMISSION TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

YEAR OF EXPANSION FOR SOCIALISM

Nineteen hundred is the chosen year of American Socialists for the work of clearing away from the industrial and political problems the cobwebs of confusion and presenting to the masses of the people the complete and adequate programme of emancipation from the tyranny and hypocrisy of existing conditions through Socialism. Never in the history of the movement in this country has there been manifested among all classes of people, save and except the class which profits by a continuance of the "progress of slaves," an interest so great, backed by a desire to aid in some way the cause which proclaims the social revolution by the capture of the powers of government as the initial move, as now. The blind are beginning to see, and the blind leaders of the capitalist parties are discerning the sign that portends the beginning of the political revolution this year. "What does the Social Democratic party stand for?" is the question that is asked by thousands today, and it is being answered with good effect, as is shown in the weekly reports of new branches instituted in the various states from New York to California.

Everywhere it begins to dawn upon the minds of men who are heart-sick with the subjection of the people to organized greed, that the Social Democratic party is an attempt to realize a freer and a nobler life for those who toil. And as this conviction impresses itself upon the individual, he is moved to action and co-operation with his fellow-men to bring about the changes desired by the methods this party has adopted.

Last week The Herald conveyed the encouraging news to its readers that seven new branches had been organized and this was thought to be an excellent showing. Now we are happy to announce for the week ended Feb. 4 the largest number of new branches for one week since the party was started in June, 1898. The record is a most gratifying one and should give heart to every comrade and invincible purpose to every branch in the country. We have done little boasting, as our readers know, but we do want to say that on the eve of our national convention the organization is in splendid condition, not alone because of its actual achievements to the present time, but for the magnificent promise of the near future.

NOW IS THE TIME TO EXPAND FOR SOCIALISM! While international capitalism, with its policies of imperialism abroad and its continued degradation of labor at home, vaunts itself in the temporary possession of the world, let us be alert and active for the spread of the principles of international Socialism, pressing with unflinching courage the important work of organization.

Following are the new branches for the week:

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Mayor Chase has been chosen as delegate from the Haverhill branch to the convention.

Both McCartney and Carey are playing star parts in the Massachusetts state play at Boston.

Comrade William P. Lonergan has been elected as a delegate to the national convention from Connecticut.

On the evening of Feb. 16 Comrade McCartney lectures at Rockland, Mass., on "The Wage System as Slavery."

A new branch was sprouted at Scandia hall, Chicago, last Sunday afternoon. Officers will be elected at next meeting.

The Rev. Charles H. Vail spoke at Patchogue, N. Y., Jan. 30, and a branch at that place will be the result of his visit.

We have left a few copies of Imogene C. Fales' pamphlet, "Buffalo Conference and the Democratic Party," price 5 cents.

Branch No. 9, Milwaukee, elected Comrades Louis Arnak, Robert Meister and F. W. Rehfeld as delegates to the city convention to be held Feb. 12.

The People's Paper, Santa Barbara, Cal., is one of many weekly journals that run the platform of the Social Democratic party and endorse its principles.

All sorts of brief notes of meetings, personal mentions, future events, etc., relating to branch work or party matters are welcome and will find a place in this column.

Comrades J. F. Carey and William Mailly have been chosen as delegates to the national convention from the Merrimack valley branches in Massachusetts.

The Public Ownership party of Erie, Pa., has reaffirmed allegiance to the principles and platform of the S. D. P. and nominated a full ticket for the city council.

At Manhattan Lyceum, New York, Feb. 26, a reception and ball will be given the two Socialist mayors of Massachusetts, Chase of Haverhill and Coulter of Brockton.

For a new member Representative McCartney of Rockland is much in evidence at the statehouse this season. The reverend gentleman has ideas and is not afraid to give vent to them.—Brockton Times.

Comrade George W. Poague of Towner, N. D., was a caller at headquarters last Thursday. He will visit relatives in Ohio and Indiana for a month and attend the national convention March 6.

The Twelfth Assembly District branch of New York has expelled several members for "scabbing" by accepting jobs with the firm of Indig, Burg & Co., where the Brotherhood of Cloakmakers is now on strike.

The boys at Brockton miss no opportunity for a good time. January 26 they had a grand jubilee and concert with speeches from Mayor Coulter and Comrade W. P. Porter. The regular Friday night meetings continue to be a great attraction.

A joint meeting of the south side branches of Milwaukee will be held at Gambrinus hall, 715 Reed street, Feb. 15, at 8 p. m., to elect delegates to the national convention. All comrades are requested to be present to sign credentials of delegates.

Members of the Social Democratic party are now selecting delegates to the most important Socialist convention ever held in the United States. Upon its deliberations and action will depend in great measure the future of the Socialist cause in this country.

Comrade E. V. Debs lectured at Cleburne, Bonham and Greeville, Tex., and was at Tampa, Fla., on the 6th and 7th inst. Everywhere in the South his meetings have been unprecedented, the halls being packed to the doors and great enthusiasm manifested by the people.

Do you see how the West is moving? O, yes, it's coming! Will be irresistible before long, comrades. There's no doubt about it. Always remember that organization is our work. Comrades Gould, Rockefeller and others in the capitalist branch are doing the rest. Organize—organize—organize!

A large audience listened to an address by Comrade John N. Stewart at Somersworth, N. H., January 28, on "The Liquor Question from a Socialist Standpoint." Our correspondent says "the address created a favorable impression and was delivered in a manner to do credit to the Socialist movement."

Comrade George Koop, with the assistance of other Socialists, stirred up the time-servers in the Chicago Federation of Labor last Sunday. Koop is always on hand when there is opportunity to say something for Socialism, and what he says is never refuted by such people as tried to howl him down last Sunday.

Meetings are held on the first Saturday of each month at Hauselmann's hotel, One Hundred and Seventieth street and Webster avenue, New York. All persons living in the borough of Bronx wishing information or desiring to join should call on or address George Finger, 942 East One Hundred and Sixty-eighth street.

These lectures are given at Arios hall, 341 West Forty-seventh street.

One of the largest meetings ever held for business purposes by Branch No. 5, S. D. P., of Lynn, Mass., was held Jan. 29, the event being the securing of larger headquarters and the election of officers. The regular headquarters are at 71 Munroe street, Lynn, Mass. The officers elected are: William H. Hitchcock, chairman; Fred Weed, vice-chairman; Harry Gotimer, secretary; L. Cunningham, financial secretary; G. H. Barrett, treasurer, and Harry Wright, organizer.

Arrangements have been made for a series of lectures on Socialism every Tuesday evening at Hull House, corner of Halsted and Polk. The lectures are under the management of Robert Hunter and a committee representing the Socialist Labor and Social Democratic parties. A. S. Edwards, editor of the Herald, is the speaker for February 13, his subject being "The Greatest Fact of the Century." February 20, Peter Sissman; February 27, Seymour Stedman, "Imperialism"; March 6, James B. Smiley; March 13, Charles H. Soelke.

TO BRANCH SECRETARIES

The work done by your branch would be interesting and oftentimes helpful to other branches. The Herald is the medium through which information is conveyed from one branch to another. Long reports are seldom read and not often necessary. But if you send us short, newsy paragraphs, telling what is going on—paragraphs that will fit in to the "Notes from the Field"—they will be always welcome and find a place and many interested readers every week. You are urged to attend to this, and if your other duties prevent it, then have the matter brought up in your branch meeting and the duty assigned to someone else. Just send us the plain facts about what you are doing.

To Our Connecticut Readers

All unattached Socialists in the state of Connecticut are requested to write Louis Schlaf, 26 Spring street, Rockville, for information concerning the organization of branches.

Have You Paid Up?

All members enrolled at the present time are liable for the current quarter's dues; unless these dues are paid members are not entitled to representation in the national convention. This is in accordance with the decision of the referendum.

The Prize Contest

Lest you forget, we again remind you of the prizes offered by Comrade Forman of Milwaukee and Comrade Goebel of Philadelphia for the largest lists of new subscribers to The Herald secured between Feb. 1 and April 30. The prizes are well worth an effort to win, and along with the effort some good work for Socialism will be done. If a thousand comrades will make a canvass among their friends the circulation of the paper will be greatly increased and Socialism made known in homes where it is now misunderstood. And the prizes will go to those sending the four largest lists.

First Prize—One set of Carlyle's "French Revolution" and the complete works of Charles Dickens.

Second and Third Prizes—One set of Carlyle's "French Revolution." This work is in two volumes.

Fourth Prize—One latest improved fountain pen.

Socialists residing in North Dakota and desiring to organize for effective propaganda work in that state are requested to correspond with Math. Eidsness, Towner, N. D.

Price of Gas Reduced

The Massachusetts state gas commission has ordered that the price of gas furnished by the Haverhill gas company to this city be reduced from $1 per 1,000 feet to 80 cents. This is the culmination of a bitterly fought contest started by Mayor Chase in the latter part of his first term and carried on before the state gas commission at several hearings. Mayor Chase had the assistance of Mr. G. W. Anderson, attorney, who has a record in cases of this kind, and also of Professor E. W. Bemis.

The reduction means a saving to the gas consumer of $18,000, there being 90,000,000 feet of gas consumed yearly in the city. That this will be of benefit to the working class goes without saying, as the majority of the consumers are working people, gas being largely used for cooking, beside the usual lighting purpose.

The case has excited a great deal of interest throughout the state, owing to the facts which came out in connection with the Haverhill Gas Securities Company, a concern chartered, as it appeared, to absorb the surplus earnings of the Haverhill Gas Company.—Haverhill Democrat.

Merrimack Valley Delegates

A convention of the Merrimack Valley Social Democrats was held Sunday, January 28, at 2 p. m., in Haverhill, Mass.,

at the hall of Branch 16, at labor headquarters.

The purpose of the convention was to decide on the advisability of the branches uniting their efforts and sending delegates to represent the valley in the national convention.

Comrade Wm. Mailly of Haverhill, who is editor of the Haverhill Social Democrats, was chosen chairman and Comrade Walter R. Pickering of Georgetown secretary.

Delegates were present from Lawrence and Georgetown. Amesburg was represented unofficially.

A discussion was held in which it was the sentiment of the convention that West Newbury, South Groveland and Merrimack branches would join with the rest of the branches in sending delegates.

A lengthy discussion was carried on in regard to the anti-DeLeon faction of the S. L. P. and the S. D. P. uniting.

The sentiment was that the union of forces for the purpose of Socialist propaganda was desirable, and that a union of forces for the purpose of fighting the DeLeonites was not desirable. A large majority favored retaining the name of Social Democratic Party in case of union of forces. The entire matter was finally referred to the different branches.

It was voted to elect two delegates to represent the valley at the national convention. Representative F. J. Carey and William Mailly were chosen as the delegates.

It was voted that each branch attend to the collection of its share of the delegates expenses, and the secretary was ordered to so instruct the branches which were not represented.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

Journalistic jugglery.

The interest excited in the forthcoming attempt to be made by the Rev. C. M. Sheldon to publish a "Christian" newspaper for a week is a virtual acknowledgment of the existence of un-Christian conditions in social life.

On every hand doubt is being expressed as to the possibility of running a Christian paper in a so-called Christian country. The press derides the idea as absurd. Even Sheldon's fellow-preachers declare in many cases that the thing can't be done profitably, if at all.

Sheldon has tackled a tough proposition. On the one hand he will have the well-nigh impossible task of interpreting and applying the ideas of the Nazarene teacher, and on the other hand he will have to dissect and analyze the entire structure of modern trade.

If he does both clear-sightedly and conscientiously, he will find that Christian principles of religion and civilized principles of trade are diametrically opposed to each other. Christ denounced usury and profits, while these are the backbone of modern business.

Sheldon must cut loose from business, if he be honest, and must cut loose from Christianity, if he be successful. Poor chap!

Christ or Christian.

This journalistic juggle, for such it will undoubtedly be, will at least have the effect of showing the antagonism between the religion of an ancient Christ and the business of a modern Christian.

To my mind there is about as much resemblance between the Christ of Galilee and the Christian of America as there is between a sparkling mountain spring and a pool of ditch water.

When I read the sermon on the mount and then think of the pious Rockefeller, the Sunday school enthusiast Wanamaker, the devout McKinley and the church-going Russell Sage, I see a gulf that even 2,000 years of devotion can hardly account for.

When I contrast the sturdy and outspoken carpenter of Nazareth, flinging anathemas at the oppressing rich, driving out the stock brokers from the temple, boldly championing the rights of the common people, to whose class he belonged, with the fawning, mammon-mastered ministry and the conservative, cringing and cursed church of today, I feel certain that Jesus has petitioned the authorities of heaven to change his name.

Exceptions.

There are exceptions to the above. There are cases, and not a few, where there are Christian men and women who display the conscientiousness and courage of the Teacher whose religion they practice. But these exceptions simply prove the rule.

For instance, in the last issue of an Illinois Unitarian paper appears the following: "Socialism is one of the studies in the Chautauqua course this year, and those who are so fortunate as to be reading this course are finding that Socialism is quite a different thing and a much better thing than is generally supposed, or than partisan definitions make it. True Socialism is but a modern phrase for an endeavor to apply the religion of Jesus to self-government. When Socialism prevails, public water works, electric lights, etc., will be owned or controlled by the city or the commonwealth for the benefit of the people, instead of by corporations for the profit of a greedy few."

Even in the darkness of an ecclesiastical night there are here and there Socialist lanterns that are shedding their light.

The art of theft.

A few days ago, a man chanced to attend a mission service in Boston. He was touched by the appeal of the missionary, and, going forward, publicly confessed his sins as a pickpocket and expressed a desire to live an honest life. A policeman was hurriedly notified and the man was arrested as a self-confessed thief.

And yet I notice by this morning's paper that the Standard Oil company has had the temerity to declare a quarterly dividend of 20 per cent! Though lacking in contrition, it has confessed its sins as a commercial pickpocket, and no policeman, parson or president dares dispute with it concerning its freedom.

What a pitiful system of justice it is that condemns crime by retail and condones it by wholesale. We punish the repentant pickpocket and allow the arrogant thieves of monopoly to pursue their criminal vocation unmolested.

What would you think if the government permitted a band of licensed thieves to enter and pillage your houses?

And why, in the name of common sense, do you, as part of the government, allow this gang of Standard Oil thieves to pick your pocket of 5 cents every time you pay for a gallon of oil?

It should be called the Standard Oil come-penny. The penny—your penny—always comes.

A Kentucky augury.

The political happenings in Kentucky the past few days do not tend to make a believer in democratic government very optimistic. The disgraceful scenes enacted at Frankfort will leave a lasting blot on the historical feature of the state and nation.

It is a dark augury of times to come. Whether or not Goebel was murdered in accordance with a political plot, which many are rightly fain to believe, certain it is that the Republican party used every method, fair and foul, to defeat its opponents and to prevent adjustment by legal methods.

We are accustomed to hear of the militia presenting a steel front against workmen who demand their rights, but it is a new thing under the American sun to see troops threatening to shoot down representatives who seek to exercise the high prerogative of their office.

If that is done now, between Republican and Democrat, what won't the money power do when it is opposed and driven to its last trench by the Socialist party?

I tell you, men, that unless we haste with our socialist propaganda and put our every energy into the work, the time shall slip by when a peaceful, legal settlement of social conditions may be effected.

After that, the deluge!

"Capitalism's Gravediggers.

The small band of Socialists who are exerting every energy to inaugurate Socialism is in reality only a fractional part of the forces tending in the same direction.

Every capitalist, every trust-maker, every industrial exploiter, is doing his part toward the destruction of the old and the upbuilding of the new system.

Here is an acrostic catalogue of capitalism's real grave-diggers:

Gould
Rockefeller
Astor
Vanderbilt
Every other such.

They are in reality doing the dirty work preparatory to the inauguration of Socialism. And their work is almost done. Get ready for yours. Merlin.

YOUNG JOHN SWINTON

It was twenty years ago, or somewhere about that time, that I sat expectantly in a well-filled, cheerful hall, in Providence, R. I., waiting for the appearance of John Swinton, who was to address an assembly of workmen.

I had been a careful reader of John Swinton's paper for a long time, but had never thus far chanced to see the editor of this same plucky labor sheet. It follows, of course, that I was desirous of doing so, and the occasion referred to greatly gratified me.

If the typographer and photographer report truly, I may say that the John Swinton of today is "ye editor of ye olden time." The same jovial mien, the same searching gaze, poised, proclamation air, and proud-to-be-protestor attitude—this is the John Swinton familiar to New York and its all-the-world suburbs.

And what is he saying now? Oh, that men who burrow under ground for coal for "us folks" above ground ought to get $10 and $12 per day; saying that large wages should be paid certain of my kind for the privilege of dying for you and me. Doughty old warrior! With what infinite satisfaction I read between the lines the fine sarcasm of the man who has given the best of his life and means for the "under dog," and who promises us a "leader" when the masses are ready to march!

Could anything be more adroitly done than this shot thrown to the thugs of our cannibal conspiracy called civilization?

Indeed may we all rejoice that the brave old dissenter still sits at his desk, as of yore, prodding the pirates of commercialism with a glee which may be felt across the continent.

We who live on the Pacific slope, on the very rim, as it were, of the Caribonado horror, take off our hats to the champion satirist of the Atlantic seaboard, and wish that he may live a hundred years and a day.

Rev. Geneva Lake.
Olympia, Wash.

One of the "reforms" to be instituted during the Rev. Charles Sheldon's editorship of the Topeka Capital is a big raise in the price of the paper to subscribers from 12 cents to 25 cents for the week. This may be in accord with Sheldon's idea of what Jesus would do, but it gives the whole plan an ugly money-making look.

OUR LATEST MEMBER IS A CAPITALIST

We don't know just how it happened, but we have a new member at the lodge—one who don't exactly belong to our crowd, and yet he wants to be counted in. Jay, as we call him, is a young fellow from the east and has just started a new furniture factory with $200,000 capital. He is also heir to three or four millions.

How he ever got into our lodge is beyond the understanding of all the old members, but we think he was caught by some of our reform ideas before he found out what they were.

Anyhow he takes to some of it, particularly what the carpenter has to say on Socialism, though he has some of the inherited ideas of his class that lands, money, tools and incomes may, by right, be inherited by men of one class if they come by them "honestly." At least, that's what he thought when he started with us. He said:

"Let's unite all these reform ideas and draw up a plan that will satisfy all classes. Not too radical, you know, but something that will lift the burden and give a chance for honest competition."

Since our last meeting he sees that such a plan is "in the air," but that anything short of Socialism is contrary to the natural evolution of industrial society; of the trusts and combines and the development of machinery; of educational systems and the natural desires of men who study these things.

"But don't be too hard on my class," said Jay. "I know you don't want charity, but still you must give us credit for the $63,000,000 donations to educational institutions last year in this country as against $16,000,000 to charity and churches. Only $3,000,000 went to churches, while $5,000,000 was donated to libraries and $2,500,000 to art galleries and museums."

"Yes," I replied, "and though college trustees try to stop studies in social reform and turn down professors in economics, it is not always the fault of those who donate the money. As for charity, it simply gives back to the producer a fraction of a per cent of what belongs to him, and helps to keep up the system a little longer by covering up the worst places."

"Just as a woman thinks her complexion is all right if she can cover the freckles with paint," said Jay.

"As for libraries and art galleries," I continued, "those are much better and are along the line of education, yet they reach only the middle class and wealthy. The working poor never get food, clothes, or any other benefit from them. They have no time to read or study art, and very few in a large city like Chicago, Philadelphia or New York can even tell where such public buildings are located."

"How about church donations?" asked Jay.

"These may, in some cases, be intended as donations to spread Christianity, but the actual result is a donation to accumulate church property. Of course, in order to hold such property, the organization must uphold capitalism and the government, for under no other system could their properties be secure. The government in turn gives them special protection and requires no tax to be paid on the immense holdings they have gathered about them. At the present time a high church official is selecting $20,000,000 worth of church property in the Philippines which he will require the president of the United States to give a clear title to, and that sum is just equal to the amount paid to Spain for the islands. Can there be any doubt which side the church property organizations will take; and are taking, in the evolution from capitalism to Socialism?"

"Well, I kind of think your way myself," said our new member. "I have observed that for centuries the mouthpieces of the church properties have been calling on the people 'in His name' to have their souls saved. And while a great many have answered the call, it still has been very unsatisfactory. Now, a few who have seen a vision of a better system of society on this earth, though a somewhat clouded vision, are again calling 'in His name' to rally round Him and save not only their souls but their lives, and a living. They altogether forget, or never knew, that each man has some power of his own, quite sufficient to overturn capitalism as soon as he finds out that it needs overturning. And then, as you say, all the interests of propertyholders, including church organizations, are in upholding the present system."

"You're all right," I replied. "There may not be 'much in a name,' but there is sometimes a great deal of confusion in a name and in the tyranny of custom that surrounds it. Otherwise there is not much in a name, and we must break away from any name that, through its wrong use during the past or at present, gives a wrong color to our work of pointing out the evolution of society. It may be that capitalism will appropriate the word 'socialism' some day, as it is in the habit of doing with all good names. First it was ignored, now it is respected. When it is feared, as a possible successor, will be the time when capitalism may try to swallow it. But our work will never stop for the 'want of a name.'"

"BE CONTENT"

Said the parson: "Be content;
Pay your tithe-dues, pay your rent;
They that earthly things despise
Shall have mansions in the skies;
Though your back with toil be bent,
Said the parson, "be content."

Then the parson feasting went,
With my lord, who lives by rent;
And the parson laughed, elate,
For my lord has livings great.
They that earthly things revere
May get bishops' mansions here.

Be content! Be content!
Till your dreary life is spent.
Lowly live and lowly die,
All for mansions in the sky.
Castles here are much too rare;
All may have them—in the air.

SCARED CROWS

There is not a charge made, by the malicious opponents of a socialistic state, as a result of their superlative ignorance, which does not exist under the present infamous system in a most intensified and unbearable form.

Plainly put, what is so much dreaded by these frightened people as certain to exist under a socialistic state, exists today under the present system, and just the negation of all the evils we now have, would exist under a socialistic state.

Let us critically look into some of the wornout statements advanced in the place of argument by the opponents of Socialism, who say that under a Socialistic state "all incentive to labor will disappear." Now is it not a fact that this bete noire so much dreaded under Socialism exists in its fullness now?

Is it not a fact that if the wage slaves were to produce one-half more per day than they have been in the 'habit' of doing, they would throw away this one-half increase of production, besides hastening the glut of overproduction and their loss of employment? Indeed it is plain that under the present infamous system "there is no incentive to work;" and this is the reason why in large plants, factories and in wholesale houses a system of espionage exists, the robber class being well aware that the wage slaves left to themselves under this capitalistic system have so little incentive to work that they would produce as little as they possibly could.

Now, under Socialism, the people owning collectively the tools and machinery of production, if six hours labor per day be needed to obtain a certain quantity of product, at the expiration of a certain length of time it may be found necessary to reduce the day's labor to five hours, as this would suffice to keep up the production.

And to those who think that very little product would be turned out during the hours of labor let them be reassured to this: That it is not reasonable to suppose that many workers would shirk from their duty when knowing that under a perfected state, they would receive the full product of their labor, as compared with the present system where they receive but a fraction.

As a matter of fact, the incentive to labor would not disappear under Socialism. On the contrary it would receive an impetus never before known, for honesty would not only be the best policy, but the only policy possible. The most completely developed incentive under the present system is the "incentive to rob," which could not exist under Socialism, as Socialism prevents a scoundrel from taking something which does not belong to him.

In using the word "rob" bankers, financiers, merchants and professional men are included in the same category as the highwayman. They, like other evils, being necessary, "social institutions" under capitalism. This assertion is correct. It is not an exaggeration.

It must not be overlooked that scientific men, investors and others who are now subject to capitalism, and are also robbed of a portion of their labor, would in the perfection of their future discoveries and inventions greatly improve the condition of all the people.

"Lest we forget." It was Chateaubriand who said: "The wage system is the last form of slavery."

Let us make it an "incentive to labor" to abolish it.

LEGITIMATE FRUIT OF CAPITALISTIC POLITICS

The following press dispatch furnishes a bit of tragic comedy:

FRUIT OF CAPITALISTIC POLITICS.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 4.—Gov. Roosevelt said today, regarding the death of Gov. Goebel: "It is to be regretted that such acts of violence can take place in this country, but at the same time our sympathy must be tempered by the realization that the dead politician himself established a violent and equally fatal precedent. If further bloodshed is to come, it must lie at the doors of those who conspired to accomplish by force what they failed to accomplish by fraud during the state election. Gov. Taylor is entitled to the heartiest support of every decent citizen in the United States in his effort to establish the fact that the will of the people expressed at the polls is not to be thwarted by shotguns and lawlessness."

We can fancy the serious, sober and solemn mien of the eminent rough rider as he delivered himself of this rare specimen of moral mosaics. Of course we have no part in the capitalist politics of Kentucky which had its tragic culmination in the assassination of Goebel, but the claim that Taylor—whose chief backer has been and is the utterly rotten and blood-smeared Louisville & Nashville Railroad company, for forty years notorious as a debaucher of politics and grinder of labor—is "entitled to the heartiest support of every decent citizen of the United States," is, in the presence of the horrifying facts, so ghastly and revoltingly ridiculous as to excite the wonder that even a Roosevelt could be capable of such an exhibition of asininity and mendacity.

The truth is that, deplorable as is the political situation in Kentucky, it is not a whit worse than in New York, under the rough rider's very nose, where Platt, the governor's political adviser, and Croker and their cohorts play the same rotten game of capitalist politics, but lack only, when quarreling over the spoils, the Kentucky courage to shoot it out.

There is no bloodshed in New York. The body politic is so rotten under capitalist misrule that blood will not flow—only pus oozes.

The Kentucky situation is pregnant with significance from the Socialist standpoint. It indicates unerringly the breaking down of the capitalist system. It is the politics of private property that is lashing itself out of existence. For years corrupt practices prevailed and all the capitalist parties engaged in it, and today the crop that has been sown to the wind is being reaped in the whirlwind.

Socialists alone can contemplate the picture with equanimity. The scenes that are being enacted in Kentucky indicate the Socialist conception of capitalist politics, whether Republican or Democratic. It is the strife born of the spoils of private property. It appeals to the basest and fiercest passions in human nature, and men naturally brave and noble thirst for vengeance that is appeased only with the blood of their fellow-men.

In all seriousness the question is being asked, "What can be done to purify our politics?" There is but one answer: Abolish the capitalist system of private property. As long as this prevails, politics will be corrupt, society will be demoralized and the world at large will continue a hell of horrors.

To the working class of Kentucky, as elsewhere, we make the appeal to cut loose once and forever from the capitalist parties, of whatever name; to abandon the sinking and stinking ship of capitalist corruption, and proclaim their manhood by joining the Socialist revolutionary movement, composed of men who are conscious of their class interests and who propose to achieve economic freedom and social equality by voting their class into power, and after seizing the reins of government, taking possession of all the sources and means of wealth production and having every department operated co-operatively by and for the whole people.

Look at Kentucky, then vote for Socialism and keep on voting for it without a flicker till we get it, and it will come sooner than you expect.

Jacksonville, Fla. Eugene V. Debs.

Eugene V. Debs is not only promulgating Socialist principles as no other single man has ever done in this country, but representative union men of the south declare that his work tells more effectively in strengthening the labor organizations than the combined efforts of all the regular organizers. Wherever he goes in the south his lectures are under the direct auspices of the central organizations. The Jacksonville Evening News regrets that the city had no public place of meeting large enough for the occasion of Comrade Debs' visit.

The convention of the Socialist Labor party at Rochester, before adjourning, nominated for president Job Harriman of California; for vice president, Max S. Hayes of Ohio.

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH'S ESSAY

One day last week, before the Chicago Women's club, a leading merchant of this city, Mr. Franklin MacVeagh, delivered himself of a ponderous essay, incubated during his leisure hours, on "The Responsibilities of Wealth," and told how society should guide the wealthy. As a contradictory, apologetic and half-hearted defense of his class, Mr. MacVeagh's essay is worthy of notice.

At the outside, Mr. MacVeagh said the source of wealth—that is, "the freedom, energy and enterprise of the individual"—must be preserved.

Socialists say that the labor, docility and slavery of the working class is the source of wealth; that all the learned talk about "freedom, energy and enterprise of the individual" is just so much cheap clap-trap, and that all of these attributes—enterprise, energy and freedom—are positively destroyed by a system which he said, further along in his address, "does not create classes."

Mr. MacVeagh said: "It seems to me we shall find some way to cure the excesses of democracy," and this he expects to do by still preserving private capital and controlling it by retaining a government from which the soul of democracy has been eliminated.

Socialists say that the only cure for the excesses of wealth is a purer democracy, based upon the social ownership and administration of industry.

Mr. MacVeagh thinks Socialism would not stand for the individual and that his democracy would. That is because he does not understand Socialism. His democracy is clearly behind the times, since it is not even aware of the fact that industrial evolution has created classes in this country, and is already defeated by the existence of classes.

Mr. MacVeagh said, "Men are politically free," but the struggle now on in Kentucky emphatically negatives his proposition.

Mr. MacVeagh said, "The right measure of individual reward is not established," and he comes no nearer suggesting a method by which it can be established than this—the inspection and control of capitalistic corporations by a capitalistic government.

Socialists say that the right measure of individual reward between one class in possession of the means of production and another class separated from these means is an impossibility.

Mr. MacVeagh said, "Wealth is poorer without altruism than poverty with altruism." This is the modernized version of "Blessed are the poor, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Finally, Mr. MacVeagh said: "Neither wealth nor poverty, neither labor nor idleness, will or can create classes in any real or important sense in this nation. Classes would defeat democracy, and democracy is in no danger of defeat in America."

As a matter of fact, the sort of democracy for which Mr. MacVeagh pleads has already suffered defeat in America. Scarcely any really sane man doubts it, and it is secretly admitted by plenty of men identified with the political party to which Mr. MacVeagh is supposed to belong. So desperate have such men become that it is no uncommon thing to hear them talk of a violent revolution. It is quite remarkable that in recent discussions of this all-inclusive question of labor so many who contribute to it should find it necessary to deny that we have classes and a class struggle in America. To the Socialist it constitutes strong presumptive evidence that, in spite of denials, the public is waking up to that fact and becoming conscious of the truth. For it is true that we have classes; it is a fact that we are in a class struggle. The mere possession of wealth, nor the mere fact of poverty, it is true, has not created classes; but the private ownership of the means of life, on the one hand, and the growing consciousness that while such ownership maintains there can be no other condition than poverty for those who are separated from these means, has done this, and the classes are as distinct today in America as in many of the so-called effete monarchies of the old world. The classes are not to be created; they are already here and they are here from necessity—the necessity imposed upon us by the inexorable law of economic evolution.

Against this evolutionary progress Mr. MacVeagh's democracy and Bryanolatry will struggle in vain.

MISSSES THE MARK

Private property in natural resources or social wealth has ever been the source of injustice and a menace to public welfare, and the suggestion of Mr. William M. Salter, at the close of Mr. Franklin MacVeagh's address last week on "The Responsibilities of Wealth," that "the great land owners should do much toward filling the public treasuries," while it may strike some persons as very wise, would, if carried out, only serve to perpetuate robbery, and is utterly inadequate as a solution of the problem for which it is offered. Under capitalistic mastery of the governing function, what are public treasuries filled for, if not to invest the capitalist class with power to exploit the producing class? The public treasuries are filled by taxation, and what is the result? Raids by organized capitalists, sometimes bold and aboveboard, at other times subtle and under cover, as the capitalist adventurers see the need for caution in the temper of the people and the occasion for their depredations. The public treasuries are full, and a capitalist custodian of the public funds depletes the full treasury by generously delivering to overworked and underpaid bankers millions of these funds to be used in speculation and stealing the fruits of the people's toil. The treasury is full, and the cormorants of capitalism organize a raid for millions to enable them to build ships and expand their commerce over the seas. The treasury is full, and $50,000,000 is placed at the disposal of a capitalistic occupant of the white house to carry on a war for no other purpose than enlarging the field of operations of the capitalist class. The treasury is full, and an expensive and unnecessary crusade is organized against a people ten thousand miles away to enlarge the kingdom of God on earth and (quite incidentally, of course) provide more slaves for plutocrats to pluck. The treasury is full, and a horde of expert cracksmen of the capitalist class attacks it with all sorts of jobs and jobbery, and the end is an empty treasury, a plundered people and—a new scheme to fill the treasury again, to be emptied again by the same processes.

All this is perhaps necessary in the passage from capitalist society and government to Socialism; but the higher ethics call aloud for something more than mere filling of the public treasuries. They call for abolition of private property in land and capital, the investiture of society as a whole with the possession and complete enjoyment of social wealth. Public welfare is not conserved by private property in a social inheritance.

BILL OF RIGHTS NULLIFIED

The bill of rights of the Massachusetts constitution says that all inhabitants of that state who are entitled to the ballot "have an equal right to elect officers and to be elected." Now it so happens that the Massachusetts bill of rights, which was intended to confer upon all citizens entitled to the ballot an equal right with all other citizens to "elect officers and be elected," has been nullified by the more-patriotic-than-thou Republican party. This has been done by enacting election laws that are hedged about with cunningly devised provisions the operation of which contravenes the bill of rights and destroys the equal right of citizens to elect officers and be elected. This is true not only of Massachusetts, but also of every state in the Union. The old political parties have been equally responsible in restricting the bill of rights of the people by systematic juggling with election laws to deny to anybody any rights whatever except such as they were willing to concede. Thus the provision that any body of citizens entitled to the ballot, instead of enjoying "equal right to elect officers and be elected," shall enjoy the privilege of being put to great expense of labor and money to procure signatures to a petition before election, is a political trick never contemplated by the bill of rights and in direct violation of its guaranty.

The bill of rights was not exhausted when the Republican party was born, and the odium of nullifying the right guaranteed to the people rests chiefly upon that party. In Massachusetts this highly moral and patriotic aggregation of capitalist lackeys has gone so far as to annul the right of a respectable body of citizens to have the name by which they wish to be known appear correctly on the official ballot.

The effort which our representative in the Massachusetts legislature, Frederick O. MacCartney, is making to have this injustice righted is, therefore, an attempt to regain in part what has been denied to independent people who do not wear the Republican collar, but is guaranteed them by the state's bill of rights which the party of great pretenses has flagrantly violated.

WHAT IS A DEMOCRAT?

A Chicago paper raised the question the other day as to what constitutes a "Democrat." That the question is pertinent at this time cannot be denied, for if ever partisans of any particular name had a wider range of conflicting opinion or an entire absence of opinion than the members of the so-called Democratic party, we have yet to hear from them.

The paper in question finds that leading Democrats are in direct opposition to what has been generally accepted as Democratic doctrine.

For example, Congressman Sibley declares himself for imperialism, for protection, against free silver, and is a Democrat.

Senator Morgan is for imperialism, for free silver, against protection, and is a Democrat. And there are others equally as prominent who favor Republican policies and are Democrats, while the rank and file of the Democratic party is quite as mixed in its politics as the public men named.

Congressman Sibley's case is a remarkable illustration of evolution in individual politics. In 1896 he was prominent as a free-silver advocate and favorably regarded as a possible candidate for the presidency. Many "radical populists" at St. Louis who assisted in the work of killing the People's party in the interest of Bryanism boldly asserted that Sibley was a "good Socialist." The editor of The Herald has a distinct recollection of a group of Kansas "radicals" in the Lindell hotel parlors hysterically proclaiming the virtues and the "genuine Socialism" of Joe Sibley. The truth is that Democrats are without principles; they are "any old thing" to get and to hold the public offices. There is so wide a range of opinion and no opinion among them that a definition is impossible.

JONES ON COLONIZATION

A few weeks ago The Herald undertook to deny, upon information in its possession, that Prof. George D. Herron was in any way connected with a new "ideal" community enterprise to be started in New Jersey. That denial was subsequently confirmed and the statement made in this paper that Prof. Herron had protested against the use of his name in connection with the proposed colony. At the same time we also discredited a report that Samuel M. Jones of Toledo was interested in the same colony venture. Since then Mr. Jones, in a letter to the Workers' Call, has given expression to his surprise that that paper in an article entitled "Advocates of Utopia" should have represented him as a believer in and supporter of the colony idea. In this letter he said:

"As for myself, I have nothing more to do with the colony movement than you. I repudiate it in toto as being unscientific and anti-Social."

Further than this Mayor Jones corroborates what The Herald said three weeks ago concerning Prof. Herron:

"I can say positively for Prof. Herron that he has nothing more to do with the affair that his name is connected with than I, and that he has no faith in the colony idea in any form whatever."

MORE PROOF OF PROSPERITY

The advance of 3 cents a gallon in the price of petroleum which the Standard Oil company made last December meant an increased profit on the 900,000,000 gallons which are annually consumed in the United States of $2,700,000. At the last regular quarterly meeting of the directors, held for dividend purposes, a quarterly dividend of 20 per cent was declared, equal to 80 per cent annually. The rate paid last year was 33 per cent, and this enormous increase in the dividend rate is doubtless due to the 3-cent increase in price to the consumer.

Here's evidence of prosperity for you. How funny it is! Most of the people who use oil and make possible such enormous advances in dividend rates have the most ignorant and confused ideas about how the great fortunes of individuals are made, never stopping to think that the dividends of the rich are wrung from their own small earnings.

Since 1882 the Standard Oil company has distributed in dividends $222,250,000. If that doesn't prove that the people are prosperous, what kind of proof, we would like to know, do the pessimists want?

CLASS-CONSCIOUS CAPITALISTS

The striking piano-makers of Chicago are up against a hard row of stumps. At the Kimball works the non-union men now employed are carried by the street cars to a point directly in line with the main entrance. The rule is that street cars stop only at street corners, but the class-conscious crowd who run the street railways and factories play into each other's hands, and the street-railway company accordingly stops its cars where the factory owners want their non-union slaves delivered at the gate. Then the city police are on hand to protect the men while they pass from the cars inside the works. And under the present system of industry these arrangements between capitalist corporations and the safeguarding of their property interests by the police are all right. The union strikers should turn their meeting places into centers of agitation for Socialism. So long as they support with their votes the existing order of things they will get just what is natural and logical in the system. The place to strike is at the ballot-box—for Socialism.

AN ECONOMIC REVOLUTION

It is a matter of special interest at this time to look back to the closing years of the eighteenth century. Just as during the past thirty years we have seen a new system slowly arise and prepare to crush the old; so in the century which closed with the orgies of the French revolution we saw arise a new system, which in time completely overthrew and did away with an older one. As at the end of the eighteenth century "the kingdom of capitalism was come, and Adam Smith was its prophet," so at the end of the nineteenth century "the kingdom of Socialism has come, and Karl Marx is its prophet." Just as economic individualism was Adam Smith's principle, and "Laissez-faire (hands off); away with all restrictions on individual enterprise!" became the war cry of his age, so "Hold off; away with all restrictions on collective enterprise!" is rapidly becoming the war cry of ours. Adam Smith simply expressed the instinctive spirit of his time. Karl Marx, in his writings, instinctively expresses the spirit of ours. Adam Smith voiced the long-delayed, inevitable revolt of individual economic rights against the outgrown restrictions of individualism. Karl Marx in his utterances foreshadows the inevitable revolt of collective economic rights against the outgrown liberties of unlicensed individualism. Today America is teeming with economic literature. The coming revolution will be an economic revolution, pure and simple. Its aim will be the establishment of an economic collectivism, for the captains of industry are here, and the capital is here, and all that any nation can demand is that those industrial leaders shall employ that capital solely to the best interest of the people.

All the great revolutions of history have been economic revolutions. The American revolution was an economic revolution. That monster upheaval of the eighteenth century which deluged France with the blood of its aristocracy was an economic revolution. Says one writer: "The French revolution was an economic revolution. Its aim was the establishment of an economic individualism. With all its blind outbursts, it never forgot this; with all its failures, it did not fail of this. The meaning of that era is summed up in one word—the application of invention and science to industry demanded large capital; capital must be free; the individual must be free in his enterprise with capital. The Third Estate revolution was not in the interest of labor, but of middle-class enterprise against feudal privilege."

J. T. Van Rensselaer.

Another Outrage

We are in possession of information from the Coeur d'Alenes saying that Gov. Steunenberg, in conjunction with the mine operators, have a petition in circulation, to be forwarded to the secretary of war, to continue the troops in that district permanently.

This petition did not meet with the approval of the people of the district, who naturally objected on the ground that such a procedure was unnecessary and was an insult to the people living in the county.

To the governor's surprise, when his deputies took the petition to the miners, even the permit men, who are allowed to work by the governor's permission only, refused to sign it. When this news reached the governor at Boise he immediately shipped the notorious Sinclair to the Coeur d'Alenes with instructions to carry out his orders.

When Sinclair reached Wallace he issued an order that all people who refused to sign the petition should leave the county. He then obtained the names of the men employed at the mines who refused to sign the petition and instantly revoked their permits and had them discharged immediately. Twenty-five men at the Tiger mine at Burke were discharged for refusing to sign, and a larger number at the mines in Mullan and Wardner were discharged on this account. Some of them were afterward told that they could return to their employment if they would sign the petition. This is American freedom with a vengeance.

It is doubtful if such arbitrary acts as this were ever perpetrated upon the people of any country—not even in Russia.

This petition will be sent to the secretary of war, and of course it is very easy to surmise that he will act favorably upon it, for the national administration from the day Gen. Merriam arrived in Idaho has worked hand in hand with the Democratic governor of Idaho in the interest of the Standard Oil trust and the other rich mining corporations.

This act proves conclusively that the military are to be used by the mine operators to reduce wages in the Coeur d'Alenes when the proper time arrives. This precedent, once established, will never be abandoned.

Knowing Gov. Steunenberg as well as we do, we have no hesitation in saying that he is well paid for persecuting the miners and destroying their unions.

There is nothing too vile for this man to descend to; he is utterly unscrupulous in all his acts, and from personal knowledge we can truthfully say that we have never known him to articulate the truth. His sole and only ambition is money, no matter how he obtains it.—The Miners' Journal.

WHAT THE EDITORS SAY

People's Press, Chicago: The schisms in the old parties are paving the way for the downfall of capitalistic oppression and wage-slavery. Now is the time to agitate, teach and spread the gospel of Socialism.

Social Democrat, Haverhill, Mass.: Congressman Moody is a much exploited man in the Massachusetts daily press the past few weeks. His importance is magnified out of all proportion evidently with a desire to impress his constituents in this district with the necessity of keeping such a shining light in congress. Mr. Moody will lose some of his reputed brilliancy when he has to get down on solid earth and meet the Social Democrats in the campaign next fall.

Public Ownership, Erie, Pa.: Mayor Chase, Socialist, of Haverhill, Mass., has forced the gas company of that city to reduce the price from $1 to 80 cents per thousand. Socialists never yield in their fight for the people's rights, and are able to accomplish some things, even single-handed. A mayor can do much more when supported by councils. The select councilmen elected at this election will hold over into the term of the next mayor of Erie, who will be a Socialist. Do you see? Is a word to the wise sufficient?

Appeal to Reason, Girard, Kan.: There is a general advance in prices, which is pointed to as one of the evidences of prosperity. And it does mean that the few who get the advance are prospering. There is one great corporation, however, that has not advanced its charges. Postage stamps remain at the same old figure and the employees are the best paid, most respected, and the company is cutting down its deficit every year, in spite of the robbery by the gentlemen railroad managers. This is the difference between private robbery and public business.

The Journal, Brockton, Mass.: What a howl there would be in England by the governing capitalists if it were proposed to spend $5,000,000 a week in saving the lives of the starving poor of India! yet they not only assent but urge on the dreadful work in South Africa because of their greed of gold. The capitalists of all lands are class conscious. They know no patriotism, race or creed when there is profit to be squeezed out of the sweat of the workers. Their actions are a perpetual invitation to the workmen of all countries to unite, loose their chains and secure economic justice.

The Social Forum, Chicago: The newest thing in the war against trusts is that the Illinois statute against trusts, which is supposed to have taken effect July 1, 1893, has been ukased out of existence by the decree of Judge C. C. Kohlstaad of the United States Circuit court at Chicago, on the familiar ground that the act is "unconstitutional" and is "class legislation," which are two trite euphemisms for the real fact that all acts which are aimed against the regnant trusts, combines and money magnates are "unconstitutional" whenever it becomes necessary to declare them so. The only "class legislation" which is found illegal is that directed against the capitalist class.

Justice, London, England: Although in this country we are congratulating ourselves on the continuance of good trade and industrial activity, there are not wanting signs that this period of prosperity is nearing its end. It is curious how people forget past crises and depressions and how readily they persuade themselves that a period of prosperity has "come to stay," and that now gluts and bad trade are forever things of the past. Economic history teaches us that any such rosy hopes are only vain dreams, so long as the competitive system of production and distribution endures, and it is precisely at the moment when commercial prosperity is at its height, when trade is most brisk and industry is most flourishing, that reaction and depression are most to be feared.

Citizen and Country, Toronto, Canada: "There has never been a war so barren of plausible justification. There has never been a war so dangerous to the prestige of Great Britain. So sure as the war goes on, so sure does the British empire go under."

This is the awful prediction of Kier Hardie, a man chosen by British electors to represent them in the British house of commons.

We do not sanction every article we publish in this paper, but it is well to know the opinions of leaders. What we say in this matter is that it is safer for Britain to retrace her steps and acknowledge her error than to go ahead and conquer the Boers.

We fear for the future, but we dare not harbor so positive a thought as that expressed by Kier Hardie, the most popular labor leader in England.

ANOTHER GOOD WEEK FOR ORGANIZATION

Thirteen is a lucky number—at least, when organization of branches of the Social Democratic party is concerned. Last week that was the number of new branches instituted throughout the country, and again this week we have to report not as large a list, but one that will be very gratifying to our thousands of readers who are watching the unprecedented growth of Socialism in the United States under the banner of this twenty-months-old party. This week New York takes the lead with two good branches; Maryland has one, and the rest are credited to the west. The latter section is rapidly coming to the S. D. P., and the signs of the times are propitious for great activity during the spring and summer months. National Secretary Debs is devoting a large share of his time every day to answering communications and furnishing information to those who in their home communities are about ready for affiliation with the Social Democratic party. A list of the new branches for the week follows:

ASPEN, COLO.

Chairman, M. V. Colyer; vice-chairman, R. K. Sprinkle; secretary and treasurer, A. E. McCausland; organizer, James Sanborn.

BALTIMORE, MD.

Chairman, L. Rosenfeld; secretary, H. Sachs; treasurer, H. Abrahamson; organizer, D. Paulson.

PLATTSBURGH, NEB.

Chairman, B. O. Hadley; vice-chairman, Will Howland; secretary, Jacob Jacobsen; treasurer, Loren Leiner; organizer, Herman Streitwieser.

PATCHEQUE, N. Y.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Branch No. 33, Whitman, Mass., will give an entertainment and lecture Feb. 22 at the town hall.

Organizer George Finger of New York is greatly encouraged with the outlook for organization.

Three new branches have been organized in New York city in three weeks. The city central committee is active.

The West Side branch, New York, will have Comrade William Butscher for speaker on the 18th. His subject is "Trusts."

Comrade Howard A. Gibbs of Worcester addressed a large meeting at Socialist hall, Brockton, Mass., Sunday evening, Feb. 4.

Meetings of the new branch in the Borough of Bronx, New York, will be held at Webster hall, One Hundred and Fortieth street and Third avenue.

The West Side and Twenty-fourth assembly district organizations in New York have decided to send a joint delegate to the Indianapolis convention.

This week Comrade Eugene Debs has been lecturing in Georgia, North Carolina and Kentucky. Tomorrow, Feb. 18, he fills an engagement at Burlington, Iowa.

Branch No. 5, Lynn, Mass., with a new set of officers, is having fine meetings and increasing its membership. W. H. Hitchcock is the new chairman and Harry Göttinger secretary.

Representative McCartney's bill to have the name of the party printed on the official ballot of Massachusetts instead of as "Democratic Social" as heretofore, has been defeated.

Branch No. 42, at Holbrook, Mass., is arranging for a grand rally, with Comrades Coulter and McCartney for speakers and the Brockton band to enliven the occasion with music.

The officers of the new branch at Mendon, Mass., are: Horace S. Coleman, chairman; Florence Driscoll, vice-chairman; William E. Dixon, secretary; Charles A. Johnson, treasurer; Nathan F. Towne, organizer.

The comrades at North Abington, Mass., started their campaign at a recent town meeting by carrying the day for the Australian ballot at the spring election against the combined opposition of Republicans and Democrats.

A mass meeting under the auspices of the new branch in Bronx borough will be held at Webster hall, One Hundred and Fortieth street and Third avenue, Friday evening, Feb. 23. Comrades Phillips and Barondess will speak.

Comrade A. A. Noe of Delaware, Ohio, writes to say that the local branch recently organized there is flourishing. He declares that the fact that a branch can be maintained in so conservative a place as Delaware is proof that it can be done in any old town in the country, and urges the comrades to increased activity.

The comrades of Branch 14 of Missouri, at Poplar Bluff, have nominated candidates for the local election in April as follows: Councilmen—First ward, A. C. Ford; third ward, George Clemons; fourth ward, George Massingham, Jr. For school directors—Charles Hinrichs and R. L. Hassler.

Comrade C. Lipscomb is co-operating effectively with the active forces for Social Democracy in Missouri. Wherever he speaks he clearly emphasizes the fact that the S. D. P. is not a party of palliatives and middle-class reforms, but a revolutionary party, aiming at political supremacy to inaugurate social ownership of all productive capital.

A congressional committee has been organized at Brockton, with officers as follows: Mayor Charles H. Coulter of Brockton, chairman; Frank Thompson of Plymouth, first vice-president; A. H. Dennett of Middleboro, second vice-president; Charles E. Lowell of Whitman, secretary; G. A. Monette of Brockton, financial secretary, and John Alexander of East Bridgewater, treasurer.

The following amounts contributed to the Bohemian paper are acknowledged by our Bohemian comrades: Dance given by Branch No. 2, Chicago, $27.25; from sale of books presented by Dr. Greer, $1; Branch No. 12, New Bedford, Mass., $1.10; Bicycle union No. 32, Chicago, $3; Comrade Mulac, Vanderbilt, Pa., $2; Comrade Mudra, Chicago, $2; "Policajt," 50 cents; circulation, $9.50.

The Granite Falls (Minn.) branch would like to correspond with branch secretaries elsewhere as to how they carry on their work for the cause. This branch was organized Jan. 10 with eleven members; at its third meeting the number had increased to twenty-six, and in a short time it will be doubled. The comrades are all active and effective use is being made of literature. The secretary is C. J. Weaver.

Dear Comrade: The Eleventh District Socialist club of Cleveland will hold its councilmanic convention Monday evening, Feb. 19, in Putner's hall, 945 Clark avenue. All members of the S. L. P. and the S. D. P. and the voters who at the last election voted the Socialist ticket, and those who intend to vote with us, are invited to be present to nominate a candidate for the city council. Let us show the world that we can unite into one grand party of the laboring class to fight for its rights. Ed Munger, Chairman; Leo Weingar, Secretary.

Boston has given the municipalization of the city printing plant a thorough trial, and it suits Typographical Union No. 13 so well that at its last meeting a unanimous vote was given in favor of a petition to the legislature of Massachusetts for a joint special committee to investigate the desirability of a state printing office. The committee appointed by President Metcalf was a radical one and thoroughly in sympathy with the project. As the contract expires next year with the Wright & Potter Printing company, it comes within the bounds of reasonable expectation that the legislature will at least very seriously consider the matter. Comrade George G. Cutting is chairman of the committee.

To Our Connecticut Readers

All unattached Socialists in the state of Connecticut are requested to write Louis Schlaf, 26 Spring street, Rockville, for information concerning the organization of branches.

North Dakota Socialists

Socialists residing in North Dakota and desiring to organize for effective propaganda work in that state are requested to correspond with Math. Eidsness, Towner, N. D.

To Our Washington Readers

Comrade D. Burgess of New Whatcom, Wash., has been selected as organizer for the state and is prepared to assist the Socialists of Washington in organizing branches of the S. D. P. Correspondence addressed to him will receive prompt attention.

Cincinnati Municipal Campaign

Social Democrats at Cincinnati have squared themselves for the coming municipal election. At a well-attended and enthusiastic meeting John H. Hewitt, Robert J. Waite, Seymour G. Mead and Hugh Crumley were entered as candidates for the mayoralty. Several ballots were taken before Mr. Waite emerged as the winner. He was called on to make a speech, but declined, contenting himself with asking the assistance of his associates in taking care of the unenlightened among the populace should he happen to be elected.

Hugh Crumley and John Hewitt were selected as the candidates for the B. of C. A.

D. T. Hackett was put up for corporation counsel by acclamation.

Albert Corbin was named for police court judge by acclamation, and Walter R. Ingram beat out William Kuhnell and Joseph Reverman for police clerk. Fred Hammel was chosen for city auditor in a close contest with S. G. Mead.

For city treasurer A. E. Schuttenheim was an easy winner.

John Alexander was nominated for justice of the peace and Joseph Reverman for constable.

It was decided to leave the selection of candidates for the boards of education and legislation to the campaign committee, which will talk matters over with the party men in each of the several wards before filling out the ticket.

The campaign committee was chosen by selecting S. G. Mead, A. Haas, A. Bury, R. Biederman and Andreas Lotz, and general business was begun in earnest by levying an assessment at once on all who were present. Nearly every one in the room gave a dollar, half or quarter, according to his means and interest.

The committee is to organize the work in the several wards at once, and an effort will be made to have good speakers address the people in the party's cause.

Mr. Waite, the candidate for mayor, is president of the local Potters' union. He and the others are all new men, politically.

An Important Book

Charles H. Kerr & Co. have in the press the admirable work by Frederick Engels, "Socialism: Utopia to Science." There is probably nothing better than this to put into the hands of those who have read "Merrie England" and books of that class. It is the Aveling translation and is printed in cloth at 30 cents; paper cover, 10 cents. It is a work that we trust will have a large sale among members of the organization. Orders filled from this office.

Municipalism

The subject of municipal ownership of street railways, lighting plants, water works, etc., is especially and elaborately treated in the issue of the Appeal to Reason for Feb. 17. Great pains have been taken and much expense incurred to make this municipal ownership edition exceptionally interesting and valuable. It is expected that the edition will be the largest the Appeal office has yet printed. Parties wishing to aid in giving this number of the Appeal the widest possible circulation should get in their orders at once to Girard, Kan.

Comrade Henry P. Lennarz

The cause of Socialism lost a devoted advocate and loyal supporter in the recent death of Comrade Henry Paul Lennarz, at New Haven, Conn. As an active worker for the social revolution he never tired, and was known as a man who for years did all he could to the end that his class might be brought to realize, as he did, the hopelessness of their condition under capitalist production. He gave of his time and means generously without thought of reward, and his sincerity of purpose and singleness of aim were never doubted by those who knew him best.

Comrade Lennarz died after an illness of ten months, due to intestinal cancer, leaving a widow and three children and a large circle of friends and comrades to mourn his loss.

Encouraging Signs

The meeting held by the central branch of St. Louis on Feb. 4 was the best business meeting in point of attendance that Social Democrats of this city have ever held. Aschenbroedel hall was well filled, and the members were enthusiastic. Putnam and Hoehn were elected delegates to the national convention. Four new members were added to the roll. The general public is beginning to manifest an unusual interest in the party, and even our business meetings are attended by many strangers. Our proposed concentration on the Ninth ward is drawing many hitherto unattached Socialists into our ranks. Everything is favorable, and we will put up a strong, clear-cut fight for Socialism this year. The next central branch meeting will be held at 604 Market street Sunday afternoon, Feb. 18.

Social Democrats of Poplar Bluff, Mo., have nominated a city ticket, as follows: Aldermen—First ward, A. C. Ford; Third ward, George Clemons; Fourth ward, George Massingham, Jr. School directors—R. L. Hassler and Charles Hinrichs, Sr. Poplar Bluff has about 2,500 inhabitants, and the Social Democratic vote is sure to cause some disturbance.

turn mail your acceptance of the appointment and your intention of attending the conference, so that the committee may make such arrangements for your ticket and admission to the meetings of the conference and to the Auditorium as will avoid all confusion at that time.

Permit me to say in reply that my interest in your "National Anti-trust conference" is that of a class-conscious wage-worker watching the comedians in a drama, for such I regard your combination of middle-class reformers and political demagogues—the one mainly honest, but confused, and the other any old thing for votes.

Whom would I be supposed to represent by your appointment as a delegate? This feature looks like farce-comedy. No, I will not be in attendance, nor do I want my name associated with it. When I accept mandates to act on the trust question it will be from fellow wage-workers. I am, sirs, a Social Democrat.

Notice

We earnestly appeal to all labor unions, particularly the labor unions of the Western Federation of Miners, to do all in their power to keep men away from the Coeur d'Alenes.

The man who goes into that district under existing conditions is labor's worst enemy, and should be branded as a scab by all union men.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC HERALD

VOL. II. No. 36

CHICAGO, ILL., U. S. A., SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1900.

Whole No. 86.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

The golden wedge. Our public school system has ever been regarded as one of the realized ideals of democracy. We have pointed to it, with justifiable pride, as the institution wherein the children of rich and poor had equal access to the pursuit of knowledge.

Recently I had a conversation with a teacher of one of Boston's suburban schools. In the course of our talk I learned that our school system has not escaped from the contaminating influence of the dollar.

She said that in her school the punishment of misdemeanors and the marking of examinations were controlled almost wholly by the financial and social standing of the parents of the child in question, by order of those in office superior to her own.

A child misbehaved. She reported to the principal. The first question she is asked is "Whose child is it?" If it is the child of some well-to-do and influential citizen, she is almost invariably told to let the child go. "We can't afford to get out with Mr. Goldberg," pleads the principal. If it be the child of a poor laborer, the full punishment is "conscientiously" awarded.

So, too, in the case of examinations, the pupils of the wealthy are allowed to pass oftentimes by reason of money, and not merit.

How long are we going to permit the existence of an industrial system that forces us to contribute to the fortunes that are thus undermining democracy and discriminating against our children?

A double-jointed prayer. "Is there anything I can do for you?" asked Bishop Hurst of President McKinley, hearing of His Majesty's slight indisposition.

"Yes, there is," he replied, "Keep on praying for me; that will help me more than anything else."

This statement will afford much gratification to those who have the double misfortune of being both poor and pious. The throne of deity will be deluged with their petitions in behalf of the prayer-needing president.

No one will deny that William is in need of the blessings of divine grace. If he is not already on his "spiritual uppers," having lost his "sole" in the labyrinth of political intrigue, he sadly needs all the help that deity can supply.

Or perhaps he needs grace to become meek and resigned, so that he might the better serve God and obey Hanna. The chief requisite of presidential figure-headship today seems to be passive pliability.

I am of the opinion that there was a typographical mistake in the report. McKinley said "Prey for me," instead. This is infinitely more in accord with the methods adopted by his managers in placing and retaining him in office.

This is McKinley's double-jointed prayer. To the parsonial Hurst and his class, he says "Pray for me." To the political Hanna he says "Prey for me."

A practical prayer. Talking about prayer reminds me of an incident that occurred a few months ago.

I was present at a certain church banquet held in Music Hall, Boston. The hour for commencing the feast came. Somebody on the platform rapped for order, and when there was silence, called on a clergyman to offer grace.

He began rather a long blessing in which he thanked God for the bountiful spread.

The reverential hush was disturbed by the waiters in the ante-rooms, who were preparing to serve the banquet. The head waiter tiptoed out, and I heard him say, in a loud whisper, "Keep quiet, you fellows, they're saying grace." Then from a fellow who was making vigorous hums over an ice-box, there came the gruff reply, "Well, what if they are, we're cutting ice!"

I tried to be as reverential as I could, consistent with my environment, but I found myself saying, "Yes, you're cutting a good deal more ice than the other fellow." Up at the front God was getting thanked for what the negro waiters were doing in the back rooms.

And so, to point a moral to the tale, while the pious are praying for the coming of the kingdom of heaven, the socialistic workingmen, often irreligious and noisy, are realizing the latter by their own stalwart efforts.

Thus ever thus. Labor is the great creative force of the universe. It is the power by which all things are made. Labor is the divinity in existence, and lies at the basis of all things.

Everybody near Boston has been in and admired the Boston Public Library. The marble staircase, the stately columns, the splendid pictures, all combine to make it a place of beauty.

How came it there? For many months before it was opened workmen were busy on its site. They were rough, rugged fellows, clad in dirty duck, and working in dingy little sheds.

They excited no attention. The passersby never gave them a second look. The city council never came in a body and congratulated them on the progress of their work. No newspaper ever wrote them up. No artist ever found them worthy of a picture.

But they kept on hewing away, until at last the work was done. The opening of the building was announced, the doors were flung open, and admiring crowds thronged the place.

And the humble creators of it all were away on some other barren site, hewing, and cutting, and chiselling at some new creation.

Patriotism gone mad. In a dispatch this week from Manila, it is stated that 450 insane soldiers are being shipped back to the United States. This is a literal instance of patriotism gone mad.

The mere fact of insanity is nothing in itself. In fact, only those who were touched more or less by the virus of madness could have been induced to join in the devilish heathen-hunting expedition against the Filipinos. The trouble with this particular shipload of fools is that they are inconveniently crazy. They have crossed the limit of useful craziness. So long as they were only insane enough to murder Filipinos, they were of use, but when they became so violently insane as to turn upon their fellows they were sent back to America. When they return they will doubtless be given government positions, where they can exercise their particular mania to advantage.

What an indictment is this against the powers that misrule our land! In a moment of delirious enthusiasm or of pressing need, men enlist in the U. S. army. They are sent to the east, marched against naked bolomen, and compelled to fire at and kill and murder them like so many rats.

Is it any wonder that if there were a grain of common humanity left in these soldiers, the feeling of revulsion against the bloody task should unbalance their minds. There was no alternative save to shoot, or be shot as traitors.

Let Edward Atkinson lead this procession of dribbling imbeciles through the country, and it will do more to kill the expansion craze than a bushel of his smuggled pamphlets.

Barbaric Britain. We have heard much in the last few years about Anglo-Saxon civilization. We have read concerning the British Bible society, and the British Missionary society, and a score of other organizations, professedly Christian.

But how can we harmonize the triumphant march of British civilization with the war pictures now on view in South Africa? We see a nation distributing Bibles with one hand and arming Kaffirs with the other.

The English have flung away their robe of righteousness, as an incumbrance in the mad race for gold.

All their religion has been but a thin veneer, giving an outward respectability, but ready to peel off at a minute's notice.

It simply reveals the soulless commercialism that is the life of brute Britain. It shows that real reform and real religion demand the eradication of the money power.

It affords a grim satisfaction to see Britain being soundly spanked by the farmer Boers. It is a pity, though, that you have to kill an Englishman before he's alive to the injustice of his cause.

Merlin.

Antithesis. Conservative, thou radical of the passing generation, thy useful work is done; the hour is striking; the darkness of the night is passing; I see the dawn of a brighter day. Conservative, good-night.

Progress, we bid thee welcome. With thy quickening step, new ideas, new conscience, thou wilt build the world anew.

Progress, thou art relentless, cruel; Nothing withstands thy power, Like the sands upon the seashore, Changing for evermore.

Progress, help us to understand thee; Cease our senseless opposition, Free us from the rule of dead men, Place us in the right position.

Progress, take us with thee; Show us the future, bright; Guide our faltering footsteps Through darkness unto light.

SENATOR LODGE ON EXPANSION

In the issue of Collier's Weekly of Feb. 10, a weekly which claims to be "an illustrated journal of art, literature and current events" (of course of the capitalist brand), is contained an article by Senator Henry Cabot Lodge entitled "Shall We Retain the Philippines?" The significance of the article in question lies not in any originality on the part of the author in the arguments which he advances in support of his position, for in the main the arguments are about the same that have been served out to the "American people" on this "burning question" by other expansionists for some time; but its import is found in the fact that he fully substantiates one of the basic principles of socialism in a most logical manner. That principle is the materialistic conception of history first discovered and given to the world by Karl Marx, which is, to state it briefly, as follows: That in every age of the world's history, since the dissolution of the primitive communistic stage, a certain class has risen to supremacy in society through peculiar economic advantages which it holds, and by means of this supremacy has been able to mold and does mold the popular conceptions of "right" and "wrong," "moral" and "immoral," so as to coincide with their own material interests. Furthermore these dominant classes determine all questions of "public" policy and social institutions, and they who rebel against them are traitors and "unpatriotic" or even enemies of "society."

Having given this brief definition, we will proceed with the article under discussion. It is a source of gratification to the Socialist when he sees his views demonstrated by representatives of the ruling class, for it removes his ideas from the domain of theory to the domain of facts. Not that the facts have been wanting to demonstrate the Socialist view of history, but that these facts come to the surface at times in such a glaring light and with a force so convincing, that the Socialist is surprised that others can not see that which is made so plain. Senator Lodge's article is a demonstration of one of these facts. Hence the notice taken of it. After stating that "nine-tenths of the arguments" of his opponents are "inapplicable eulogies upon the Declaration of Independence" and "the other tenth based on newspaper reports," the senator proceeds to tell us what goes to make up the nine-tenths of his argument in favor of retention. He who reads the senator's article will perceive that the same method of division into "one-tenth" and "nine-tenths" of the arguments of his opponents is followed in his own treatment of the subject. Let us examine the first division of the senator's article. Under the first division he points out the victory of Admiral Dewey as a military measure the wisdom of which no one can dispute. He then proceeds with a short history of the negotiations at Paris between the representatives of America and Spain over the disposition of the islands, and concludes that the "islands came to us as rightfully and as righteously as the possession of any territory ever came to any people." All of which (interpreted in terms of capitalist morality) the Socialist will agree with. He then examines and discusses the climate and wealth resources of the "new territory," much the same as the slave owner of the south would examine the physical characteristics of the slave before purchasing him, and shows that these resources have never been developed to any great extent and that great opportunities awaits us if we only have the sense to grasp them. We will let the senator state it in his own words: "We need ample markets in the interests of our farmers and workmen. We not only need them, but we must have them." Here we have the quintessence of capitalism and here we will find, as we proceed further, the "nine-tenths" of the senator's argument. Of course the senator's reference to the workingmen is a huge joke. Think of the working class of America disposing of the only commodity which they possess in the Philippines! Think of them bottling up their labor power and shipping it to our "new" possessions, while they stay at home with their feet upon the mantelpiece smoking cigars made by our "citizens" in Cuba, and enjoying the evening newspaper, or possibly reflecting on the superb knowledge of our senators in discussing "benevolent assimilation" through "criminal aggression." Think — But enough.

Anyone with the thinking apparatus of Balaam's ass ought to be able to see the class character of the senator's article, to say nothing of the two-legged species. If we conclude that the workers have no product to sell in the Philippines (as we must from the very nature of the case), then we must conclude that the senator's "we" is synonymous with the interests of capitalism, or in other words, he has only the interests of the capitalist class in mind when he uses the term "we." Let us wade through some more of this capitalist slush. The senator points out the "danger looming over China" (prior to "our" assimilation of the Philippines) from the "great northern power of the Slav." And what was this "danger"? Why the great northern power would "grasp that empire (China) and shut its gates upon the trade of the world." But why would the entrance of the great northern power into China be a "danger" to the latter country, while "our" entrance would be a "blessing"? We will let the senator answer. Because "it will be an important and direct material benefit to the agriculture and the industries of the United States" for us to enter, while for "other powers to shut the gates of China upon us would be a real disaster to the industry and the agriculture of the United States." He who can read between the lines can see the relation between "danger to China" and "real disaster" to our ruling capitalist class. But the senator is afraid that we will not understand him and he states his position in so clear a manner that there is no room for doubt. He says: "Will the American people reject this opportunity? Will they throw away all this trade, and all this wealth? They have not yet shown themselves so stupid or so timid, and I do not believe that they will begin now."

The senator need have no fear. The capitalist class has never shown itself "stupid" or "timid" in dealing with the workers at Homestead, Buffalo, Pana or the Bull Pen at Wardner, Idaho. The working class have often been guilty of stupidity, but the capitalist class has never been, and in all probability never will be, guilty of this sin. But to return. "Will they throw away this vast material advantage . . . ? In view of the character and the history of the American people such action seems to me improbable." The "character and history" of our ruling class precludes the possibility of "us" ever giving up this "vast material advantage," hence "manifest destiny" commands that we must expand.

The Socialist knows that foreign markets and expansion are simply the reflex of modern economic development and that the policy of isolation no longer "pays." Besides, as the senator says in concluding his article, "Every consideration of material interests demands that we should retain the Philippines." Of course. The Socialist has always maintained that the material interests of the class in power have always shaped the policy of nations, and that other considerations of "humanity" and "justice" are secondary and play a subordinate role. From the numerous quotations from the senator's article it will be seen that "nine-tenths" of his argument is found in the material interests of the class which he represents, while the few considerations aside from this are not of much importance and form only "one-tenth" of the argument. When will the working class of America awake to the fact that they as a class play a subordinate role in society? When will they awaken to the fact that their backs are used as an economic chess-board and that the capitalists use their votes in order to prolong the game? When will such articles as that from the pen of Lodge awaken them to their material interests? These questions are now up for solution, and they can be solved if the workers are fired with the class-consciousness displayed by the capitalist class. When the workers exhibit as much interest in the welfare of their class as the Lodges do for theirs, then they will wield a class-conscious ballot in favor of socialism and the abolishment of all class rule. When they do this the Lodges will have to find new lodgings, but not before. Jas. Oneal.

Charles R. Green

With the comrades of Chelsea, Mass., we mourn the loss of our esteemed and beloved comrade, Charles R. Green. Comrade Green was the nominee of the S. D. P. for mayor of Chelsea; he was a faithful and earnest worker in the cause and his death is a distinct loss that will be felt. At a union meeting of Socialists the following resolution was adopted: "We, the Social Democratic and Socialist Labor Party of Chelsea, in joint meeting assembled, feeling that in the death of Comrade Green we have met with an extreme loss, hereby express our tenderest sympathy to the family of our deceased comrade, in this the hour of their great bereavement."

What shall be the edition of the big double number of The Herald, March 17, with all its special features designed to interest people in Socialism this year? That depends on how well the comrades and readers co-operate with us. We can make arrangements for printing a million copies, but must have orders in advance. Order a thousand copies for propaganda in your town.

THE NEED OF THE HOUR

A Sermon

I will take for my text the following letter, just received: "Dear Comrade—Brighton branch is still alive, and desirous of furthering the aims of our party as much as possible. We are contemplating a public meeting some time next week or the week after, and I write to ascertain if it would be possible for us to have one or two of our experienced members at our meeting to give us a little talk. The date has not yet been set. We can arrange it to suit the convenience of the speaker."

When I read that letter I could scarcely believe my eyes. I read it over again and again, and then pinched myself to make sure I was not dreaming. No; it was no dream. Here was a branch, in very truth, contemplating a public meeting, and not asking for a mayor or a representative as speaker! A branch that actually seemed to think that the principles of socialism were in themselves worth listening to, even though they were expounded by only a plain, ordinary member, and that an audience could be gathered to hear them, without the added attraction of a mayor, a representative, a celebrated orator, or a brass band and ice cream festival!

It is literally the first request of the kind I have received in eighteen months, but I hope it won't be the last. I sincerely hope it marks the dawn of a new era in our propaganda in this state. I hope that this new departure will be followed by other branches, for the sake of the health of the party, as well as that of the speakers. Just about a year ago I entered a plea that our members in public office should not be asked to do much speaking, as they have pretty near all they can do if they faithfully discharge the duties of their respective offices. There was a let-up for a while, but I see by the Haverhill Social Democrat that the "Guilty Ghost" who walks the corridors beneath the gilded dome has had to enter a protest against the over-working of his Social Democratic proteges in the legislature. Of course, the new branches are perfectly justified in their desire to get a good start, and to have the best speakers. But we must not fall into the serious error of making too much of personalities and not enough of principles. The principles of socialism may be fully as powerful and as convincing when explained in a plain, unvarnished way by an ordinary branch member, as when presented by the most brilliant orator, or by a first Socialist mayor or representative. It is better to have a dozen people go away from a meeting saying "That man spoke the truth" than to have a hundred go away saying "That's a clever man." In the one case the speaker is remembered; in the other, the speech.

Now, don't misunderstand me, please. I know that the brilliant orator and the "great drawing card" can make the audience think, just as well as the plain, ordinary speaker. We all know that. What I want to do is to emphasize the other fellow's side of the question; and that we must not depend upon the "drawing cards" entirely. Each one of our fifty branches cannot possibly have a mayor or a representative at each meeting. We have simply got to grow another crop of speakers. That is the need of the hour. We must have faith enough in the strength of our cause to be content to have, on ordinary occasions, just what our Brighton comrades ask for, "some experienced member to give us a little talk."

This implies of course that the experienced member knows what he is talking about—has made a study of the fundamental principles of socialism. Signing an application blank and calling yourself a Socialist does not make you one. We are not a political party after the fashion of the capitalist political parties, formed simply for the purpose of getting fellows boosted into office in any old way. We are first of all a Socialist organization, and our principal work is education and agitation. Political campaigns are utilized for the purpose of education, and not to boom this or that individual, who wishes to get into office; as a means to an end, and not as the end itself. If as a result of our educational work we can elect our candidate by a straight, intelligent and at least sympathetic vote, well and good. But a candidate elected on any other basis is a source of weakness instead of strength. The fact that we in this state have first of all developed the political side of our movement before we had a chance to organize and develop the educational side presents a danger which we must guard against.

I do not by any means expect that all those who vote our ticket shall understand all the ins and outs of scientific

THE CONVENTION

Ten days remain in which to make preparations for the national convention of the Social Democratic party, and in that time the duty that lies nearest is the selection of delegates by those branches that have not already done so. We have information sufficient to be able to give Herald readers an assurance that the convention will be well attended; our hope is that not a single branch or individual member will be without representation.

It is expected that several organizations will send representatives with a view of effecting a powerful union of the Socialist forces of the country at the ballot box. There will be matters of the highest importance before the convention and the occasion is one to call for the wisest counsel, to the end that the cause of Democratic Socialism may be advanced and the union of the growing forces of socialism throughout the country effected.

LICENSE THE TRUSTS

When one of the speakers at the anti-trust meeting last week told the harrowing story of the steel trust and how the managing president when giving testimony to a congressional commission said that he would gladly pay a million dollars a year for a license from the Federal government to conduct his business, the temptation was strong to remind the speaker that in all Mr. Bryan's flood of words, the only practical suggestion he had made was a Federal license empowering the trusts to do business. Mr. Hanna, of the Republican camp of capitalists, is raising a fund of $25,000,000 to re-elect Mr. McKinley. Now if the president of the steel trust will hustle a bit and raise a fund of $50,000,000 to elect Mr. Bryan, his license will be forthcoming, because that is just Mr. Bryan's idea. There is not a trust in the country that will not endorse the Bryan idea of a license—to plunder the people. Having their licenses properly made out and paid for, the trust managers will hang them on the walls of their New Jersey headquarters and proceed to do business in accordance with the golden rule translated in a retrogressive Democratic statute.

It's a splendid scheme! Elect Bryan—license the trusts—then the millennium!

The double number of The Herald to be printed March 17 will be a good thing. Snap it up and start the national campaign right, by spreading the light among your friends and neighbors. That one issue will make Socialists and votes this year. Order a bundle.

LABOR PAYS THE BILLS

Whom do you work for? Yourself? Are you sure of it? If you are sure that you work for yourself, how is it that so many who never work are in possession of wealth? You know that wealth is not created by the class that never works, don't you? Ever see any wealth that was created except by labor? Think you never did. Well, you do see, then, that labor creates wealth? That all wealth is created by labor? You work? Yet you have no wealth? Who has the wealth you have created? Never thought of it, eh? Tell you something: A London banker says that "English investors figure that their investments in the United States bring them an income of $500,000,000 a year." See where some of the wealth you create goes? See how British capitalists are able to make big donations to carry on the brutal business of butchering Boers? Thought America had nothing to do with the war in Africa, did you? But YOU HAVE, see? You are helping to pay the bill. Your class has always had the burden of paying such bills. Learn something, man. Don't be a "brother to the ox"! Get some Socialist books and learn how your class is fleeced by the capitalist class at home and abroad. Then join the ranks of Socialism for freedom.

IS JOHN HAY THE TRAITOR?

The use of the epithet "traitor" has been a favorite pastime with the jellyfish administration and its friends, and few men who have had an idea above the plane of a subservient partisan have escaped it. But it now begins to look as though the real traitors are those who happen to be in highest official position. The revelation of Consul Macrum shows a depth of duplicity unparalleled in the history of the country. The consul was subjected to the humiliation of seeing his official mail opened by a British censor. The secretary of state, John Hay, a notorious snob with a bad case of angomania, is charged by the consul with being a silent or conniving partner with the British, in discrediting reports of his official acts. He says he finds "that Secretary Hay, whether acting upon the reports in the newspapers or upon advice from the British government or some other motive, I do not know, saw fit to wait until I could present my reasons in person and has been a silent or conniving partner to discrediting reports of my official acts. I come home to find an attempt has been made to tear down my personal reputation. I wish to state right here that when I accepted my post as consul I knew nothing of any secret alliance between America and Great Britain; and that I had seen nothing in the regulations which made the consul of the American republic subject to the whims and caprice of an English military censor at Durban."

Now, if John Hay is the traitor, what is to be said of his political master, the president of the United States by grace of corporation money, coercion and corruption? It is another illustration of the power of the capitalist class, which organizes wars against peaceful people, to dominate all forms of government short of one in which that class is shorn of its strength to ravage the world and keep the working class in slavery. The humiliation which Consul Macrum feels is the logical sequence of government by capitalists and the hiring tools of capitalists. Government by the dominant economic class is inevitable and whether it is administered from the White House or from Downing street, London, can make little if any difference to the masses of the people.

Do not forget or fail to order 100 or 500 copies of the big double number of The Herald to be printed March 17. Will contain complete report of the convention, special contributed articles, facts and data for the propaganda, illustrations, etc. A splendid number to start the campaign with. One cent per copy. Every branch should order not less than 500 copies.

THE DYING MIDDLE CLASS

The despairing cry of the middle class is heard in the land. The power of the trusts is crushing out the small proprietors, closing the gates of opportunity and converting a large and hitherto important and independent body of business men into salaried employees or dependents in some form upon the benevolent rich. Every week adds to the volume and intensity of this cry in proportion to the increase in the number of victims.

Some of the Democratic journals of the east are endeavoring to show that this crushing out process means that thousands of business men who supported McKinley in 1896 will this year give their votes and influence to Bryan in "self-defense." That is to say, what is known as the business community is losing its foothold and its opportunity to do business, and its members, having given little or no thought to the procuring causes of trusts and knowing next to nothing of the trend and inevitability of concentration, are prepared to accept Mr. Bryan with his wholly inadequate, out-of-date and impossible reform ideas. And for what purpose? Presumably for the purpose of reinstating them in the exercise of their function as commodity hucksters for profit.

The distinguishing characteristic of the struggling middle class who look for some anti-trust legislation or financial reform to revive their vanishing glory and restore their individual freedom to make profit, is the almost universal failure of their class to understand the class struggle in which society is plunged by the simple but tremendously significant fact of the transformation of the petty modes of individual production into the gigantic trusts with which we are now familiar; in other words, the separation of the producing class in society from the means of gaining a livelihood. Having no clear comprehension of this revolutionizing fact in the industrial world, they fail to see its true relation to the function of distribution in the realm of commercialism. They, therefore, imagine that a change from one political party which supports a system of capitalist production and distribution to another political party which does not propose to abolish that system, will result in the restoration of their class to its former independence and power. A hope more vain was never entertained.

The prosperity of the middle class has always depended upon the ability of the working class to procure profitable employment. Modern discovery and invention has destroyed the opportunity of millions to do this. The tendency of modern production, the transformed tools of production being monopolized by a class, is to destroy handicraft and, indeed, handicraft in many so-called trades is already nearly obsolete. Thought mixed with toil has brought about a condition in which the laborer, the producer of things, is not only dispossessed of the wealth he creates, but also of the opportunity to further exertion. Capitalism destroys both the opportunity and the incentive to labor.

Now, in the face of a social revolution so overwhelming as that in which we now find ourselves, what would Mr. Bryan and his friends accomplish if by acts of legislation their middle-class reforms were put into practical operation. What has Mr. Bryan himself ever given a hint of that he could do? Not a single thing. Can it for one moment be supposed that Mr. Bryan with a Democratic congress will be able to reverse the historic development of capital? Why, instead of running off to Bryan, do not those in the middle class who feel the crushing power of the trusts ask themselves whether a reversion to individual property in tools and individual production is possible? For, be it remembered, unless progress can be reversed and the earlier forms of production re-established, with individual possession of the tools of production, there is no possibility of a restoration to power of the middle class. But such a program is unthinkable, undesirable, impossible. The middle class is doomed and against the relentless capitalist revolution Bryanism is powerless to save it.

A MONTH IN THE SOUTH

It is about a month ago since Eugene V. Debs began at Louisville, Ky., a lecture tour in the south. To say that his meetings have everywhere been successful in awakening great public interest in Socialism and labor organization would, in the light of press notices which have come to us from nearly every point he has visited, be a very moderate summing up of his work. It has been a month of constant, daily proof of a remarkable change in public sentiment. Wherever he lectured his reception was in the nature of a great popular ovation, participated in by all classes of people, upon whom his utterances made a profound impression. The interest in his work passed the limits of organized labor and permeated the business and professional classes, bringing the latter to a new conception of the historical significance of the labor movement and a friendlier attitude towards trades unionism. The ideas entertained by thousands have been completely revolutionized. The first immediate and practical result is a strengthening of the labor organizations throughout the south. This is admitted by members of the trades unions; they declare that Comrade Debs' work is organizing the south as it has never before been done. More than this, his presentation of the doctrines of Socialism attracts rather than repels men who years ago should have been won for the support of a movement having as its object the conquest of the public powers by political action. These are encouraging signs indeed. Places where he spoke on his previous visit to the south, where no sign of organization existed, are now strongly organized and have central labor unions. Wherever meetings are held organization follows, or the struggling unions grow strong. One of the places he visited on his former trip to the southland was Columbus, Ga. There was then no organization. He spoke to a large audience and urged organization. Shortly after he left the mill hands went out on strike. The papers, of course, roundly abused Debs, but it was the beginning of a strong union movement and today Columbus is solidly organized. Credit is given to whom credit is due by the unionists of the south, and they declare this was the result of Eugene Debs' efforts. The same thing is true of Montgomery, Macon, Savannah and other places.

It has been said that interest in Comrade Debs' work is not confined to any class; neither has it been to one color or one sex. All sorts and conditions of men and women—black and white—are moved to action by his earnest appeals. Public officials in cities not included in his appointments have urged him to visit them and speak on Socialism, giving the strongest assurances of a warm public reception. After he had addressed an audience at the Academy of Music, Macon, Ga., which the Macon Press said was "one of the largest and most representative gatherings of citizens ever seen in that house," that paper had this to say:

"Mr. Debs has left behind him in Macon an impression that will not soon be effaced. He has given trades unionism a boom that it could not have secured from the efforts of a dozen speakers. He has encouraged the unionists of Macon to renewed activity, and he pointed out clearly the way in which they should progress."

"But he has not alone aroused the laboring man. He has created an interest in and a sympathy for unionism among all classes of citizens, for there is no doubt of the fact that his lecture had a wonderful influence on general public opinion."

"His labor views were indorsed by the very people in his audience last night who had before misunderstood him. It is a foregone conclusion that the effect of his visit to Macon will be to greatly strengthen unionism and make it more popular."

The Herald Lectures are good for propaganda at 25 cents per hundred copies.

NOTES AND COMMENT

An unusually interesting article discussing the so-called Typical Criminal from the practical man's standpoint will appear in Appletons' Popular Science Monthly for March. The author, the Rev. Samuel G. Smith, who has been chaplain of the Minnesota state prison for a number of years, and hence has had an unusually good opportunity for a study of the criminal classes, is of the opinion that there is no such thing as the "typical criminal," and especially that there are no physical signs of degeneracy by which he can be tagged and put into his appropriate class of degeneracy, as the modern criminologist is so ready to do offhand, after a brief anatomical survey.

Charles Lehr shot and killed himself in Chicago last week. He was driven to the act by poverty. For about one month he had been unable to find work to support his wife and four children. As the average workman after one month's idleness has no way of living except by begging or stealing, Lehr decided to close the account rather than steal or beg. At the same time the social parasites of Chicago are engaging accommodations with Paris hotels for the exposition season at the advanced rate of $9 a day. Workingmen, vote for socialism!

A French writer who has just been elected to the Academy of Forty Immortals is so delighted with the honor that he thinks the United States should have a similar institution. This is a practical suggestion to the capitalist class, since the rich are inevitably excluded from immortality in the kingdom of heaven; and the wage-slave class would doubtless be reconciled to such an institution because as a reward for the oppression they endure here, there will be for them immortality and a home (without a mortgage) over there.

It has been proposed to revise the chronology of the world, abolish the Anno Domini reckoning and start a new era with the beginning of the Victorian era. This would make the current year of 1900 V. E. 64. We object. This we do in behalf of that eminent statesman and modern Saint, William of Cant-on. It is more important than anything else that the reign of cant be perpetuated. So let it stand thus, beginning with the current year, E. C. 4.

What are you doing to help make the special edition of The Herald, March 17, a big success and a grand opening of the national campaign? Don't mind telling you—we think it will be a little the best issue of a Socialist paper ever printed in the United States, and we want you to co-operate as a distributing agent. It's price will be one cent a copy. It's size will be eight pages.

That venerable old pirate, Collis Huntington, has left his church in New York because the pastor criticised the trusts. Collis has made a mistake. He should have brought the pastor to terms and stayed with the church; his class can't afford to break the church trust. That institution is, as it ever was, one of the chief defenses of oppressors and oppression.

To the onlooker at the anti-trust conference last week, the most interesting phase of the whole proceeding could not fail to be the unwillingness of the great majority of delegates to be bound not to support any political party that did not include in its platform a declaration for the public acquisition of railroads and telegraphs.

Miss Edith Sellers, an American, who has resided several years in Berlin, declares in the current number of the Economic Review that she has never seen a hungry looking child in that city. The population of Berlin is made up largely of Socialists and most of its parliamentary representatives are Social Democrats.

The newspapers one day last week reported the purchase of a child by a minister of the gospel in Pennsylvania for one dollar. That minister is not the first to believe that the buying and selling of human beings has the divine sanction.

Missionary in the Philippines: "My dear brother, have you been Christianized?"

The Filipino: "Not completely. They have gobbled all my land, but I still have my breech-cloth."

The Republican senators have tacitly agreed to postpone the Matt Quay case indefinitely. This is an act of cowards in the interest of the administration.

McKinley is reported to be much worried over the failure of his political guardian's pet subsidy scheme to get smooth sailing through congress.

The anti-trust conference is a thing of the past, but the trust is as frisky as ever.

LABOR AND PROGRESS

The British secretary of state for India has received the following telegram from the viceroy on the subject of the famine: "Good rain has fallen again throughout northwestern provinces and Oudh and Punjab. Bowling is recommenced in Punjab, but more rain is needed there. Situation not improved anywhere else, and distress is increasing in Bombay, Central Provinces, and Rajputana. Number of persons in receipt of relief—Bombay, 805,000; Punjab, 147,000; Central Provinces, 1,491,000; Herar, 260,000; Ajmer-Merwara, 109,000; Rajputana States, 232,000; Central India States, 120,000; Bombay Native States, 331,000; Baroda, 63,000; Northwestern Provinces, 4,000; Punjab Native States, 1,000. Total, 3,563,000."

A bill has been introduced into the Dutch parliament which effects several very useful reforms in the factory acts. It limits the hours of labor in dangerous trades, and in all trades ensures that there should be at least 36 hours' rest in the week. If the bill passes it will be a great improvement on existing legislation, and no small credit is due to the arduous exertions of the Socialist leaders, who have been advocating this question for many years.

There are in Holland two groups of Socialists—one the Social-Democrats, who have the same program as the German Socialists; and the other the Socialist League, whose members are hostile or indifferent to parliamentary action. But at present negotiations are going on between the two parties for common action, and a committee is sitting and has decided to call a congress to discuss the question.

The Russian administration in Finland has decided to impose a fine of 500 marks for any attempt to elude a prohibition to publish. The governor general is given the right to demand a change of the responsible publishers on pain of suppression of the journal. The Finnish senate is ordered to devise measures for meeting any infraction of these regulations.

Millerand, the French minister of commerce, issued a very stringent circular to the inspectors of factories, telling them that they are not only to visit the factories to see if there are any complaints, but that they are to act in concert with the representatives of the trade unions and also with the secretaries of the labor bureaus.

From Antwerp report comes that the diamond crisis is assuming grave proportions. Thousands of Amsterdam and Antwerp diamond cutters are now without work. They and their families are in the direst straits and the general business of those towns is also seriously suffering through the war.

A meeting of Socialist doctors was recently held at the Maison du Peuple, Brussels. They decided to form a society for the propagation of socialism among medical men, and also, among other things, to study questions relating to school hygiene.

The Society of Friends, at a conference of its teachers, just held at York, England, devoted a session to the consideration of the best methods of sowing in the minds of boys the seeds of strong democratic citizenship.

The Brussels municipal council have voted the sum of £200 to defray the expenses of workmen delegates to the Paris Exposition. The Socialists tried, but unsuccessfully, to get this subsidy increased to £400.

The Socialist vote in Italy has changed from 1 to 62 in 1892 to 1 to 9 at present. It is made a crime punishable with banishment for soldiers to be found with Socialist literature, but still the movement forges ahead.

The English wallpaper trust, which has been forming since September, is now complete. The capital stock is $30,000,000, and practically every manufacturer in the United Kingdom is in the combination.

A syndicate is to be formed in Lancashire to develop the weaving branch of the cotton trade in Russia, where two large mills will be built, each with accommodation for 600 looms.

The recent senatorial elections in France have resulted in a gain for the Radicals—Socialists and Non-Socialists—of 17 seats.

It is estimated by a London paper that the strength of the Socialist vote in Europe is 7,516,000.

Over 4,000 workmen in six large cigarette factories at Cairo, Egypt, have gone on strike.

Thomas A. Edison, Jr., has been constructed a safety electric miners' lamp.

ORGANIZE FOR 1900

There are few communities in this country today without one or more Socialists who are not affiliated with a Socialist organization. At the last State election in Missouri voters were cast for the candidates of the Social Democratic Party in nearly every county in the State.

In almost every community a thoroughly wide-awake and earnest Socialist, with little exertion, could in one week effect the organization of a branch of the Social Democratic Party.

WHAT THEY CAN DO
The Declaration of Principles and Political Demands of this party will be found in this paper; read it and you will see that the party is a straight, uncompromising Socialist organization, recognized as such in the International movement for Socialism.

UNCOMPROMISING SOCIALIST PARTY
The triumph of the Socialist cause, which is the cause of the world democracy, requires organization, and without it nothing can be accomplished; this party is controlled by no individual nor by any set of individuals short of its entire membership through the referendum.

DEMOCRATIC ORGANIZATION
The year 1900 will be one of great and far-reaching importance to the people and especially to the intelligent, wealth-producing people of the United States; the latter have surely by this time begun to see the futility of any longer giving support to capitalist parties.

THIS YEAR'S CAMPAIGN
Socialists should have as their main object in 1900 the polling of every vote possible for straight and uncompromising Socialism, and to do this the co-operation of every unattached Socialist in the work of organization, where he lives, is necessary.

ORGANIZE WHERE YOU LIVE
The Social Democratic Party is now organized in more than half the States; it consists of Local Branches, State Unions and a National Council. A Local Branch may be organized with five members. It will nominate candidates for President and Vice-President next March.

NOW ORGANIZED
Full instructions and all necessary supplies for organizing Local Branches may be obtained from the National Secretary, Theodore Debs, 126 Washington St., Chicago, Illinois.

OUR LETTER BOX

A PROPAGANDA WAGON

Editor of The Herald: Last summer I announced in your columns that I would start a fund for an agitation van for Wisconsin. The time was too late in the season, however, to make the plan very attractive, as there was no hope of getting such an establishment ready for work before the warm weather was gone. I got some responses, but thought it best to wait till winter was past before actively pushing the matter. The time is now ripe for it, and here I am again. The Wisconsin comrades have been laying up money during the cold months and are now not only on the eve of launching a weekly paper, but have also practically closed negotiations for an organizer. This organizer will have to make excursions into the state, and a van would be a great help to him in covering some of the manufacturing towns that form a chain along the eastern state line and at other points. Also, some of our enthusiasts intend, if the van materializes, to put in their summer vacation as assistant vanners—for a more novel or useful vacation could hardly be thought of. And so on—but the point I want to emphasize here is that the fund is reopened and ready for business. Send in your contributions, even if small. Every little helps. The fund now stands as follows:

Wayfarer $1.00
W. E. Aldridge, Milwaukee50
Eugene V. Debs, Indiana50
Frances Wing, La Crosse10
E. G.15

In addition to the above, Comrade F. G. R. Gordon contributed 100 copies of his "Government Ownership of Railroads."

In England the vans do a big work. In this country they have not been tried to any great extent, owing to the distances between towns and the smallness of the number of workers compared to a country so large. Where the work undertaken is practically confined to one state, however, the first objection is removed, and the other is a condition that has about passed away, for we are getting very numerous, indeed. The last state election showed Socialists in almost every town in Wisconsin, and in looking over the subscription lists of the Social Democratic Herald and the Appeal to Reason I find that the state is very evenly planted for the coming crop. This means that the van would find friends and helpers at almost every point visited. There is missionary work to be done in Wisconsin before the presidential campaign opens. So send in your dimes and dollars—and I should also like to hear from persons who will volunteer to do vanning during their vacations.

Frederick Heath.

IT'S A QUESTION OF FINANCE

Editor of The Herald: The following resolutions were passed by Branch No. 4, Roxbury, Mass., and are to be forwarded to our delegate to the national convention. We trust you will find space for them in your next issue:

"Whereas, It is necessary to the advancement of Socialism that its truths be not only disseminated, but understood by all people, regardless of nativity; and whereas, Our country contains a numerous foreign population to whom the English language but imperfectly expresses thought;

"Whereas, The multiplication of Socialist papers in many languages and with many separate plants results in economic waste, which we as Socialists oppose not only on principle, but because in our present financial weakness we can ill afford it; therefore be it

"Resolved, That foreign-speaking persons should be supplied with Socialist papers in their own language.

"Resolved, That it is an injustice to foreign-speaking members of our party to supply them with a paper which they cannot read, or at least can but imperfectly understand.

"Resolved, That if practicable our national paper should be printed in several languages; if not practicable, arrangements should be made with Socialist papers now printed in foreign languages whereby they shall print certain official matter furnished by the editor of our national paper and supply the same to the foreign-speaking members in our party in place of our national paper, where such members so desire."

Roxbury, Mass. C. W. White.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Comrades Dillon and Arnold have been chosen as national delegates from Dayton, Ohio.

An important meeting of Branch 9, Milwaukee, will be held Friday, Feb. 23, which all comrades should endeavor to attend.

Trades unionists are cordially invited to attend meetings of the Social Democratic branches wherever it is convenient for them to do so.

Social Democratic party meetings are held every Sunday evening at Foresters' Hall, N.W. corner Second and Yamhill, Portland, Ore. You are welcome.

Comrade Benham, editor of the Class

Struggle, San Francisco, will be in Chicago March 3 to 6, inclusive, to speak on the subject of Socialism.

A full attendance of Rockville, Conn., comrades is desired at a joint meeting at Turn Hall, Feb. 25, at 2 p. m., when business of importance will be considered.

The branch at Lynn, Mass., has a boom on. Ten new members were elected at a recent meeting, a piano has been secured for the hall and the branch had a whist party Feb. 20.

At a joint meeting of the South Side branches, Milwaukee, Comrade Albert F. Forman was elected delegate to the national convention. The branches also elected a campaign committee of eight.

Among the callers at headquarters during the week was Dr. H. B. Fay, of Minneapolis, Minn., a prominent mid-road Populist with pronounced inclination toward Socialism and the Social Democratic party.

All Socialists residing at Somerville, Mass., who wish to organize a branch of the Social Democratic party at that place are requested to communicate by letter or card with S. E. Putney, 4 Belmont street.

O, yes, O, yes! Hear ye! Growth is the order everywhere. The Granite Falls (Minn.) branch is keeping up with the procession. At its meeting last week eight new members were admitted. It is the order of the day—agitation and growth.

The amount of the campaign fund which McKinley's bosom friend, Hanna, is arranging for is said to be $25,000,000. And every dollar of it will be expended in behalf of "pure politics," for the "enlightenment of the people" and—the perpetuation of the power of the class which contributes the money.

The Cedar Junction (Kan.) branch has started a series of meetings in which music, readings and a question box afford pleasure and instruction to those attending. Questions relating to Socialism are deposited in the box and read to the meeting, thus starting profitable discussion.

Comrade A. S. Edwards spoke at the Hull House on "The Greatest Fact of the Century," Tuesday evening, Feb. 13. Comrade Peter Sissman was the speaker last Tuesday and Comrade Seymour Stedman is announced for Tuesday next. Talk up the Tuesday meetings at the Hull House.

The Herald welcomes to its exchange a new exponent of Socialistic principles in the Milwaukee Social Democrat. The movement in Wisconsin has for some time been in need of an English weekly, and the first number of the new paper shows that it will fill the bill. It is well edited and printed and sells for $1 a year. Office, 614 State street, Milwaukee, Wis.

Susanville (Cal.) branch, at a meeting held Jan. 29, appointed a committee, composed of Comrades Hibbard, Pyle, Leonard, Brashear and Cunningham, to arrange a Ruskin memorial evening, at which members and invited ladies and gentlemen will give sketches from Ruskin's noble words, and of the good work he accomplished, with music ad libitum.

We expect to charge a small admission fee, the proceeds of which will be denoted towards the free town library fund. Similar meetings we think could be made very profitable in each branch. Try it.

INFORMATION FOR DELEGATES TO THE CONVENTION

For the information of delegates and others attending the national convention at Indianapolis, March 6, The Herald is able to say:

1. That our Indianapolis comrades have arranged for the use of Reichwein's Hall, situated at the corner of Market and Noble streets. This hall will easily seat 200 delegates, is well lighted and has rooms for committees. The rental expense for convention uses will be moderate, though it may be necessary to hire additional chairs and tables.

2. The New Occidental Hotel management will make a special rate of $1.50 per day to delegates. The hotel is centrally located at Washington and Illinois streets, three blocks from the Union depot and nine blocks from the hall.

Comrade Hugo Miller writes us that the Indianapolis friends will be fully prepared to find accommodations for every delegate according to his wishes, and has kindly offered to secure accommodations in advance for any desiring private quarters. Comrade Miller's address is 333 Davidson street.

MORE PRIZES OFFERED

Comrade Forman of Milwaukee is bound to do all in his power to have the comrades understand that one of the most important things to do is to put the circulation of The Herald to the front. We trust that the members everywhere will agree with him. He now adds to his former offer of prizes for the three largest lists of new subscribers sent to this paper between Feb. 1 and April 30 the following:

"History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," by Edward Gibbon, in five volumes; one set.

Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "Les Misérables," two volumes, unabridged; 1,300 pages. Three sets.

The prize list as it now stands is given below:

First Prize—One set Dickens' complete works, 15 volumes; one set Gibbon's "History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," 5 volumes; one set Carlyle's "French Revolution," 2 volumes; one set Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "Les Misérables," 2 volumes.

Second Prize—One set Carlyle's "French Revolution," 2 volumes; one set Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "Les Misérables," 2 volumes.

Third Prize—Same as second prize.

Fourth Prize (offered by Comrade Geo. H. Goebel of Philadelphia)—A first-class fountain pen.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS DANCE

The first social event undertaken by the Women's Social Democratic club of Haverhill was all that it deserved to be—a splendid success, says the Haverhill Social Democrat. There is no exaggeration in the statement that the concert and dance given on Friday evening of last week was one of the most enjoyable occasions that the Social Democratic workers of the city have known in many years.

The affair was looked forward to with much anxiety by the members and all those interested in the club and the party. The club had only been organized during the past two months, and the preparations for this, their first attempt at a public entertainment, were consequently of a hurried nature. When, too, the day arrived and with it the coldest weather of the winter, there were not a few who felt despondent and tremulous of the effect upon the coming event. When, however, the concert was over that night and 125 couples had formed into the grand march, everybody felt elated and joyous at the success already assured.

It was a great function. It has long been an accepted fact that there is more real fraternity to be found among a crowd of Socialists who understand each other, as all good Socialists do, than among any other kind of people in the world. And as the Social Democrats of Haverhill are in thorough harmony one with the other, this occasion was no exception to the rule. The result has been a better acquaintance, a strengthening of the ties that bind the local workers for Socialism together and a firmer determination to make the opportunities for social enjoyment easier of access to all the race.

The grand march began at 9:30 o'clock and was led by Mayor Chase and Mrs. Kate Corrigan, president of the club, followed by Representative James F. Carey and Mrs. F. G. R. Gordon of Manchester, N. H., a welcome guest of the club. From that time until midnight the dancing went on. Everybody was jolly, everybody was smiling; not one incident occurred to mar the harmony of the evening.

It would be useless to mention all who were present. It was remarked by a gentleman who had every reason to be a reliable authority that there were people in the hall who had seldom if ever been seen at an affair of the kind before. There has been so much work done by the Social Democrats of Haverhill the past two years that there has been little time for play. There have been few social pleasures, and if this occasion did nothing else, it has relieved the monotony of the grind of work both in and out of the workshop.

It was a good thing to see some folks take part in the dancing who had never danced before, as well as others who had not danced in years. The spirit of fun and good-fellowship was infectious and for the moment the cares of everyday life were thrown away. It was indeed a great function, and when the crowds good-naturedly went down the stairs to go home and greeted the cold, clear, frosty air again, it was with the satisfaction of knowing that that evening was only the first of many such for the Social Democrats and their friends in Haverhill.

The committee who arranged and managed the event was Mrs. Kate Corrigan, Mrs. F. C. Beals, Mrs. Sherman, Mrs. J. W. Evans, Mrs. A. Tracy and Mrs. Anna Young. The committee did their work well and had the hall tastefully decorated for the occasion. Sandy Hayman acted as floor manager and was assisted by Alderman Louis M. Scates and Councilman Joseph Bellefeuille.

A PLEA FOR SOCIALISM

By Charles Trench

My working readers: have you ever attended one of our fashionable theaters? It is most probable that you have. Did the thought ever cross your mind that there was a glaring unfitness of things exhibited in what you saw around you? While you, and your wives, were crowded in a back row of uncomfortable seats, seeing little, and hearing less of the performance, did it not occur to you that you, the real creators of all the wealth and splendor around you, ought to be better accommodated? If you could not distinctly observe the actors, you could not, at any rate, fail to see the gorgeous beings who occupied the choicest seats and boxes, before and above you. "Even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Shame on it, that these gaudy puppets of fashion, who never lift a straw from the burden of humanity, are distinguished as the upper class of society!

Behold those groups of dames and dukes, jaded with dissipation, or bloated with sensuality. Think of it! Labor ill fed, ill housed, and ill clad, carries these worthless burdens upon its bending back. Labor lodges them in stately mansions; rolls them about in splendid equipages; clothes them in sumptuous raiment; feasts them, perfumes them, and bedizens them with diamonds and precious stones. What a rampant satire upon human nature! Bless me! Even one of those faded belles carries more jewels on her shriveled neck and arms than could maintain twenty workmen and their families for the remainder of their lives. Her husband wrecked three banks, and two railroads; with her, money is no object. Her only family consists of three little dogs, each with a collar worth ten thousand dollars on its neck; three lackeys, in livery, groom, comb, and wash them in Florida water every day.

How transcendently absurd it seems that poor toilers for bread, in pestiferous tenements and workshops, are obliged to pay for all this vulgar vanity and ostentation! Why, in the name of all that is rational, is this horrible anarchy of crime and injustice tolerated? I will tell you.

It is because labor, debarrd from all that gladdens, elevates, and embellishes life, has no time to reflect. The mind of labor has become more or less torpid and stultified through its prolonged and exhausting battle for existence. While wage-slaves are desperately struggling for a miserable pittance, money kings, trusts and other robbers are plundering them. Trades unions, rouse yourselves! The majority of you are enervated by excessive toil. Many of you are made drunkards and paupers by physical prostration, incurred by over-work. Your nerves being overtaxed, Nature cries aloud for stimulants, and you find them in the dram shops. Hypocrites and hirelings of capitalism endeavor to persuade you that poverty is caused by intemperance. But this nonsense does not hold water. Science and statistics inform us that poverty and overwork are responsible for nearly nine-tenths of the vices which degrade the working classes.

Capitalism and machinery are now the two thieves between whom labor is crucified. Demolish the first, and own the second, and then, and not till then, will the fetters of the wage-slave be broken. We have been drifting from bad to worse so long that only radical measures can rescue labor from the depths to which it has sunk. Machinery has become so effective that it has far outdone human skill and dexterity in all departments of industry. In fact, being monopolized by capitalism, it has inflicted a fearful amount of human suffering on the world. Indeed, the saying now is current that the more ignorant and more uncivilized the machine tender is, the better fitted he is for the service of capitalism.

Trades unions of America, what are you going to do about it? Dangers of greatest magnitude are looming on the horizon. You are one of the most powerful forces in American politics. The peril ahead are too glaring for such a large and energetic majority to remain passive. The tools of capitalism have so narcotized the nation by humbug and buncombe that large masses of the people cannot see the dark and threatening clouds that are gathering from almost every point of the compass. Go over the history of our legislation for the last thirty-odd years; and what has it been? An amount of aggravated treachery, duplicity and rascality never surpassed in history. The lavish sums of public money, thrown away in sham appropriations; the immense subsidies voted to trusts and corporations; the enormous and rapid increase of taxation—all add to the flames of insurrection which are kindling in every state of the Union.

Come then ye workers and join the Social Democratic party. Its platform is social ownership of all land and all instruments of productive industry. He is but a poor observer who cannot perceive that socialism is the only means of averting wide-spread violence and revolution.

socialism, nor even that all of our members should; but I do know that before we can have the co-operative, commonwealth we have got to permeate this great mass of apathetic indifferent, hopeless workingmen and women with Socialist ideas, and the better we understand them ourselves the easier will be our task,—the more readily can we adapt our explanations to the degree of intelligence of our listeners. Because some foolish people have abused and made a laughing stock of the term "scientific socialism" is no reason why intelligent people should have any aversion to the term nor to the thing it implies. It is the plain duty of every member of a Socialist party to make himself so thoroughly acquainted with true scientific socialism that he will be able to explain it in simple, ordinary language whenever opportunity offers. It is a very easy matter to parrot a certain set of phrases, taken bodily from Marx or Engels; but it is quite a different and much more difficult thing to grasp the meaning of Marx and Engels, and translate their technical phrases to plain, every-day English. We must endeavor to get beyond the stage where we cannot recognize socialism unless it is dressed in a particular suit of clothes "made in Germany."

A good book to begin on is Vail's "Principles of Scientific Socialism." Hyndman's "Social Economics" is also good; and every Socialist should read the Kautsky pamphlets, and Engel's "Socialism, From Utopia to Science."

This advice is of course for the very new members. All the older ones have already read these books, of course. It should be our pride and our ambition to understand our subject thoroughly, and be able, either with tongue or pen, to give a reason for the faith that is in us, to defend our principles against all attacks, and to answer all kinds of questions. To my mind, this is an ambition even more laudable than to run for office on the S. D. P. ticket, and get a lot of personal advertising. There are other ways of working for the cause besides running for common council or representative to the great and general court. It is not the politician we need in our party just now. We will get enough of his kind without advertising in the "Want" column. What we need is Socialists, good, firm, thoroughly grounded Socialists, "and plenty of 'em," as the Bounder says—enough of them to serve as the necessary ballast to enable our craft to safely carry her giddy spread of political sail.

Finally, my brethren, get to work and study socialism. Let your minds be filled with its principles and your hearts with its lofty purposes. Let it be your ambition to teach socialism, rather than to run for office. Prepare yourselves to respond to calls such as the one which is the text of this sermon; and let all the branches, both old and new, make many more such calls upon the members of their own and other branches; for who knows but that the stammering maiden speech of the "plain, blunt man, who only speaks right on and tells them that which they themselves do know" may be the means of carrying the truths home to many hearts, and winning them to our cause.

LAW AND ORDER

The shooting of Gov.-elect W. Goebel of Kentucky, at Frankfort, is replete with significant meaning not merely to Socialists but also to that class from whose honest but misguided ranks many Socialists come—viz., the progressive wing of the Democratic party. Goebel was to the state of Kentucky what William Jennings Bryan is to the nation at large.

It is a well known fact that Milton H. Smith, president of the Louisville & Nashville railroad, whom Goebel had frequently condemned and proposed to attack when in the gubernatorial chair, had publicly declared that Goebel would be prevented from being sworn in, even if violence should be necessary.

Strange to say, the day before the shooting, Bryan made a speech here in Jersey City in which he stated that progressive democracy has nothing in common with either anarchism or socialism. Recklessly confusing either in malice or ignorance two opposite ideas and repudiating all connection with either in order to make himself and his policy acceptable to certain eastern Democrats who objected to his denunciatory tone towards the plutocracy, Bryan had barely finished his oration when from that state, truly termed since the time of Daniel Boone "The Dark and Bloody Ground," came the report of a Winchester and the dying groan of the chief executive of the state.

With the death of Goebel the capitalist opposition to the Democratic party ceases, because T. C. W. Beckham, the lieutenant governor-elect, is a man of upper class family, is more conservative in tone in politics, and not openly opposed to the plutocracy and railroad magnates. The incident is significant. Many imagine that the plain and undisguised socialism of the Social Democratic party could not be brought about without vigorous and even forcible measures, and that a gradual achievement of our ends along the line of moderate reform could be peacefully obtained. Recent developments in Frankfort prove the contrary. Advocate a moderate reform by an advanced Democrat and you will be shot. Why not bluntly and openly demand the full platform of the Social Democrats; that is, ownership by a popular government of all the means of producing and transporting wealth? They cannot do more than shoot you.

One more peculiar feature worth commenting upon in this case is that the assassin is not a Lucheni misanthropic degenerate, ignorant and vulgar. The real murderers are railroad magnates and a Republican governor. There are honest but misguided Democrats, and to such I say: Come out from among them. Should you elect your man he will be sworn in with a Winchester. Do you fear anarchists and abhor violence? Then leave your associates, for they are the anarchists.

James Allman.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness for every man, woman and child are conditioned upon equal political and economic rights. That private ownership of the means of production and distribution of wealth has caused society to split into two distinct classes, with conflicting interests, the small possessing class of capitalists or exploiters of the labor force of others, and the vast and ever-increasing dispossessed class of wage-workers, who are deprived of the socially-due share of their product.

That capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people.

That the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system, will compel the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare, or result in the destruction of civilization.

That the trade union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors in the present struggle, and representing its economic, the other its political wing, and that both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system of production and distribution.

Therefore, the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be the establishment of a system of co-operative production and distribution through the restoration to the people of all the means of production and distribution, to be administered by organized society in the interest of the whole people, and the complete emancipation of society from the domination of capitalism.

The wage-workers and all those in sympathy with their historical mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic Party will be tantamount to the abolition of capitalism and the establishment of Socialism.

The solidarity of labor connecting us with millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in this direction, we make the following demands:

1. Revision of our antiquated Federal Constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to full and complete control of government by all the people, irrespective of sex.
2. The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.
3. The public ownership of all railroads, telegraph, telephone, all means of transportation, communication, water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.
4. The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal and all other mines; also of all oil and gas wells.
5. Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.
6. The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.
7. All useful inventions to be free to all, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.
8. Labor legislation to be made national, instead of local, and international where possible.
9. National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.
10. Equal civil and political rights for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.
11. The adoption of the Initiative and Referendum, and of recall of representatives by the voters.
12. Abolition of war as far as the United States is concerned and the introduction of international arbitration instead.

MILWAUKEE SOCIALISTS IN CONVENTION ASSEMBLED

Grand and Harmonious Gathering
Under the Banner of Social Demo-

Forces with the Social Democratic Party of America

Frederic Heath Nominated for Mayor

Social Democrats began the spring campaign last Monday evening (Feb. 12) by a nominating convention that was remarkable in many ways. The big hall of the Deutscher Maennerverein, at State and Eighth streets, was crowded to the doors. It was an assemblage highly creditable to the political labor movement, and some of the old stagers in labor circles declared that its like had never been seen, and that the People's party even in its palmy days in Milwaukee had never had such an imposing convention.

When the hour for opening the meeting arrived, Victor L. Berger, as state organizer for the party, appeared upon the stage and declared the convention in session. He made an address of welcome and then announced a song by the Socialistic Maennerchor. The boys sang with enthusiasm and were loudly applauded. Robert Mister was chosen temporary chairman and Eugene Rooney temporary secretary. Mr. Meister then named the following committees:

On credentials—Comrades George Moerschel, Jacob Hunger, Emil Seidel, Edward Ziegler and Dr. H. C. Berger. On order of business—Comrades Louis Wieman, C. A. Blodgett and J. C. Underhill.

While the committees were at work Comrade Frederic G. Strickland, of Chicago, was introduced to the convention, and made a stirring address.

The committees then reported. The report on credentials showed a total of 147 delegates, of which 37 were from the branches of the party, 43 from the wards, and 67 from the various trade unions. The delegates were then seated according to the localities and organizations, and there was applause when the union delegates took their seats, the representatives of the Socialist Labor party also receiving like courtesy.

While the committees were out Dr. Titus Voelkel made an address in German.

The committee on resolutions reported the following:

"Whereas: The trade union movement of the working class is an inevitable manifestation of the struggle between capital and labor and is absolutely necessary to resist the superior economic power of capital and to maintain their standard of life; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we hereby reaffirm the expression of our national convention in this respect and recommend to all members of our party to join the organization to which they respectively belong, and we also pledge ourselves to patronize every union label in the market; furthermore, be it

"Resolved, That we fully recognize that the exploitation of the working people will cease only when society gets a hold of the production and distribution, and that we therefore brand as traitors and Judases such trade union leaders who for their personal gain try to hide the class struggle and hold the union men to the capitalist party."

Then a communication was presented by Section Milwaukee, Socialist Labor party, which was as follows:

"Whereas: Our national convention has declared in favor of union of all Socialist forces;

"Resolved, That Section Milwaukee make no nominations in the spring campaign, for the reason that the Social Democracy party represents the class conscious labor party in Milwaukee and as our national convention, held in Rochester, N. Y., January 27, 1900, has declared that the Social Democratic party is a class conscious labor party, therefore Section Milwaukee deems it advisable to join forces with the Social Democratic party."

Nominations were now declared in order. For mayor, Howard Tuttle, C. A. Blodgett and Frederic Heath were nominated. Comrade Blodgett withdrew his name. The balloting resulted as follows:

Tuttle—50.

On motion of Comrade Berger the nomination of Comrade Heath was made unanimous, and Mr. Heath thanked the convention for the honor it did him.

For comptroller the nomination came thick and fast, Comrades Max Hinz, Edw. Ziegler, Nicholas Schwinn, Gustave Richter and Louis Arnold being named. All save Comrade Hinz declined and he was nominated by acclamation. Mr. Hinz thanked the convention and promised to stand by the fight to the bitter end.

Comrades Jacob Hunger, Eugene Rooney, John Doerfler, Thomas C. P. Myers, Howard Tuttle and Albert Forman were nominated for treasurer, but all declined out Myers and Tuttle, and the following vote was taken:

Tuttle—100.

Myers—43.

Mr. Tuttle was declared the nominee, and as he was absent from the city, a delegate announced that he had agreed to serve in any capacity the party saw fit to demand his services.

The convention then gave to the central committee the right to fill vacancies and to conduct the campaign.

Before the convention adjourned speeches were made by John Moser and Eugene Rooney.

The platform adopted declares against public franchises to corporations, in favor of attorneys for the poor, free medicines and baths, coal, wood and ice at cost, abolition of the slums and one daily meal to all school children, and says:

"The Social Democratic party of America is the American expression of the international movement of modern wage workers for better food, better houses, more sleep, more leisure, more education, and more culture. Those who toil with hands and brain are the producers of all wealth, but as laws are now made in the interest of property rather than men, the rights of the workers, although they are in the great majority, are ignored."

What shall be the edition of the big double number of The Herald, March 17, with all its special features designed to interest people in Socialism this year? That depends on how well the comrades and readers co-operate with us. We can make arrangements for printing a million copies, but must have orders in advance. Order a thousand copies for propaganda in your town.

A Stunning Lie

The latest of the philosophers to discuss Truth is Mark Twain, who gives it as his idea that the greatest lie on record is Carlyle's "stunning lie" that "a lie shall not live."

The truest thing known to Mark Twain is "the universal conspiracy of the silent-assertion lie," "the silent colossal national lie that is the support and confederate of all the tyrannies and shams and inequalities and unfairnesses that afflict the peoples," "a most majestic lie that the civilizations made it their sacred and anxious care to guard and watch and propagate."

Mark gives examples: "For instance," he says, "it would not be possible for a humane and intelligent person to invent a rational excuse for slavery; yet you will remember that in the early days of the emancipation agitation in the north the agitators got but small help or countenance from any one. Argue and plead and pray as they might, they could not break the universal stillness that reigned, from pulpit and press all the way down to the bottom of society—the clammy stillness created and maintained by the lie of silent assertion—the silent assertion that there wasn't anything going on in which humane and intelligent people were interested."

"From the beginning of the Dreyfus case to the end of it all France, except a couple of dozen moral paladins, lay under the smother of the silent-assertion lie that no wrong was being done to a persecuted and unoffending man. The like smother was over England lately, a good half of the population silently letting on that they were not aware that Mr. Chamberlain was trying to manufacture a war in South Africa, and was willing to pay fancy prices for the materials."

"Now here we have instances of three prominent ostensible civilizations working the silent-assertion lie. Could one find other instances in the three countries? I think so. Not so very many, perhaps, but say a billion—just so as to keep within bounds. Are those countries working that kind of lie, day in and day out, in thousands and thousands of varieties, without ever resting? Yes, we know that to be true. The universal conspiracy of the silent-assertion lie is hard at work always and everywhere, and always in the interest of a stupidity or a sham, never in the interest of a thing fine or respectable. It is the most timid and shabby of all lies? It seems to have the look of it. For ages and ages it has mutely labored in the interest of despotisms and aristocracies and chattel slaveries and military slaveries and religious slaveries, and has kept them alive; keeps them alive yet, here and there and yonder, all about the globe; and will go on keeping them alive until the silent-assertion lie retires from business—the silent assertion that nothing is going on which fair and intelligent men are aware of and are engaged by their duty to try to stop."

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

A Crisis.

There come times, in the lives of persons and of parties, when a word or an act decides the character of destiny. Fortune and Failure, in self-same apparel, and with features alike, present themselves before us. Future fate is dependent on the choice.

To such a time do we, as a party, now approach. The question of union with an organization similar in plan and purpose to our own comes up for settlement. It is the issue, just now, of paramount importance.

Upon its wise settlement much depends. A misstep just at this critical time in the progress of American socialism and of our branch of it, might cause incalculable harm. On the other hand, the wise welding of the kindred socialist forces into a united and harmonious whole would be of vast help to the movement.

Hence it is a question that calls for our most careful consideration and our most conscientious judgment.

An Unbiased View.

It is imperative that we approach the matter with unbiased minds. From the circumstances of the case it is almost impossible for us not to be prejudiced, and to have conceptions of persons and things that hinder an unbiased opinion.

How often an old prejudice blinds one to a new truth! How often a little venom, like a speck of dust in the eye, obscures our vision of the right and best! How often a petty dislike of a person leads to the pettish rejection of the principle or party for which that person professedly stands!

And so in this matter of union we are in danger of being biased by sentiment on one side or by prejudice on the other. Who of us, on hearing that magic word "unite," is not moved to fling caution to the winds and exercise only an open-handed hospitality? And on the other hand, how many there are of us whose memories still involuntarily weave the thorns of unhappy association around the letters S. L. P.?

It is needful, therefore, to lay aside the rosy glasses of sentiment and the smoked glasses of prejudice, and to look, with keen, unobscured eyes at the problem presented.

Socialism or Socialism?

One thing that must be done is to distinguish between socialism and socialism. The failure to do this has resulted in many misconceptions and mistakes.

What I mean is this: Socialism is the mental product of an individual mind, arbitrarily applied to the social life of a nation. It is a system of industrial life that has been marked out by scientific rule and compass, without regard to human fault or change.

Socialism is the result of the gradual evolution of industry, fitting itself to the changes and the needs of man. It is the great principle of social justice slowly asserting itself in spite of capital's opposition and labor's apathy.

The one plans to banish winter by means of stoves, while the other simply waits the warm breath of summer.

The one marks out a path, and curses all who do not walk therein, while the other sees that myriad paths may lead toward the same goal.

The one is a magic formula for social health, locked in a party chest, while the other is a gradual outworking of a natural law.

Our Cussed Conceit.

There was once an old Scotch lady whose mind was somewhat perturbed concerning the orthodoxy of her fellow members in the kirk. One day, while speaking of them, she exclaimed, emphatically, "There's nane o' them soand save the meenister and mesel", and I ha'e ma doots aboot him, ye ken!"

And there are Socialists, and Socialist parties, who constitute themselves the keepers of orthodoxy. In the words of Scripture, they say "I am the door. By me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved. Whoever climbeth in some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

If they are to be believed, they are the divinely-appointed guardians of the only gate leading into the co-operative commonwealth, and every candidate for entrance must first pass under their rod.

Now it may be that we are not altogether free from that spirit. As a matter of fact, we are not. There are not a few of us who, considering the power and promise of our particular party, consider that we, and we alone, are the particular seed from which shall sprout the tree of national socialism.

In our eighteen months' life, we have not had time to develop many faults, and as we draw back our skirts from the defilement of those whose ragged dress proclaim a rougher road and a longer journey, some call it caution. Others call it conceit.

Movements and Men.

Again we must remember that movements are infinitely larger than men. We are so apt to pin our faith to a leader, and regard him as the soul, head, and heart of the movement, and we degrade the movement and ourselves into subservient helplessness.

I stand upon the beach. The foremost wave rolls proudly in, and as it breaks, it groans, "There, the tide is defeated, for I am broken." Is it? Does not the tide roll irresistibly in, in spite of the broken waves in front?

And so the movement of socialism is not thwarted or retarded by the fall of a leader, or the change of a party. The form may alter but the fact and the force remain the same.

I have seen small bodies of Socialists mapping out, in their half-wisdom, a certain plan of action and prophesying universal doom if their dictum be not adopted. But the movement sweeps on, overturning their petty plans, and the predicted disaster does not appear.

And more, no single individual can stay a live movement. Some of us here in the east are afraid, in these unionist days, of a certain Eve getting into our political Eden and raising Cain.

But, by the gods, if we can be bested by a woman, then the sooner we dig our graves the better.

A Plea for Peace.

Hence, in this matter of union, let us avoid being biased, let us not be overly self-righteous, let us recognize the unity of socialistic force, and face the problem with a dominant desire to adopt the course which seems to us best adapted to the present needs of the Socialist movement.

If it be possible to effect a satisfactory union with the non-conformist branch of the S. L. P., let every Social Democrat rejoice, and be ready to give the hand of welcome to our new allies. A union has advantages of marvelous merit, and it will be a matter for sincere thankfulness if it can wisely be effected.

Get rid of that damnable distrust of those who wear a badge different from your own. Sometimes I think that Socialists, in their revulsion of sentiment against the trusts, have adopted the principle of constant distrust.

And if, on the other hand, union be not deemed advisable at this present juncture, let us see that our chance for work is not impaired. Union or no union, we must forge ahead, agitate, educate, organize, elect, gathering the ever increasing converts of socialism into orderly ranks, preparatory to the future fight.

I do not here advise as to the matter of settlement of prejudice, and a willingness to fit oneself into new conditions for the continuance of the old fight.

A NEW CONVERT

Dr. Blumhardt, a famous Protestant clergyman of Wurtemberg, Germany, has astounded the church and state by an open declaration in favor of Social Democracy. From his address, which has been published throughout Germany, we take the following:

"When I look at the present condition of the workingman, I much despair that civilization and Christianity have not yet produced better results. Through legislative enactments practically no substantial improvement of the condition of the poor has been or can be accomplished. I can see no way for permanent betterment except by an absolute reorganization of the social status of modern society. For many years it has been my conviction that no religion is worth anything that can not transform society and raise it to a higher and better level and make men happy here on earth. In this sense I understand the Scriptures, and in that sense I understand my Christ. And therefore I feel myself inwardly related to those people who are charged with aiming at a Utopia; I am their associate and one with them in spirit. May the time come when money shall not be the measure of all things and of all values, but the life and happiness of man shall become the chief thing."

"Let it not be regarded as astonishing that a man who confesses the Lord Jesus Christ acknowledges his agreement with the ideas of Social Democracy, with the poor working people of the land. For Christ Himself was of the lowly. He was crucified because He was a Socialist; twelve members of the proletariat were His apostles. People are mistaken when they think a man ceases to be a Christian when he joins the proletariat. Paul did the same thing. It is impossible that the present condition of affairs should continue among the working people, and this change must be effected along the lines pointed out by Social Democracy."

Five Hundred Votes for Socialism

Erie, Pa., Feb. 24, 1900.

From the returns filed in the prothonotary's office we furnish The Herald with the facts about the contest Tuesday that our city papers failed, through a tacit understanding, to give to their readers. This is one of the dirty tricks of capitalism—to keep anything from its readers that will tend to destroy their game of buncoing and deceiving the people. In the November election for the office of register and recorder there were polled 6,075 votes in the city. Of these Comrade Allen polled 197, or 3.2 per cent.

In the recent election there was polled 6,093 votes, of which the Social Democratic Party polled 485, or about 8 per cent, and the Socialist Labor Party, the De Leon faction, 60 votes, or 1 per cent. Thus, comrades and brothers, having polled 3 per cent last fall, in three months' time we have made the handsome, flattering and hopeful increase of 300 per cent at this election, when we polled over 9 per cent.

These men have voted and are with us to stay in the ranks of brotherhood—Socialism—to be no longer partisans but brothers indeed. Had a full vote been polled the Social Democratic Party would have polled 1,000 votes. Many a stay-at-home, democrat and republican, did not come to the polls for the reason, they are reading and thinking as they have never read or thought before, and who will come in and help themselves and their brothers' interest by voting for the ticket this presidential year for a Socialist president.

Every man who voted the ticket should drop a letter to Walter H. Miller, 552 East Eighth street, the able and efficient city chairman, congratulating him upon the victory gained and pledging him their further support. Write him anyway; he wants to meet personally every man who voted the ticket. With the nucleus of 500 votes we can make it 5,000 votes this fall in the city. Now, comrades and brothers, do your duty and write him at once.

The daily papers have given you their side, so we will give you the side untold:

THE UNIVERSAL PROVIDER

The office of the great department store as a universal provider has seldom been more strikingly shown than in the recent application of an Iowa farmer to a store in Dubuque for a wife. The store management advertised that they could furnish absolutely anything a person could want, and informed the reader that if the article desired was not on hand they would "hustle around and get it." The advertisement chanced to fall under the notice of a lonesome farmer in want of a wife. He wrote the business manager of the universal provider and in less than a week letters were received from four women who were willing to share his joys and sorrows. The latest account said he was undecided which one he would marry, but was sure to take one of them, and he was satisfied that these modern department stores were really a good thing.

Do not forget or fail to order 100 or 500 copies of the big double number of The Herald to be printed March 17. Will contain complete report of the convention, special contributed articles, facts and data for the propaganda, illustrations, etc. A splendid number to start the campaign with. One cent per copy. Every branch should order not less than 500 copies.

THE LOUD BILL PASSES

The readiness of the average American politician to assail the rights of the people with laws designed to curtail freedom of speech and dissemination of intelligence is well illustrated in the successful passage of what is known as the Loud bill, the operation of which will impose unjust burdens upon thousands of publishers and prove ruinous to many. It is characteristic of a large majority of lawmakers that instead of directing their efforts to the removal of real grievances, they turn their official opportunities to account in behalf of the system they uphold; that is to say, capitalists politicians legislate for their masters and not for the people.

For years there has been an opportunity for some patriotic statesman with a consuming desire to prove that the people are represented at Washington and have some influence there as well as corporation lobbyists, by pushing a measure to correct the gross inequity of rates paid by our capitalistic government to private railroad companies for carrying the mails. But Republican and Democratic statesmen are never found in that kind of a "push." Any attempt on that line has met with the interested opposition of those who are in Washington to represent the railroads.

It has never been a matter of surprise to those acquainted with the truth as to the exorbitant charges of the railroads for carrying mail, that the postoffice department has year after year shown a growing deficit in proportion to the amount of mail carried. For years attention had been called to this, long even before Mr. Loud began his systematic attack on free publication in the name of economy. For years it has been known that the chief cause of postal deficits was corporation pillage. But the corporations being strongly entrenched at the nation's capital and having greater influence there than the people, the so-called statesmen have been allowed to make reputations for themselves by adding to the burdens of the people and winking at the depredations of the capitalist class.

THE QUESTION OF UNION

The question of greatest immediate importance to all militant Socialists in the United States, and one in which a multitude of people as yet unaffiliated with any Socialist organization also have a lively and expectant interest, is that of the proposed union of the Socialist Labor party and the Social Democratic party. Our readers are aware that this subject was discussed pro and con in these columns for three months, beginning last November, and with very few exceptions the expressions of opinion published have been favorable to union. We make this statement at this time for the purpose of correcting a misunderstanding based upon a partial acquaintance with the facts, and because of what has appeared to The Herald as a studied effort on the part of prominent advocates of union to discredit, in advance of the Indianapolis convention, the motive of some of the comrades officially connected with the S. D. P. The matter of union is one concerning which there is and can be, at bottom, only one opinion. That it is most desirable none are bold enough to question. The Social Democratic party stands for unification of the Socialist forces of this country. It has so stood from the day of its organization. If individual members differ as to the first thing to be done in order that union may eventually be reached, who shall question their right, in the light of the experience of the past, so to do? It is just possible that as much virtue may be contained in a word of caution as in a whirlwind of clamor. At any rate neither party to the prospective negotiations has a monopoly of virtue and disinterested devotion to the cause of socialism in this country. Let that much, at least, be understood and conceded, then perhaps the path to ultimate union will have one turn less.

There is not, there has never been at any time since the Rochester convention, the slightest doubt that the representatives of the S. L. P. to Indianapolis would be received in a fraternal spirit, with cordial greeting and good fellowship, and any intimation to the contrary, from whatever source it has come, is a jarring note, well calculated, whether designedly or not, to promote a propaganda of discord.

Delegates to the Indianapolis convention will go there imbued with one spirit and actuated by one motive—to do the best thing for the advance of socialism in this monopoly-ruled and capitalist-owned country. What that action will be The Herald does not assume to say. That will be a matter for the convention to decide and we have no doubt that, acting in the full light of all the information they will have, the delegates will do the thing that is best and wisest for the cause of socialism.

NOTES AND COMMENT

The organization of the sash and door manufacturers of Chicago into a trust will effect the following savings in the operation of thirty-two establishments:

Saving in operation.....	$346,382
Saving in interest.....	25,000
Saving in discounts.....	25,000
Saving in purchases.....	175,000
Saving in equalization of prices.....	125,000
Total.....	$666,382

And yet the anti-trust Bryanators want to destroy trusts and go back to a system of enormous waste to preserve individual liberty and competition!

That middle-class reform organization, the American Anti-Trust League, through its president, M. L. Lockwood, proposes as "the most important remedy" for the deliverance of the people from the power of modern capitalism, national ownership of the railroads. That will leave intact the three methods of the capitalist class for exploiting labor—rent, interest and profit—furnishing that class somewhat better facilities, perhaps, for distributing their goods. It will scarcely touch the labor problem; it will not help the toolless, workless, landless, homeless proletariat! It is not a remedy!

A week ago last Sunday the Chicago Tribune printed a special cable dispatch from Germany giving an account of Wagner's revolutionary ideas and banishment from his native country because he was considered a "dangerous character." Last Sunday the Chicago Tribune printed an editorial to disprove the claim of Bernard Shaw that Wagner was a Socialist and revolutionist. The only conclusion left is that since Wagner is well known to have been a disturbing element and a cordial hater of the capitalist system, the cause of his banishment was that he wrote good music.

A most gratifying sign of the times is a distinct growth of interest in Socialism among trades unionists. This is strongly marked in the affiliation of members of trades unions with the Social Democratic Party. Everywhere our principles and tactics are being warmly endorsed. The S. D. P. is making great strides as the party of the working class. It has a place and a welcome for every man who accepts its principles and sees the need for a party of the wealth producers of this country.

The campaign at Erie, Pa., was short but decisive as to the fact that the Social Democratic party has made a notable advance in that city. The comrades are greatly elated, as well as they may be, and the outcome points with unerring certainty to the great national result next November. Socialism is in the air. Work, persistent and untiring work, will bring the handwriting on the wall into clear relief. Remember the ides of November. Agitate and organize!

That Socialists do not always favor an advance in wages is shown by the fact that in Germany recently they opposed an increase in the "allowance" of Emperor Bill. By the way, that word "allowance" is suggestive. The useful classes of society live on a bare pittance of a wage and "allow" crowned pigheads to revel in luxury; the wealthy everywhere who live without doing anything useful are living on "allowances" from the fool people.

What are you doing to help make the special edition of The Herald, March 17, a big success and a grand opening of the national campaign? Don't mind telling you—we think it will be a little the best issue of a Socialist paper ever printed in the United States, and we want you to co-operate as a distributing agent. It's price will be one cent a copy. It's size will be eight pages.

Grandmother Hoar of Massachusetts, who has been making something of a reputation as an anti-imperialist, is anti nothing else—not even anti-Quay. Hoar believes firmly in Sunday school religion and Matt Quay, the notorious boodler. And this is quite consistent. The Pennsylvania political debauchee is a supporter of the system that the pious Hoar advocates in his private and political capacity.

The call of the national democratic committee is for a convention of all "democratic-conservative - progressive-reform citizens." That is just what one might expect to emanate from an aggregation dominated by Tillman of South Carolina and Gorman of Maryland and their respective radical-conservative-retroactive-progressive following. Hurrah for humbug—which is Bryanolatry!

That class of reformers who today would crush out the trusts—were such a feat possible—would fifty years ago have crushed out the corporation, or a hundred years ago the partnership. Yet the modern trust is an inevitable outgrowth of corporations, just as corporations came out of partnerships.

If whatever is useless is dangerous, the really dangerous people in this country today are the Bryanators, who want to break down the machinery of modern production. The Bryan agitation is a positive hindrance to progress. Let us go on to the goal—democratic Socialism. Opposition to the inevitable is useless.

Every trade has its tricks which those inside know and those outside do not. The trade of capitalist politics, as it is played at Washington, no doubt has more tricks than any other. If all the tricks were known to those on the outside there would soon be a revolt of the people and mighty few tricksters left on the inside.

What a miserable, stunted and contemptible life is that of the man who would rather be "respectable" than in revolt against a system which corrupts politics, morals and religion and destroys human beings for profit!

The cost of making a millionaire is thousands of paupers, drunkards, lunatics and tramps. But the price will have to be paid until the people learn better—that is, until they learn Socialism.

Mark Hanna, who uses the government for his own purposes, is a patriot. But the fellows who want government used in behalf of everybody are traitors. It's a funny world!

When there is a slump in stocks and somebody makes a million the fact is heralded through the land. But what happens to the other fellow is seldom reported.

The starchmakers of the country have planned a trust with a capital of $25,000,000. One of the results will undoubtedly be a stiffening of prices.

Position of the Laborer

Nearly every problem of state policy and economy, as at present understood and practiced, consists in some device for persuading you laborers to go and dig up dinner for us reflective and aesthetic persons, who like to sit still and think and admire. So that when we get to the bottom of the matter we find the inhabitants of this earth broadly divided into two great masses—the peasant paymasters, spade in hand, original and imperial producers of turnips; and, waiting on them all round, a crowd of polite persons, modestly expectant of turnips, for some, too often theoretical, service.

There is, first, the clerical person, whom the peasant pays in turnips for giving him moral advice; then the legal person, whom the peasant pays in turnips for telling him, in black letter, that his house is his own; there is, thirdly, the courtly person, whom the peasant pays in turnips for presenting a celestial appearance to him; there is, fourthly, the literary person, whom the peasant pays in turnips for talking daintily to him; and there is, lastly, the military person, whom the peasant pays in turnips for standing, with cocked hat on, in the middle of the field, and exercising a moral influence upon the neighbors.—John Ruskin.

The Herald Leaflets are good for propaganda at 25 cents per hundred copies.

NO HOPE IS LEFT FOR THE MIDDLE CLASS

From the Address of Governor Lee of South Dakota at the Anti-Trust Meeting

We may legislate against private monopoly till doomsday, but so long as we do not deprive these institutions of their ownership of the means of production and distribution, we need entertain no hope that they will cease to torment us, for experience has shown that they thrive under hostile legislation. The remedy will be found in an attack upon the system of which these monopolies are the fruit. Revolutionize the control of production and distribution. Make it democratic. It is now an imperial system. Substitute public for private ownership. Throw off private for public monopoly. Crush the rule of money and establish the rule of men. Do not destroy the machines, nor blot out the details for swift and perfect handling of commodities, but make things for people to use, not to fight over, and maybe die later for the want of. Produce and distribute wealth for the enrichment of the race; for the gratification of needs and the satisfaction of worthy aspirations, not for private profit and plunder. Such a policy can be squared with the Declaration of Independence and the Golden Rule. Such a policy will destroy public and private rascality and give birth to a new social life of which the people are capable when they are delivered from the dread of starvation and death.

How are the details to be arranged? I do not propose to go into that. No system ever had a fixed line of unchangeable details. Fit details will be supplied as the requirements of the system dictate. Details will come fast enough when the principle has been agreed to. The details of the present system are good enough, if the engines of capital were reversed, and put to work for the whole people. Details are a matter of experience. No man could have predicted fifty years ago the details of the present business system; no man can foretell now the details of any system fifty years hence. Details change every day, but one thing is settled: a set of details which enriches 5 per cent of the population at the expense of 95 per cent ought to be put to work in behalf of the great masses as speedily as possible. There is only one question involved: "Shall the blessings of God and the ingenuity of man be monopolized for the benefit of a constantly narrowing column of plutocrats, or shall those blessings be appropriated to the use of the whole people? When that question is answered in the interest of the majority—the details of our new life will adjust themselves to harmonize with the principle of equity upon which the system is built.

These propositions are met with the rejoinder that "this is socialism." Granted. That does not disprove, but rather confirms its truth. The trust is socialistic. It is private socialism. It is unregulated socialism—run for the few at the expense of the many. Our purpose is to change the scope of socialism, broaden it out; destroy socialized piracy and erect a system of fraternal co-operation in its place. But dissenters do not go further than to declare that "this is socialism," as though that were sufficient to forever put it aside. "You are a Christian" was once considered a sufficient answer to the claims of Jesus' followers. It did not disprove the teachings of Christ. "You are an abolitionist" was once a powerful argument against the abolition of chattel slavery. The sailboat twitted the steamboat; the ox cart ridiculed the stage coach; the stage coach made fun of the locomotive, but the facts were not changed. The best will survive, as it has survived. Socialism must succeed capitalism in the natural order of progress, and if you will not recognize it now I shall not quarrel with you. Time will furnish the argument.

These changes are not within the limit of an ordinary day's work. The conversion of production for private profit to production for the general welfare cannot be brought about till the Trust of Trusts—the all-absorbing, all-dominating, all-owning monopolist has taken possession of the country and forced the people, in self-defense, to expel, as this monopolist has in turn expelled from commercial existence all with whom he has been at war. The people are slow to move and patient in bearing burdens, but there is evidence that they are commencing to see the hopelessness of any attempt to regenerate the middle classes of society. Public ownership, already a well-defined political issue, must soon give birth to a political party organized to put it into force.

THE TRUSTS INEVITABLE

It seems to me that the proof that trusts are inevitable as a protection against the rising flood of capital is simply overwhelming both in theory and in fact.

It seems most palpable that every industry in this country must in time fall into the power of the trust. The trust with its enormous capital not only gives our domestic capitalists better opportunities for competition with foreigners in foreign neutral markets but it is itself by damming up the old and natural domestic channels for investment actually forcing itself to cut out new channels for its overflow.

It is impossible to dam up all the mouths of the Mississippi, no matter how high the dams. A flowing river must find the ocean somehow, and if not by one channel then by another. The trusts are affording but a temporary breastworks for our captain of industry.

It will, however, be a flank movement rather than a frontal attack that will finally dislodge the captains from their fortress. The trust is not only a protection against undue competition, but it is a labor saving device of the highest possible efficiency. Every argument in favor of combined production on a small scale is redoubled for production on the largest possible scale. The trust pursues its ends in a perfectly sane and scientific manner. No longer do the old planless methods of competition prevail. The trust being the only producer in the field, produces exactly what the market needs. There is no more danger of either an over-production or a shortage of Standard oil in any city than there is of water, gas or postage stamps. The trust no more needs canvassers and advertisements to sell its goods than does the government to advertise the postoffice. This increased industrial efficiency of the trust together with its prevention of waste of capital in unnecessary duplication of machinery hasten by so much the completion of the world's industrial outfit.

Capital will in vain seek profitable investment. Interest which is determined by the amount of gain received by the last amount borrowed will fall to zero and still money will remain unlent in the banker's hands. The last incentive for the poor man to be "thrifty" will perish. When the work is completed the workers engaged in producing new machinery of production will join the unemployed army in regiments. The trust will be as defenseless against this new phase in the industrial strife as was the armored knight of old against hunger and thirst. Political autocracy is possible, but industrial autocracy, even if benevolent, is impossible.—H. Gaylor Wilshire.

WHAT THE EDITORS SAY

(The Clarion, London, Eng.)
For all the danger and anxiety of the present time, no one can complain that this life is not interesting. Indeed, but for the grief, suffering and anxiety of those whom the war hits hardest—the friends and relations of those who have given their lives, or are even now risking them, in the service of their country—the present grave situation would not only be interesting but actually amusing. At the present moment the British empire is not only on its trial, but is even conscious of deserving a moderately heavy sentence, and well aware that at the best it can only escape by payment of a heavy fine and by no possible means without "a stain upon its character."

(Justice, London, Eng.)
"Out of evil cometh good," and one good thing this infamous war has at least done. It has demonstrated the soundness, from every point of view, of the Socialist demand for the armed nation as against a standing army. If the Boers should not score another success they have demonstrated their right to independence and their value as a fighting force.

(Midland Mechanic.)
If the bosses increase wages 10 per cent in "good times" and decrease them 20 per cent in hard times, how long will it take us to find out where we are at?

CALL TO ACTION

ORGANIZE FOR 1900

There are few communities in this country today without one to a dozen Socialists who are not affiliated with a Socialist organization. At the last State election in Michigan the Social Democratic Party in nearly every county in the State.

In almost every community a thoroughly wide-awake and earnest Socialist, with little exertion, could in one week effect the organization of a Branch of the Social Democratic Party.

The Declaration of Principles and Political Demands of this party will be found in this paper; read it and you will see that the party is a straight, uncompromising Socialist organization, recognized as such in the International movement for Socialism.

The triumph of the Socialist cause, which is the cause of the world democracy, requires organization, and without it nothing can be accomplished; this party is controlled by no individual nor by any set of individuals short of its entire membership through the referendum.

The year 1900 will be one of great and far-reaching importance to the people and especially to the intelligent, wealth-producing people of the United States; the latter have surely by this time begun to see the futility of any longer giving support to capitalistic parties.

Socialists should have as their main object in 1900 the polling of every vote possible for straight and uncompromising Socialism, and to do this the co-operation of every unaffiliated Socialist in the work of organization, where he lives, is necessary.

The Social Democratic Party is now organized in more than half the States; it consists of Local Branches, State Unions and a National Council. A Local Branch may be organized with five members.

It will nominate candidates for President and Vice-President next March.

Full instructions and all necessary supplies for organizing Local Branches may be obtained from the National Secretary, Theodore Debs, Washington, D. C., Chicago, Illinois.

OUR LETTER BOX

THE "CZAR'S" ADMISSION

Editor of The Herald: Ex-Speaker Thos. B. Reed would hardly call himself a Socialist, but like many others of his kind who live largely by the sweat of other men's brows, he, unconsciously to himself, admits the truthfulness of the reasoning of those who to him represent all that is to be feared in government. It seems to me that the attention of Socialists should be called to an extract from an article on the subject of monopolies (of which he should know considerable), having for quite awhile helped to maintain one of the most destructive monopolies of all, viz.: the law-making monopoly in the Saturday Evening Post of this city. In the course of that article he says:

"Where the selfishness of a few is entrusted with unlimited power and buttressed up by all the power of the state formally enlisted in its behalf, it has never been able to resist successfully the selfishness of all. In other words, the selfishness of the few is always met and mastered by that greater power, the selfishness of all. The struggle may be long and may seem doubtful, but is never so in the result. All history is full of examples. For hundreds of years the unprivileged seemed in France to be struggling hopelessly against the privileged, and the story was the most melancholy in the history of the world; but the final result was liberty and equality. Nowadays there can be no such prolongation of the fight."

To those of our comrades who seem hopeless of seeing Socialism established in our day I especially commend those last lines: "Nowadays there can be no such prolongation of the fight."

Even the enemy begin to realize the truth.

Geo. H. Goebel.

OLD COMRADES REUNITED

Editor of the Herald: I note with delight the announcement in this week's Herald of the organization of a new branch of the party in Adger, Ala., and the more so because the names of at least two of the officers are very familiar to me.

Two years are creeping by since my address was at Adger, at one time one of the most sociable mining camps in the south. What it is now it is not for me to say, but the memory of what it was in the days I knew it is full of recollections, both sweet and bitter. Of the friendships made during the years when I swung the pick and shovel, few have clung closer to my heart than those formed with Fred Lennon and Dan. Foster.

Nearly two years have passed since Lennon and I could compare notes together and estimate when our dreams of equality and fraternity among all men would become realities, and four years have elapsed since Dan. Foster passed through Nashville, Tenn., en route to Pennsylvania, active, eager and alert, brimful of enthusiasm for the newly-found doctrine of socialism.

But years, many or few, are not sufficient to dim the recollection of either of them. Both are intellectually and in every way cast in the mold from which comes the sort of men needed in the fight for freedom. Both have felt the scourge of the struggle for existence and in the history of their young lives are pages full of the stress and strife which are the heritage of their class. They can be expected to do their duty in the cause of socialism, now that they have enlisted in active political work inside our party. It is of men like these the future expects the most. The social revolution awaits their service and their sacrifice.

William Maily.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Comrade Stedman spoke on "Imperialism" at the Hull House, Chicago, last Tuesday.

Comrade F. G. R. Gordon is in editorial charge of the Milwaukee Social Democrat.

Comrade Gordon has been elected delegate to the convention by Branch 7, Manchester, N. H.

Frederic O. McCartney is announced to speak March 2 at Amesbury, Mass., and Carey is billed for every night this week.

Last Sunday Comrades John C. Chase and Charles H. Coulter, the Socialist mayors, addressed a big audience at the Manhattan Lyceum, New York, and also at the Central Federalist Union.

Representative McCartney took a little excursion up into Maine the other day, on the occasion of a Socialist convention held in that state, and spoke in the Opera House on the evening of the 26th at Rockland.

Two new branches, one at Mendon and one at Milford, are the result of the organizing ability of one good comrade up there, Comrade W. E. Dixon. With energy and tact, one man who believes thoroughly in the principles of socialism can work wonders.

The Socialists of Fitchburg, of both parties and of no party, have united in holding a series of Sunday afternoon meetings, extending through at least two months. Most of the lectures have been by local Socialists, but Representative McCartney spoke there on the 11th on "Love Applied to Economic Life," and Margaret Haile comes in on the 25th with a lecture on "The Necessity for Socialism."

There will be a joint meeting of all the comrades of Greater New York S. D. P. at Wilsig's hall, 85 East Fourth street, on Saturday evening, March 3d, to discuss the situation in the Twelfth Assembly District.

The delegates from Boston and vicinity to the national convention are Comrades Margaret Haile and S. E. Putney. A meeting to discuss instructions to delegates will be held on Sunday, March 4, at 1 o'clock, at 724 Washington street. The meeting should begin promptly at 1 o'clock, as the delegates have to start at 6 for Indianapolis. Members who have not already sent in their credentials should be sure and bring them to this meeting.

Dr. Howard A. Gibbs of Worcester, who has unselfishly devoted so much of his time to our work throughout Massachusetts, has taken a position as superintendent of a sanitarium, which will prevent his giving so much of his time to the work as heretofore. He can, however, give us one evening a week, and perhaps two at a pinch. He has spoken recently at Lynn, Abington and Boston, and has several other engagements ahead.

Resolutions adopted by a joint meeting of the S. D. P. branches of St. Louis: "Whereas—The action of the recent convention of the Socialist Labor Party at Rochester, N. Y., has shown that organization to be a body of earnest, intelligent and unselfish Socialists and has reflected great credit upon the Socialist movement of America; therefore, be it

"Resolved, that, in the opinion of the Social Democrats of St. Louis, every honorable means should be used to bring about a union of the Socialist Labor Party and the Social Democratic Party, and that our national convention should appoint a committee of nine to meet with the committee appointed at Rochester for the purpose of effecting a union; and, be it further

"Resolved, That the adoption of any particular name should not be made a condition precedent to union, but the name of the united party should be decided by a referendum vote of the membership after the union is completed."

Oregon Socialists, Attention

You are requested to communicate with J. D. Stevens, Box 204, Portland, organizer for the S. D. P., with a view to instituting branches of the party in your community. The future belongs to Socialism. Lend a hand and get your state thoroughly organized.

INFORMATION FOR DELEGATES TO THE CONVENTION

For the information of delegates and others attending the national convention at Indianapolis, March 6, The Herald is able to say:

1. That our Indianapolis comrades have arranged for the use of Reichwein's Hall, situated at the corner of Market and Noble streets. This hall will easily seat 200 delegates, is well lighted and has rooms for committees. The rental expense for convention uses will be moderate, though it may be necessary to hire additional chairs and tables.

2. The New Occidental Hotel management will make a special rate of $1.50 per day to delegates. The hotel is centrally located at Washington and Illinois streets, three blocks from the Union depot and nine blocks from the hall.

Comrade Hugo Miller writes us that the Indianapolis friends will be fully prepared to find accommodations for every delegate according to his wishes, and has kindly offered to secure accommodations in advance for any desiring private quarters. Comrade Miller's address is 333 Davidson street.

Third Prize—Same as second prize.

Fourth Prize (offered by Comrade Geo. H. Goebel of Philadelphia)—A first-class fountain pen.

A MODEL BRANCH

If I were asked what constituted a model branch of the Social Democratic Party, with no conscious partiality I should answer, the general management of Branch 7 of Massachusetts. Its members are, principally, composed of young Hebrews, who carry into Socialism that eager zeal and penetrating intelligence which characterize the business and financial life of that enterprising race. Branch 7 is a novel spectacle. It is like a beacon, lit upon a hill, which, after it has diffused its warmth immediately around, tinges the distant horizon with its open glow. Its meetings take place every week, at which prominent speakers deliver lectures on Socialism. These assemblages stand in the same relation to the teachings of Carl Marx as the primary schools stand to education. They bring the doctrines of Socialism within the people's reach and turn the lantern of inquiry upon the anarchy and ruin which imperialism is bringing upon the nation.

I am inclined to believe that for these reasons Branch 7 deserves special attention. Comrade John Weaver Sherman is chairman, an office for which he has a special aptitude. Zeal appears to be a prominent feature among the members, one and all of whom are courageous and disinterested patriots. With them the S. D. P. becomes a master, whose principles must be carried out to the utmost limits of possibility.

Here, I may be permitted to enter into some details. Lectures have been delivered at the several meetings that have already taken place by the Rev. S. L. Beal, Representative James F. Carey, Representative T. O. McCartney and the distinguished orator and lecturer, Dr. H. A. Gibbs. Mr. W. P. Porter and Mayor Chase of Haverhill have been engaged to deliver lectures at subsequent meetings.

Another feature worthy of notice at these meetings is the distribution of copies of The Social Democratic Herald and Appeal to Reason among those of the audience who are unacquainted with the principles of Socialism.

It may be as well to mention that on several occasions the writer has been accosted by strangers who have been made converts to Socialism by attending one or more of these meetings. "I see plainly enough," said one, "that Socialism has contracted no alliance with the turbulent passion of anarchy, as I thought it had; on the contrary, I learned, by this evening's lecture, that its course is marked by a love of order and law. It is no doubt a grand and highest practical system of human government. I am convinced, from my own experience, that a vast majority of the working classes would become converts to Socialism if its principles could be explained to them."

"I always thought," said another, "that Socialism was an idle and childish farce—a fanatic's crazy confidence in that which is but a wild and unprofitable dream; but, since the lecture I have just heard I have become as pronounced a Socialist as any of you. I am further convinced that Socialism, so far as it has gone, is an organized expression of the wants and wishes of the people."

I hope that I have stated enough to demonstrate the immense importance of lectures in propagating the fundamental principles of Socialism. It may, I think, be safely affirmed that, if the example above cited could be more generally followed, the growth of the S. D. P. would be phenomenal.

Charles Trench.

THE MATTER OF UNION

The resolutions adopted at the Rochester convention to be submitted to the convention at Indianapolis read as follows:

"The Socialist Labor Party of the United States, in National Convention assembled, sends fraternal greetings to the Social Democratic Party of the United States.

"Whereas: The course of development of the Socialist movement in the United States during the last few years has obliterated all difference of principle and views between the S. L. P. and the S. D. P., and both parties are now practi-

Whole No. 88.

ARE THERE NO CLASSES IN THE UNITED STATES?

ADMINISTRATION OF THE LAWS

Indubitable Proof and Plenty of It that the Economically Powerful Class is Dealt
With Leniently in this Country

THE POOR WILL NOT ALWAYS TAMELY SUBMIT

It is constantly assumed by those forming what are denominated the most successful portions of our social life, that there are no classes in this country; that, however great may be the chasm between the strata in old world countries, here there is none. So strenuously is this position insisted on, that it might appear that some strong reason exists for such insistence, and a fairly comprehensive investigation, in fact, will show that the vigor manifested in maintaining this hypothesis is in just about inverse proportion to the truth involved in it.

It is now proposed to develop a fact by no means among the most prominent of those tending to demonstrate the existence of classes, but which is alone sufficient to give a quietus to the orthodox claim in the other direction. That fact is, the treatment accorded violators of the law; those possessing position and wealth being subject to much greater leniency than their brethren lower down. The poet has said:

"The law condemns the lesser felon
Who steals the goose from off the common,
But lets the greater felon loose
Who steals the common from the goose."

And, or another poet has remarked:

"Plate sin with gold
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks,
Clothe it in rags, a pigmy's straw can pierce it."

Or, as Goldsmith has it: "Laws grind the poor, and rich men rule the law."

It would seem to be almost imminent in human nature to deal more and more kindly with persons as they ascend the scale of power. One man revolting against an oppressive master and slaying him is termed a murderer, and is executed. A handful of men resisting an unjust law by force are overpowered, their leader hanged, and they are cast into prison for life; it is referred to as riot. A few thousand men, in resisting oppression, become classified as fomenters of an insurrection; while after it is subdued, the leaders are hanged, and the remainder eventually go free. When a large part of a country sets itself up in opposition to the rest, that is known as rebellion, if unsuccessful; and, upon its conclusion the leaders are magnanimously pardoned, and the rank and file are unmolested. But, if successful, and the same revolution becomes applicable, and the hitherto existing state is thereafter put down in histories as having instituted an oppressive tyranny.

So a gambler in a small way is harried by the police, fails of a respectable place among his townsmen, and is regarded with frowns and contumely; but a wealthy speculator is continually receiving the plaudits of everyone. A city legislator feathering his own nest is only a common boodle alderman; a United States senator dabbling in sugar certificates is an able business man and a pillar of society. He who fails in opposing his de jure country is a traitor, or, as Jefferson Davis; he who heals a victorious legion is a patriot whose memory is to be forever cherished, as Washington. A lawyer guilty of defending a person of poor reputation is called a shyster, whereas one who receives a magnificent stipend to look after the interests of a criminal trust is called "one of the leaders of the American bar." A sweat-shop proprietor is designated as an abhorrent crusher of the laboring masses; but the owner of a large mine who keeps his help on starvation wages can influence a legislature, and is looked up to as a substantial citizen, the exemplar of all that is high and noble.

Two years ago four men were arrested in Santa Clara county, California, for sleeping in a haystack; but, upon proof that they had enough money to pay for their board if driven to it, they were discharged. Those who sleep in this way because of necessity are punished. Others doing the identical thing are patted on the back if, upon investigation, a little money is found about their persons.

One year ago the sons of a couple of prominent eastern college professors took a tramp across the country for the fun of the thing. Arriving in Kansas City weary and dust-begrimed, they were arrested for vagrancy, but they soon demonstrated that they had money, that they were well connected, and were released with apologies. A crime ought to be a crime whether one has money and connections or not.

Two criminals who had served time in California and Colorado fell heir to fortunes while in jail; that of one amounting to about $40,000. Steps were at once taken to secure their release, and this was effected with little difficulty. Not the crime, but the lack of money, seemed to be the chief offense.

The inter-state commerce act was supposedly designed to restrict railroad corporations; but, of the seventy-five cases instituted under it up to 1895, seventy were against employees, largely for the purpose of disrupting their union, and only five were against the railroads.

The Meadowcroft brothers mulcted a bank in Chicago of $400,000. They were tried and were finally sentenced to spend one year in prison, but were shortly after pardoned by the governor of Illinois. In March, 1897, William Jeffrey was imprisoned for a term of twenty years because of an assault on a man in Peekskill, N. Y., resulting in the theft of only forty cents.

When the next to the last bond issue negotiated by the administration of President Cleveland was made the subject of an investigation, to discover what frauds there might be connected with it, certain of the witnesses summoned absolutely refused to testify. The same condition obtained during the attempt to elicit information on the sugar schedule of the Wilson-Gorman tariff law of 1894. These eminent recalcitrants have never been dealt with for that plain violation of law. Are ordinary witnesses allowed to testify or not, as suits them? Are they not jailed if they refuse to testify, and oftentimes even if they consent?

A hack-driver charges more than the common rates, and his license is revoked. A powerful street railway corporation is found violating its charter, and either nothing is done or steps are taken to alter the charter favorably to the railway. Occasionally, in the case of the latter, the people protest feebly for a week or two.

Some large grocers were arrested in Milwaukee for selling adulterated vinegar, but the case was dismissed on payment of costs. In Berlin, a short distance north, five small grocers were compelled to pay fines of from $10 to $20 each for the same offense.

Those of the poorer classes, upon allowing themselves to be found drunk on the street, are put in jail and arraigned. The upper classes are rarely or never molested in similar situations. A drunken club-man was arrested one night in St. Paul by a policeman new to the force, but the former was released with excuses, and the policeman was reprimanded for his action.

President McKinley has established a record for pardoning embezzlers and criminals of the patrician coteries. To such an extent has he gone in this line, that attention has been forcibly directed to it. Why are law-breakers of the lower orders so markedly exempt from the presidential favor? Why was Governor Altgeld of Illinois denounced with such violence for pardoning impecunious anarchists whom every close student of their trial knows were innocent of the crime charged?

During President Cleveland's administration the so-called Pattison report regarding the Pacific railroads said: "On the face of the books the barren fact appeared that Leland Stanford and C. P. Huntington have taken from the assets of their company, over which they have absolute control, the sum aforesaid, $4,818,355." The gentlemen named have stood at the head of this country's social, political and business life, while "it is a sin to steal a pin" statesmanship has been busy incarcerating unfortunate men whose ill luck it was to be forced to steal for their daily bread.

In the spring of 1894 inoffensive Carl Browne was mobbed by eleven hundred students of Princeton University, and, as a result, not a single student of the university was touched, but Mr. Browne was arrested and sentenced to spend thirty days in prison at Trenton. Carl Browne took his Commonwealth Army for a march down Wall street, and they were jailed promptly; while in 1896 many a noisy parade passed unmolested through this thoroughfare upholding the banners of "honest money."

Taylor, the defaulting treasurer of South Dakota, stole one-quarter of a million dollars and was sent to the penitentiary for two years. One Mark Batten, of Fulda, Minn., took a pair of shoes valued at $1.75; his sentence was for a like term.

The judge of the city of Washington who imposed an imprisonment of three hours on the daughter of General Flagler for slaying a negro boy gave a man in that city five years for taking a goose that did not belong to him.

Mason, the man who wrecked a bank at Lincoln, Neb., and robbed it of one

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

The American Slave Trade

Prince Pointawoski has just purchased the land and franchises of the island of Basilan, in the Philippines, from the United States government for $500,000. The island in question is very valuable, owing to the hemp growing and pearl-fishing industries there.

So this is the outcome of our war for humanity—the war that God inspired, and we, his faithful followers, prosecuted with holy aim, as the jingoes averred. Undertaken under the pretense of religion and charity, it now assumes its true character as a brigand's battle for booty.

We sent our troops to the East to free the slave, but as a result, the free are enslaved. Instead of giving the Philippines their liberty we have sold them to a Russian taskmaster, the grandson of a Polish king. And now this royal despot has been given full power over the poor devils who are living on the land he bought for a paltry sum.

But, after all, they are in no worse plight than are we who patriotically shiver and starve under the stars and stripes. It is the same sort of liberty—the liberty to slave and suffer.

A Russian despot and an American trust magnate belong to the same genus. A Filipino hemp-worker and an American shoe-worker belong to the same class. Morally, the Filipino is the better man, for he has the courage to rebel. The American has not.

Who is the Murderer?

A few days ago, at an anti-imperialistic meeting in Philadelphia an excited speaker referred to McKinley as "that murderer." The report said the utterance was wildly and enthusiastically applauded.

The statement was fully as wild as the applause. Anyone who has studied the character of McKinley knows that that pious puppet has not the moral courage to commit the act of murder. A murderer must be a man of forceful character, while McKinley has shown himself as possessing only an autographic will. You can't stab a man with a boiled carrot.

This attempt to create a presidential scapegoat is a cowardly and deceptive one. That murder is being done no one can deny. That the president is an accomplice is also a fact. But that he is the one most guilty is not a fact. He may be a criminal chief, but he is not the chief criminal.

McKinley is but the button, the trigger, the handle, the tool of corporate capital. He is but the chief figure in the puppet show, jiggled on a political string before a gaping people, while the managers gather in the profits.

Every supporter of the two political parties whose kindred aim it is to perpetuate an industrial system based on the murder of the mass is the real murderer. Every vote cast for the old parties is a stab at the heart of labor.

And until these anti-imperialists and pro-selfish clean their hands from the stain of American blood let them not curse the figurehead whose forced and frightened consent is the signal for rapine and bloodshed in the far East.

The Church and Labor

Rev. Dr. Hillis, in an address before the Congregational Club of Boston, this week, deplored the fact that the Sunday meetings of the trade unions were alienating untold thousands from the church.

This is the outcome of the church's alienation from the working class, and its silence or opposition in regard to the vital issues concerning the interests of labor.

It is not a sign of the irreligiosity of trade unionism, so much as the irreligiosity of the church itself.

It takes an uncompromising stand against sin in the abstract, but is ready to grant any concession to sin in the concrete, personified in the person of a wealthy, poor-grinding pew-holder.

It denounces Pharaoh for his treatment of the Israelites, but condones the act of Rockefeller in exploiting the poor, and sharing his profits with the Lord.

It stamps with righteous heel on the carcass of poor old Goliath, but trembles in the presence of the modern monopolistic giants.

It believes in the law and the prophets of the past. It believes, too, in the law and profits of the present.

It points with a holy horror to the hill of Calvary, but points with patriotic pride to Capital Hill, whereon labor is daily crucified.

Let the church take its eyes from Heaven, and fix them on the earth; let it proclaim the fulfillment of an ancient creed in a modern socialism; let it emphasize the difference between the golden rule and the rule of gold. Then it may commend itself to labor as worthy of support. At present it cannot.

Dewey the Pay-triot

"D! E! W! E! Y! Dewey! Ra! Ra!" Rats!

A few months ago our country went crazy over an American admiral who actually did his duty and gave some return for his salary. The deified Dewey was exalted to the pinnacle of godhead, and the idolatrous jingoes bowed down and worshiped him.

But now Dewey the Doughty is playing the role of Dewey the Doughy. The goldplate of patriotism has worn off our idol, and the mercenary brass is beginning to show.

Not content with the large salary paid him as an officer, or the praise and perquisites lavished on him by press and people, he is seeking now to defraud the government out of $10,000 additional prize money, on the pretense that he fought and conquered a force stronger than his own.

This palpable deception stamps him as a mercenary. The fact that his fleet was able to annihilate the Spanish without the loss of a man gives him the lie, apart from the statistical facts in the case.

This reveals to us the hollowness of all patriotic pretenses. Many workingmen were blinded by the glare of militarism a few months ago. Dewey became the idol, not only of the rich, but of the poor as well.

Let us not be deceived by militarism. It is but the glare from the flames of labor's hell. The Deweys care nothing for the interest of the labor class. Only by our own strong energy can we be saved.

Outcasts: Social and Political

In Madeira, Cal., on February 27th, a young waiter employed at the Yosemite hotel committed suicide. By a note she had written before the act, it was found that she had been betrayed by Louis Kutner, a millionaire's son, and preferred death to shame.

A mass meeting was held, attended by several hundred citizens, at which strong resolutions were passed, denouncing Kutner, and proclaiming him a social outcast.

All this is well enough, and a gratifying change to the apathetic indifference with which the public usually views such acts and men. But it has no power to give back life and virtue to the young girl who is being buried the very day I write this.

Neither does it in any wise prevent any other rich rascal taking advantage of other poor girls' poverty, and gratifying their damned and damning lust at the cost of life and virtue.

The social conditions that gave Kutner his power still exist. Still hundreds of girls are lured and hypnotized by the glare of gold. So long as there are millionaires and paupers, the one is at the mercy of the other. And many of these Madeira folk will without doubt vote to perpetuate the system that produces these classes.

Why not make this Kutner and his class political outcasts, instead? Why not legislate against this system of profits that robs one class to pay the other? Why not protest against such things, and prevent them, in a sane, satisfactory, and effective way, by casting your vote for a socialist party, whose aim it is to give equality to all and special privilege and power to none? MERLIN.

A Great Nation

How can that be a great nation, asks the London Clarion, whose popular ruler is Joseph Chamberlain and whose hero is Cecil Rhodes? How can that be a great nation that allows seventy poor people to sleep in one East End house?

A sanitary inspector reports that in one house that he visited this number of persons were living. There were twenty beds in a large workroom at the top of the house, and they were so close together that they made practically one bed. In a back room there were three beds, five in the front room and six in a room over the kitchen. How can that be a great nation that, for the sake of a horde of greedy bloodsuckers, allows the citizens of its chief city to live lives that debase their body and soul, which flatters and fleeces its workmen, degrades its women and overworks and underfeeds its children? And all for what? That a chosen few may continue to live lives of ease and refinement, and that a host of greedy tyrants may glut their appetites for vulgar ostentation and baleful power.

Do not forget or fail to order 100 or 500 copies of the big double number of The Herald to be printed March 17. Will contain complete report of the convention, special contributed articles, facts and data for the propaganda, illustrations, etc. A splendid number to start the campaign with. One cent per copy. Every branch should order not less than 500 copies.

SPRING CAMPAIGN OPENED AT NEWARK

CHASE AND COULTER SPEAKERS

The Graduate of a Shoe Factory and the Plumber Expound the Principles of Social Democracy With Good Effect

GROWING SOLIDARITY OF THE WORKING CLASS

The following account of a mass meeting at Newark, N. J., is from a local daily newspaper of that city:

Politicians of the two great parties have a fashion of waiting until the early birds appear on the trees before they buckle down to the hard work of the spring campaign, but the Socialists believe in taking time by the forelock. They opened their campaign last night with a mass meeting in Lyric hall, where the principal speakers were the only Socialist mayors in the United States—John C. Chase of Haverhill, Mass., and Charles H. Coulter of Brockton, Mass.

About 300 persons fought their way against the bitter blasts to the hall. They were evidently pleased with what they heard, for they applauded frequently and heartily, and when the hat was passed around they chipped in liberally to pay the rent of the meeting place.

Mayor Chase is a graduate from a Haverhill shoe factory—a tall, thin young man with considerable nervous activity, and a fluent tongue. When he was elected two years ago, there were five tickets in the field in Haverhill, and his victory was classed as a political accident. But at the last election he was chosen again, though all the other parties united on a ticket against him. Mayor Coulter, who is a journeyman plumber by trade, is the first Socialist to be Brockton's chief executive. He was chosen at the last election. Both are young men; and they made enthusiastic addresses along Socialistic lines, expounding the well-known theories of the party to their sympathetic hearers.

They were introduced by E. C. Wind, the chairman of the rally, who said that it marked the opening of the spring campaign of the party in this city.

Before either of the Massachusetts orators had spoken, James Allman, a local Socialist orator, made a brief address. He said that the Social Democratic party and the Socialist Labor party in this country had buried the hatchet, and this year would unite on one ticket, which would bear the name of the former organization. He also said that while the great principles of Socialism would be preached as usual, the particular feature of the party's campaign this spring would be agitation for a municipal gas plant.

"I am a practical politician," announced Mr. Coulter, when he took the platform. "We won success in Brockton by using practical political methods among working men, by teaching them to unite and to present solid fronts to their political enemies. A constant agitation has been kept up in and out of season. Even as I speak to you tonight a Socialist meeting is being held in Brockton. If you want to attain the results we have in our city, you can do so by pursuing the same methods."

The City of Brockton, Mr. Coulter declared, was equivalent to a corporation doing a yearly business of $28,000,000. That a working man could successfully manage such a corporation had been a surprise not only to the capitalists, but to the working men themselves.

The trust, Mr. Coulter continued, had demonstrated that co-operative effort was the only way to do business. The Socialist insisted that the management of productive enterprises should be for the whole people.

"The Socialist," he said, "just become imbued with the ideal. It is the greatest ideal of all time, the brotherhood of man, the co-operative commonwealth."

Mr. Coulter said that the movement which had its first fruits in Haverhill and Brockton was sweeping over Massachusetts. Should any one of the men elected by Socialists go back on their pledges, they would, he declared, not be allowed in office ten minutes.

"If I should consummate a deal against the citizens of Brockton," said the speaker, "I would not like to be around when the boys should find it out."

After Leonard Abbott of New York had spoken briefly on the general principles of Socialism, Mayor Chase was introduced. He spoke of the change which had come over the shoe manufacturing business in this country in recent years, which he said was paralleled in other lines of industry. Twenty years ago, he said, New England was dotted with little shoe shops over which a man could truthfully put a sign describing

CHICAGO, SATURDAY, MAR. 10, 1900.

When branches do not have good speakers, members should read instructive features of Socialism and debate on same, with the view of creating a good impression for Socialism.

It looks as if the people who profess to be Socialists and yet have no interest in Socialism as an investment have lost faith in their principles, for were it otherwise they would be known by the earnestness with which they worked for these principles.

A report comes from Paris that political circles are discussing changing Millerand from minister of commerce to another portfolio. The premier, it is said, feels that during the exposition the Socialist will enjoy too prominent a role. It is said that Waldeck-Rousseau wants the place of minister of commerce himself.

On the eve of the recent local election at Erie, Pa., the result of which was reported in this paper last week, one of the old-party newspapers of that city urged the party workers to get out their vote without regard to political affiliation, as the Social Democrats are depending on a light turn-out of republicans and democrats. All Socialists agree fully with Mayor Jones when he says, "the difference in the Bryan and McKinley programs is a difference in degree; it is the same kind."

Two hundred and fifty typesetters in the parliament printing office at Rome, Italy, are on a strike because they object to the introduction of typesetting machines. Working men have struck work before for the same reason, but their striking nowhere put a stop to the introduction of machinery. The place for our class to strike is at the ballot, John Smith. Strike to abolish private ownership of the machines in Rome and Chicago. That way lies deliverance. You will look in vain for it elsewhere.

The Boston Herald says: "Mayor Chase's refusal to sign a petition for another militia company up in Haverhill, on the ground that it is a relic of barbarism, is the latest promulgation of the principles of Socialism. It is queer, but that is one of the inherent characteristics of the Socialistic cult."

It is also one of the peculiar characteristics of the Christian-capitalist cult that it favors keeping the people in subjection by force of arms and taxing their labor to support an aristocratic military incubus.

Mayor Samuel M. Jones of Toledo has repudiated that portion of a recently published interview in which he was made to say he would support Bryan for the presidency. In doing so he said: "The difference between the Bryan and McKinley programs is a difference in degree; it is the same kind. I have no faith in either; both are evil. I am a Socialist. I believe in brotherhood and can only find peace in advocating those principles that will lead me to live brotherly. Bryan is advocating an entirely different set of principles. I do not know whom I shall vote for for president."

That was a splendid reply of the electors of Magdeburg, Germany, to the tyranny of the German government. Herr Schmidt, the Social Democratic editor of Magdeburg, was some time ago condemned to three years' imprisonment and deprived of his seat in the reichstag for criticising the emperor. The working-class electors of the town stood by Comrade Schmidt and at an election held February 26 he received 18,000 votes, his defeat being accomplished only by a union of all other parties against the Socialists. Working men, remember Haverhill and Magdeburg! Every political party in existence is opposed to your interests except the Socialist party.

In bidding good-bye to the populists and joining a branch of the Social Democratic party at Topeka, G. C. Clemens, formerly clerk of the Supreme court of Kansas, punctuated the occasion as follows:

"In the language of Scripture, I go to prepare a place for you. The very men who have urged me to stay in the populist party have given as a reason that this year will end the people's party organization and fusion, too, and then there will be another party made up of deserters from all three parties. The only new party worth considering is already born, and is a healthy youth—the Socialist party. As according to its nurses, the people's party is deceased, but the announcement is delayed to avoid complications, let the dead bury the dead; I go in search of a living cause."

The Verdict of Girard, Kan., has the following complimentary reference to Comrade F. G. R. Gordon in its issue of February 16:

"F. G. R. Gordon, who for several weeks has been the associate editor on the Appeal to Reason here, left Sunday for Chicago. He will probably be sent out as an organizer for the Social Democracy. While few people here take any stock in the doctrine advocated by Mr. Gordon, yet in the few weeks he was here he made numerous friends, and commanded the respect of those he met. In advocating his cause he is always genteel, and is respectful in his language when addressing his political opponent, and is never abusive. If any one can effectually organize Social Democratic clubs Mr. Gordon is probably the man. We hope he will confine his work to republican strongholds."

Comrade Gordon, as we have before stated, is now editor of the Milwaukee Social Democrat.

THE NEW SOCIALIST PARTY

The explanation of G. C. Clemens as to why he has left the populist party emphasizes the wisdom of the Capital's remark of Sunday that it will be time enough to accept the populist challenge to a joint debate this campaign after the populist state convention meets, and finds out what principles the party believes in this year.

Clemens' principal reason for dropping out of the party with which he has affiliated for the last ten years is its apparent lack of any platform of definite beliefs. The populist party ever since 1890 has ever declared its "unalterable" principles, and every year they have been different. Natural curiosity is felt by the rank and file of the party in this presidential year to know where they stand, what their political beliefs are this season, what great platforms they are fighting for, and what grievances they have to complain of in their state platform. It stands to reason that the republican party cannot afford to accept a challenge to a joint debate when both sides are completely in the dark as to what the debaters may be called upon to defend. The republican debaters would be placed in a ridiculous position if it should turn out that the populist party should indorse a protective tariff, for instance, or the gold standard and the expansion policy, as there is some reason to think they may do.

Mr. Clemens' formal departure into the Socialistic party camp is not surprising, in view of the fact that he became a populist at the time that the populist party stood for Socialism. It is of interest, however, as calling attention to the fact that we have in Kansas a strict Socialistic party, a party that has taken that name, that will have a state convention under that title this year and that will get its ticket to the official ballot and make a state campaign.

Mr. Clemens states that there is no longer a populist or people's party, but that statesmen in that party now refer to the organization as the fusion party. The new Socialist party will naturally draw from the fusion party many of the old-fashioned populists who became populists in the first place largely because they believed in Socialistic doctrine. Thus there will be at least three parties in the field: The republican, the fusion and the Socialist. It is barely possible, also, that there may be a democratic party. It is not at all impossible that the Socialist party will beat the fusion party when the votes are counted in November. Political revolutions are very sudden in Kansas, and men who were through the cyclone of 1890 will not be over-hasty in predicting that the Socialist party will come to nothing.—Topeka Capital.

TALKS WITH MAYORS CHASE AND COULTER

Splendid Reception Accorded the Massachusetts Representatives of Social Democracy.

The New York Commercial Advertiser of February 26 published the following very interesting sketch and interview by Abraham Cahan with Comrades Chase and Coulter:

Trade union people and Socialists in this city are busy entertaining their two distinguished guests, the pride and glory of the American labor movement, the two Socialist mayors of Massachusetts. John C. Chase, the municipal head of Haverhill, has been here before. During his last visit he expressed the hope that the next time he came to New York he would not be the only Socialist mayor in the country. Charles H. Coulter has since been elected mayor of Brockton on a ticket of the same party, and as the two mayors made their appearance before a crowd of jubilant Socialists and trade unionists at the meeting of the Central Federated unions yesterday afternoon the realization of Chase's prophecy was cheered again and again, and the mayors, in great glee, promised to come next year accompanied by scores of other Socialist mayors.

Mayor Chase is a tall, spare New Englander of twenty-nine, with a pale, oval, thoughtful face, and a simple, earnest manner of speech. He looks like a scholarly young man with the polish worn off by years of physical exertion, but his diction, humor and oratorical habits suggest the self-educated, intelligent American working man, who spends his leisure moments thinking, reading and discussing things rather than drinking, betting or quarreling. Mr. Coulter, the mayor of Brockton, is as tall as Mr. Chase, but he measures a good deal more across the shoulders and around the waist. He is a robust-looking man with dark hair and a bushy mustache of the same hue—a black-eyed, kindly-faced giant, somewhat more phlegmatic and more formal than his "Comrade Chase," as he refers to the mayor of Haverhill.

They were seen on a train on their way to Newark, where they were to address another crowd of admirers yesterday evening. They were accompanied by a number of Socialists, which included several professional men and a pretty young woman, Miss Weir, who was described as "one of the privileged classes—an American college girl as deep in Socialism as she is in literature and the other fine arts."

"We are all Americans," said one of the party. "And the two mayors trace their descendants to the old colonists. Their forefathers fought in the American revolution. Not that there are no foreigners in our movement, for there are many, and we are proud of them. But Socialism has been characterized as a foreign growth, as an exotic plant, and I wish to say that the Social Democracy which Coulter and Chase represent is a purely American movement. We are Socialists, but we are American Socialists. In Massachusetts the Yankee element prevails, and if in a city like New York our party includes many Germans and Russians, these are, or intend to be, American citizens like ourselves."

Mayor Coulter said he had no objection to being interviewed, particularly when it gave him an opportunity to talk Socialism to millionaires.

"The readers of your paper are fond of dwelling upon the unity of capital and labor," he said, with a smile. "Well, that's precisely what we Socialists want. We expect to bring about an arrangement of things under which every man and woman will be at once a laborer and a capitalist. The trouble with the rich men is that they will not understand the meaning, the real meaning, of our movement. I think they had better try to understand it before it is too late. By making light of it, calling us a lot of dynamiters and unkempt anarchists, and cracking threadbare jokes on us, one only shuts his eyes to a tremendous power that is gathering head in this country as well as in every other part of the civilized world. We are not fools enough to talk of dynamite. We are Americans, and we have something far more powerful. Our ammunition is the ballot, and our cannon is the glass box which stands in the polling place on election day. This is the kind of gun that has made the American people what it is; and this is the kind of gun that will unite capital and labor into a co-operative commonwealth."

"We believe in the organization of working people in the form of trade unions. If it is legitimate for capitalists to band themselves together in the shape of trusts, why should it not be proper for us to do the same? But what can poor unions do against those gigantic trusts? We are so powerless, so helpless against them. It was this thought—the result of bitter experience—which made us introduce the mighty weapon of the ballot box as a mode of warfare. The capitalist congress and the capitalist legislature undo all we are trying to do for ourselves. Capital fights us politically, and now we are going to hit back."

Major Chase complained of the stock questions, which non-Socialists will persist in asking of Socialists, in spite of the conclusive answers that have been given by the leaders of the movement all over the world.

"People tell me that Socialism is an unfeasible, impracticable scheme, a dream, because they cannot imagine a nation without rich and poor," he said impatiently. "Well, when our ancestors were told that Americans ought to be able to get along without George III., some of them pooh-poohed it all as a vision without substance. They could not imagine the colonists as members of an independent republic. When Fulton first offered to build a boat which would sail without sails, he was called a rainbow chaser and a lunatic; when wise economists predicted that competition in trade would give way to consolidation, to trusts, business men smiled. Now we have a republic, steamboats and trusts, trusts, trusts, and almost nothing but trusts. Well, what is a trust, anyhow? It is Socialism, with a handful of capitalists reaping the benefit of it. We'll purge it of this excrement. Perfect and extend the trust and you get the co-operative commonwealth. Dr. Heber Newton and Dr. Lyman Abbott are representatives of what is usually described as the better element. Yet both these reverend gentlemen view the trusts and the economical situation generally exactly in the same light as we do. And there are dozens of other well-known thinkers who take the same position.

"I remember the time when people would laugh at us, saying that we should never elect a single man. Well, I was elected once, and when I ran again the democrats, the republicans and even the prohibitionists joined on a candidate to fight us. They raised an alarm. 'The community must be saved,' they said. Yet I was elected against the whole lot of them by the votes of typical American working men. It used to be predicted that our movement would be a thing of the past before we sent a single Socialist to the legislature. Well, we have two members of our party in the state house of Massachusetts—Carey and McCartney—and we have, besides, six men on the municipal board of Haverhill—a town with 40,000 population—and three in the municipal body of Brockton, which is a center of the shoemaking industry, like my own town, and has a population of about the same size.

"I'm a cool-headed Yankee, but I tell you it's growing like wildfire. Haverhill and Brockton and the surrounding towns are full of Socialism, and other places are catching on rapidly. It's Massachusetts, you know—the cradle of every great movement in America. It was the birthplace of the revolution; it was the home of the first abolitionists, and now it is destined to become the fountain head of the greatest emancipation movement the world ever saw."

"You may not agree with me," he continued, appealingly. "But I tell you the thing is getting hold of the people. There was a time when to be a Socialist in my old Yankee town was sure to place a fellow beyond the pale of social intercourse. He would be ostracised like a plague. Now the house of nearly every working man in Haverhill and Brockton has some Socialist pamphlets alongside the family Bible."

"As mayor, and supported by the Socialist councilmen and aldermen, I have been able to raise the wages of car drivers and conductors in our city from $1.75 to $2 a day and reduce their working day to eight hours. This, of course, is only a trifle, but it has shown the working people what they can do through the ballot box. So far as their class is concerned, it requires no self-sacrifice to be in our movement. On the contrary, they have everything to win and nothing to lose from Socialism. It's their movement, for ours is the party of class-conscious wage-earners. Still, every great historical struggle calls for sacrifices, and our opponents wonder where we are going to get the people to hazard the bird in the hand for two in the bush. As I say, working people have nothing to hazard. They have nothing but misery on hand. But I have alluded to men who belong to the privileged set whose hearts are with us. Look at our late war; think of the thousands of fellows, well-to-do and poor, who went to Cuba ready to be eaten up with the yellow fever and to die for their country. So, you see, egoism—gross, self-seeking egoism—has no monopoly of human nature. There is a soul in man. It is this soul which made heroes of our patriots, and this soul it will be which will make it possible for men to live like brothers, to love each other and to work for the good of all. Talk of the dream of having people get along well, without taking the bread out of each other's mouth, without being split up into rich and poor! If you don't deny our last war with Spain, how can you deny that altruistic spirit which is the pledge of human happiness—of Socialism?"

The Wicked Ash-Man

Some of our plutocratic contemporaries are considerably wrought up over a report that a number of the ash-cart men working for the New York street cleaning department are receiving occasional "tips" of dimes, quarters and even half-dollars from appreciative householders. It is particularly noticeable that the same papers which are so greatly exercised over this petty tipping evil are at the same time maintaining in sober earnest that Secretary Gage's bestowal of the government money on pet banks is the correct thing to do!

The private citizen, grateful to a hard-working and none too well paid city employe, gives the latter a piece of silver to show his appreciation of duty well done. This is all wrong, according to the view of these high moralists; but for a member of the republican administration at Washington to enrich his friends at the public expense is all right! The poor and humble driver of an ash-cart does a wicked thing when he takes the small gratuity for the benefit of himself and his wife and children, but the millionaire bank official is doing only his duty by "raking in" all the dollars that are pushed his way!

THY BROTHER CAIN.

I have sung of the soldier's glory
As I never shall sing again;
I have gazed on the shambles gory,
I have smelled of the slaughter pen.

There is blood in the ink-well clotted,
There are stains on the laurel-leaf,
And the pages of Fame are blotted
With the tears of a needless grief.

The bird is slaughtered for fashion,
And the beast is killed for sport;
And never the word compassion
Is whispered at Moloch's court.

For the parent seal in the water
Is slain, and her child must die,
That some sister or wife or daughter
Her beauty may beautify.

And the merciful thought we smother
(For such is the way of man)
As we murder the useless mother
For the "unborn astrakhan."

But a season of rest comes never
For the rarest sport of all;
Will His patience endure forever,
Who noteth a sparrow's fall?

When the valleys of hell are sweeping
The sea and the battle plain,
Do you think that our God is sleeping,
And never to wake again?

When hunger and ravenous fever
Are slaying the wasted frame,
Shall we worship the red deceiver,
The devil that men call Fame?

We may swing the censor to cover
The odor of blood—in vain;
God asks us, over and over,
"Where is thy brother, Cain?"

—James Jeffrey Roche.

Abbott at Catskill

As mentioned in this paper last week, Leonard D. Abbott of New York City was present and spoke in Gaylord's Opera House on Monday evening. Owing to the inclemency of the weather there was but a small audience, probably 250 persons. The subject, as most people were previously aware, was straight Socialism, which the speaker handled in a very able manner. He showed that economic forces were at work in society that were irresistible, and in spite of all efforts against it were working a change which would be equivalent to a revolution. He severely scored the ruling class in their wars of greed and conquest in South Africa and the Philippines and pointed out the injustice, inhumanity and wickedness of the whole scheme. The trusts, he said, were doing a good work in that they were consciously or unconsciously preparing the way to the Co-operative Commonwealth. To destroy the trusts, he stated, would be to destroy modern improvements, machinery, etc., and go back to the stage-coach and hand tools. He ridiculed the idea of all attempts at effective legislation against trusts and intimated that most promoters of such ideas were simply the vassals of capitalism and knowingly deceiving the people. At the conclusion of the lecture several persons in the audience fired questions at the speaker, who promptly and effectively answered them. The "Brotherhood" which secured the presence of Mr. Abbott, we are informed, will soon try to secure the services of Rev. Chas. H. Vail of Jersey City, who is the author of several standard works on Socialism and a very able speaker.—Catskill (N. Y.) Enterprise.

CALL TO ACTION

There are few communities in this country today without from one to a dozen Socialists who are not affiliated with a Socialist organization. At the last State election, the people of the four States where we were active in the campaign for the Social Democratic Party in nearly every community in the State. In almost every community a thoroughly wide-awake and earnest Socialist, with little exertion, could in one week effect the organization of a Branch of the Social Democratic Party.

The Declaration of Principles and Political Demands of this party will be found in this paper; read it and you will see that the party is a straight, uncompromising Socialist organization, recognized as such in the International movement for Socialism. The triumph of the Socialist cause, which is the cause of the world democracy, requires organization, and without it nothing can be accomplished; this party is controlled by no individual, nor by any set of individuals short of its entire membership through the referendum.

The year 1900 will be one of great and far-reaching importance to the people and especially to the intelligent, health-conscious people of the United States; the latter have surely by this time begun to see the futility of any longer giving support to capitalist parties.

Socialists should have as their main object in 1900 the polling of every vote possible for straight and uncompromising Socialism, and to do this the co-operation of every unattached Socialist in the work of organization, where he lives, is necessary.

The Social Democratic Party is now organized in more than half the States; it consists of Local Branches, State Unions and National Council. A Local Branch may be organized with five members. It will nominate candidates for President and Vice-President next March.

Full instructions and all necessary supplies for organizing Local Branches may be obtained from the National Secretary, Theodore Deba, 126 Washington St., Chicago, Illinois.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Comrades at Rockville, Conn., have arranged for an entertainment and dance at Turn hall, Friday evening, March 16. They will have the co-operation of good talent from Hartford, and a most enjoyable time is expected.

The following resolutions were adopted at a meeting of the Milwaukee central committee, February 26:

"Be it resolved, by the Milwaukee Social Democrats, in central committee assembled, that the delegates from our city to the Indianapolis convention be instructed to stand unswervingly for the present name of the party in case of union with the Socialist Labor party, and for the following important reasons:

"1. That our present name is the very best that can be used, as it explains exactly what we stand for—Democratic Socialism—as well as being the name of the international movement of the proletariat.

"2. That by a change of name the work of the past months will be nullified and we will lose the prestige of the victories already won under the present party name.

"3. That the movement suffers, and has suffered, in the eyes of the country, by constantly appearing under changing and confusion of names."

Father Thomas McGrady, an earnest student and able writer on sociological topics, delivered a stirring lecture at Covington, Ky., under Social Democratic auspices, on "Labor and Capital." The Odd Fellows' hall was well filled with working men and others interested in the subject.

Branch No. 5 of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, gave a ball March 2, the proceeds of which are to be used for agitation.

During the local campaign at Milwaukee Branch No. 9 will meet every second and fourth Friday. Next regular meeting March 16.

DEBS AS LECTURER AND MAN

Few treats are more thoroughly enjoyed by the working men of the Birmingham district than a lecture by Eugene V. Debs. It enthralls organized labor and stimulates and renews effort. He is a good tonic. His past achievements are inspiration, his efforts in behalf of organized labor evoke heartfelt gratitude, and his theories and truisms for the upbuilding of the condition of man command enthusiastic respect.

Mr. Debs is not a dreamer or theorist. None of the 3,500 persons who heard him Sunday night formed that opinion. He is a reformer with ideas advanced beyond the times. They are founded on facts, gleaned from delving into economic conditions. He understands the conditions of the working man because he has shoveled coal into the bowels of a locomotive for a living and he has spent much of his life in close investigation into the toiler's environments and needs.

His efforts in behalf of working men in 1894 are history. But in that struggle he incurred debts that he has been discharging as fast as his means would allow. These obligations were not made in his own behalf by any means, but in giving assistance to those who were in the struggle with him. This illustrates the uprightness and honesty of the man about whom there has never been a suspicion to the contrary. Debs met a railway superintendent a short time ago who thought to chide him about taking the lecture platform. "Mr. Debs," said he, "I haven't met you since 1894. You are not doing the same thing now that you were then," and an ironical smile flitted across his face.

"No, I am not," replied Mr. Debs. "Then I was only trying to get a small increase in the wages of the men from the railroads; now I am after the roads in their entirety, excepting the officers, and I am going to get them, too."

Those who missed hearing Debs missed a treat of their lives. It may be many a day before the opportunity again presents itself. From Birmingham Mr. Debs went to Columbus, Montgomery, Mobile, New Orleans, and on into Texas, where his first date is Saturday night. He has been receiving an enthusiastic reception everywhere he goes. Mr. Debs fits the lecture platform as well as if he had been born to it. He is a natural leader, is a deep thinker, polished in manner, a master of the English language, with a fund of wit that lends a charm to the naked facts that he serves to his audience. His train of thought and reasoning is irresistible, and from the moment he begins his remarks until he utters the last word he chains his audience to earnest and respectful attention, enthusing them at some points, amusing them at others, and withal awakening them to a sense of their duty to themselves and their fellow-man. Long live Debs!—Birmingham (Ala.) Labor Advocate.

Carey in Debate

"Resolved, That the economic interests of the wage-workers can be benefited by supporting the democratic party," was debated before the Workers' Educational club in Boston February 26. Daniel Lynch presided, introducing Reuben Rush of South Boston for the affirmative and Representative James Carey of this city as the latter's opponent.

Mr. Rush said that 6,500,000 people, most of whom were wage-workers, voted the democratic ticket in 1896, and pledged themselves for equal rights against private privileges. He maintained that the platform's stand was absolutely correct in this, as well as on trusts, income tax, government by injunction and trial by jury, and militarism, and said that today there are too many laws, and that the Chicago platform is good enough for all time. On the latter statement there were loud "Noes!"

Representative Carey said the democratic promises were all right; the only trouble was that they are not kept, and he cited many instances. As for militarism, Bryan talks about the Philippines and the down-trodden continental nations, while a worse state of affairs exists today in Idaho, upon which he is mute. As a matter of fact, there is no difference between the democrats and the republicans. As for trusts, the democrats say that they are robbery, in the first place, and then they advise licensing them. If it was not for the trusts, they wouldn't have anything to howl about.

"There are 158 republicans and eighty democrats in the Massachusetts house of representatives," said Mr. Carey, "but with the finest microscope that God ever permitted man to make, you couldn't tell the difference between them."

"If the democratic party is the friend of the wage-worker, where were the democrats when my bill to give working men on trial for contempt a jury trial came up?" continued Mr. Carey. "Not a democrat appeared in support of it. If the democratic party is the friend of the wage-earner, then Mr. Davenport of Greenfield, a member of the house and of the democratic state committee, and his followers should be ruled out of his party."

"I have no hope for the working class if they don't get onto the democratic party. It has been their ancient custom to give us long-distance sympathy. The democrats must come to the working people with something besides promises. There is merit in their platform, but when put to the test they fail."

PERTINENT CRITICISM OF AN UNNECESSARY PROGRAM.

By Chas. F. Schneider

A few questions regarding the proposed move to capture through a competing plant the management and control of industry in the interest of all the people.

Question No. 1. Is it advantageous, is it necessary to duplicate capital in order to convert privately owned capital into publicly owned capital? If it can be shown (and nothing can be easier than to show that) that a higher and better organization of labor and capital upon socialistic lines will result in crushing opposing or competing organizations out of existence, should not the unnecessary struggle be avoided?

Question No. 2. Would not an organization of from one to five million men be still opposed by one of from five to fifteen millions of men? And hence, would not the question of success or failure, even upon this gigantic scale, remain an open one?

Question No. 3. Should not more financial sacrifices from those who illy can afford it be avoided if it can be shown that the same thing can be accomplished without them and in the same time? The trusts are showing us daily that competing plants are already here in superfluity, and the establishment of more, therefore, not only unnecessary, but falacious and extravagant. I have in view purely political action as compared with the expropriation proposed through competing plants conducted upon higher and more scientific principles.

Question No. 4. Would we not in drawing one to five million of the better situated men from the present industry, in order to establish our competing plant, or plants, also intensify that very competition which we profess to abhor and seek to abolish? Thus becoming participants in intensifying, enhancing and increasing the very misery, crime and poverty which is cutting every man who has a heart to feel and eyes to see to the quick? The success of our competing industry once established, will we not certainly be the cause of another financial and industrial circle, compared to which all those of the past will be child's play? And the results of which one should rightly shudder to consider?

Question No. 5. Competition is competition by whomsoever practiced; the results remain the same, the crushing of the weaker to the wall, with all that this implies. Are we, as socialists, so rude and inconsiderate of the rights of the weaker combatant as our friends, the enemy, the present capitalists? Are we practicing what we preach? By what right, other than that of the stronger, in this case the better organized and more scientific, dare we inflict greater suffering upon those innocents and ignorants yet in the opposite camp? Are we, as socialists, becoming educators through the stomach rather than the head?

Question No. 6. I hear some say that in withdrawing from the present capitalistic industry one to five million of men we make room for such a contingent which will be drawn from the reserve army of the unemployed, thus conferring a real benefit. But are we? In making our one to five million of men more productive and still adding to capitalism another one to five million men, what are we doing but hastening on another commercial crisis from so called overproduction? It is plain that no fraction of the people, however large, can successfully deal with the question of the unemployed. Nothing short of the entire people through its governmental, or rather administrative machinery, can do this subject justice, and thus settle the matter rightly and permanently. Only socialism can make room for the industrial reserve army of the unemployed and spread a table for them without at the same time robbing the table of another contingent as large.

Question No. 7. Rather than spend time, labor and money in the direction of educating the mass of the people as to their true and best interests through the stomach, would it not be better to spend a tithe of that time, energy and money in educating them through the head? The crying need of the day is a great socialistic daily like the Berlin "Vorwartz" in New York, in St. Louis and in San Francisco first, and as fast as possible in every city of over 75,000 inhabitants of the United States. Money, time and labor thus spent will shortly yield a bounteous harvest, and do incalculable good in hastening the process of education, as well as abbreviating that period of inevitable misery, suffering and poverty yet in store for the great mass of human kind. Instead of a dozen, we should constantly have an army of 10,000 able lecturers in the field; we should be distributing thousands of tons of literature in every village and hamlet. One year of such work in connection with four or five great dailies and hundreds of weeklies and the co-operative commonwealth can be established in the next. If the writer should suddenly become possessed of one or more millions of money he would spend every dollar of it in this way.

in fifteen years, in addition to the capital stock of $75,000.

The gas company had, on his demand, he continued, reduced the price to $1.10, but, not satisfied with this, he had called in the state gas commissioners. As a result the price had been still further reduced to 80 cents per 1,000 feet, and the 36,000 residents of Haverhill saved $34,000 a year.

Lynn Scores Odlin

The following resolutions were adopted at last week's meeting of the Social Democratic branch at Lynn, Mass.:

"Whereas, In a debate occurring in the state house on Thursday, February 15, between Representatives Carey of Haverhill and Odlin of Lynn, in regard to the bill on trial by jury, Mr. Odlin referred to Mr. Carey as an anarchist and as a man who represented not the honest laboring classes, but the dangerous and anarchistic element; Mr. Odlin says he "does not represent Socialists, but anarchists"; and

"Whereas, We realize that the same class—viz., the laboring class—which supported and elected Mr. Carey made it possible for Mr. Odlin to take his seat in the house of representatives, but they have been greatly disappointed in his attitude toward Mr. Carey and certain measures, including the bill for trial by jury, which Mr. Carey has introduced as a protection to the rights of the working class.

"Resolved, That the Social Democrats of Lynn, in meeting assembled, and as representatives of the thinking element of the laboring class, indorse Mr. Carey and the measures which that gentleman has introduced; that we suggest to Mr. Odlin that from an educational standpoint or from a standpoint of insuring the future safety and welfare of his constituents, it would be well for him to either consult an up-to-date dictionary and learn what anarchy means, or consult some physician as to the consistency of the gray matter in his brain; that the Social Democrats recognize in the capitalistic class, whom Mr. Odlin represents in his forgetfulness of the class who elected him and who look to him for legislation in their interests, the real anarchists in their defiance of law and legal life, as well as permeating and dominating our social and industrial systems."

million dollars was sentenced to an imprisonment of two years by Judge Dundas, who also doomed to life imprisonment a tramp guilty of assaulting a mail-carrier and robbing him of one cent.

A massage establishment devoted to erotic purposes was raided in Washington in 1897; Senators and Congressmen were found there; but the comparatively lowly keeper of the house was arraigned and the distinguished patrons were left undisturbed by the law.

For stealing twenty chickens a man was sent to jail for six years by a judge in Kansas City, Kan., while a bank cashier appropriating $84,000 of the people's money was given but one year by the same judge.

Albert King, well-connected, of Boston, last year ran away with $30,000 belonging to one of the national banks, but, apprehended after a long chase, was ultimately forgiven. One Redhead was then sentenced to six months' imprisonment by the court before which King was brought for opening a letter containing a dollar.

It cannot but be admitted that lately, in consequence of the more pronounced and more unequally dispersed power of wealth, retrogression has begun toward those monarchical conditions which were presumed to have been left behind forever, and the fact is rapidly coming home to the citizens of this country that the potentiality of class demarcations were not destroyed one hundred years ago, and that, inherent in capitalism, are germs virtually as inimical to freedom and justice and the ideals elevated into view by our grandfathers, as ever blossomed under the tyrannical oligarchies of centuries ago. Capitalism has well nigh had its day. It must go. Equality is waiting for the word. The cry of the masses against the classes will not cease until not only shall conditions like those which have been recounted, be impossible, but the basis upon which such conditions rest shall have been succeeded by a more righteous theory of industrial effort.

Sir Anthony Froude says that "the endurance of the inequalities of life by the poor is the marvel of human society." But, with increasing education and intelligence, that marvel is destined to undergo a transformation. The poor will not always tamely submit. If, as without doubt will be the case, the ones comprising the upper crust of our population see things in a proper light, and gracefully yield to the will of the majority as expressed in the ballot box, the country may congratulate itself, but if there is evidenced a disposition to dispute the signs of the hour, there will be troublous times be in store and a revolution not far distant. That is the alternative.

Ignorant Misrepresentation

Democrats and Socialists. No reason why they should not vote the same ticket in 1900.—Vancouver Register-Democrat headlines.

In 1896 most of the Socialists, from Herr Most down, voted for McKinley on the theory that it would hasten the downfall and put them in power.—Salem Journal.

Is the above from the Journal ignorant or willful misrepresentation? First, the Journal certainly knows that Most is not a Socialist, and makes no such claim. Herr Most is an anarchist, and makes no effort to conceal it, but travels over the country lecturing on anarchism. It is true, probably that Most and his followers did support McKinley in '96, whether on the theory advanced by the Journal or not we are unable to say. But to say avowed Socialists in any considerable number supported McKinley is to state that which is not true. It is also true that there are thousands of men who are today Socialists who did not know it in '96, for the reason that they had not studied the question enough to become posted, but because of just such misstatements as the one quoted from the Journal they had supposed that Socialism and anarchism were synonymous terms, and were afraid of it. Many of these, no doubt, supported McKinley in '96, but will know better than to do it again.—People's Press, Albany, Ore.

Big Crowd at Newport News

Mr. Eugene V. Debs, the noted Socialist and labor leader, spoke at the opera-house last night to an audience which was both crowded and enthusiastic.

The coming of Mr. Debs was an event which had been widely heralded and had been anticipated with keen pleasure in union labor circles in Newport News. He arrived from Norfolk, where he spoke Thursday night, and was met at the boat by a committee of the Central Labor union, under whose auspices the address was made, and to whose hospitality Mr. Debs committed himself while in the city.

Naturally, the audience was composed largely of labor people, but it also numbered among it quite a bevy of ladies and representative citizens from most of the walks of life. The stage was occupied by delegates to the Central Labor union.

It had been announced that the address would begin at 8 o'clock. It was a quarter of an hour after that before Mr. Debs appeared. He was greeted with hearty applause and was briefly introduced by Mr. Frank Reidy, president of the Central Labor union, who announced the speaker's subject as "Liberty and Labor."

The audience saw before them a tall, somewhat angular, not altogether graceful, but entirely self-mastered, man, with a face that might have been chiseled, an overhanging brow above eyes that gleamed like fire, and a chin that interpreted the individual.

Those who expected to see a raving maniac, an anarchist, or a Fenian, were disappointed. Those who expected to hear the dislocated tirade of a pessimist were disappointed.

Instead, they found a man inspired by enthusiasm and belief in his cause, an orator of high ability, possessing an immense personal magnetism and a large conception of his theme.

His address was, indeed, remarkable, combining eloquence and epigram in classic phrase and clothing in the garment of carefully culled phrase and the bitterest arraignment of capitalism ever heard on the Virginia peninsula.—Daily Press, Newport News, Va.

THE COMING MAN

By Charles Trench

It strikes me, my fellow workmen, that the average citizen, who has not a vivid conception of the present state of affairs in this country, has either read very little or forgotten a great deal. The fact of the matter is that everything connected with government has gone so perversely wrong, by villainy and corruption, that nothing short of revolution can set us right. The very air is heavy with imposture, and we are in the grasp of despots who carry on the policy of government rather in the manner of thieves and conspirators than of statesmen.

Do you not see, my friends, that clouds of insurrection and violence are looming up like a thunderstorm and blackening the sky? So far as I have any power to anticipate affairs at present seem to present a most alarming spectacle. Nothing but the early advent of the Social Democratic party can prevent the letting loose of revolutionary torrents which will spread ruin and desolation in their path.

When we take an impartial view of the transactions of the present McKinley administration it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that they form one of the most shameful pages in American history. Hannan! What a rampant satire on popular institutions! Criticism, in this connection, can not express itself except in language which is painful! Up go the prices of the necessities of life by leaps and bounds, and no help for it. Of all the inhabitants of the civilized world none are so robbed, impoverished, and distracted as the producers in this misgoverned country. What labor sows rascality reaps. Millionaires and corporations are the only almoners of the government's bounty.

The thought that is now uppermost in reflective minds is—Who is the Coming Man? Who is the Moses, destined to lead us out of this wilderness of tyrannical taxation? That he will be a pronounced Socialist there can be no reasonable doubt. That he will be a man of real honesty and indomitable courage is equally evident. But it is clear that however exalted his talents may be he can do little or nothing in the way of radical reform unless a large majority of the American people are in complete accordance with him in the most momentous and pressing interests of the nation. To bring the masses in line with him is the main difficulty which now confronts the socialistic movement.

It is worth noting, in this connection, that oligarchy, wherever it has existed, has dwarfed and stunted the mentality of the human race. Under its debasing influence cringing and obsequious characters are naturally formed. Men and women, starved into dependents and bullied into fawning slaves, are always apt to regard their oppressors as a superior order of beings. Even in my limited experience I have conversed with hundreds of toilers, so degraded by excessive labor and privation, that many of them thought that God made the world expressly for the use of sharking millionaires and luxurious loafers. A large proportion of this element will, no doubt, be in violent opposition to the coming man.

Another stupendous obstacle which will oppose him is the monied power. Wealth, beyond the dreams of avarice, will be employed to crush him. All that is groveling and venomous in human nature will assail him. In a word, he will be a constant object of the most violent and vindictive hatred of monopolists and their minions.

With these considerations in view, it will be readily seen that to fight capitalism to a finish will be no light task. As the slave drivers of the South held on to their human property with desperate ferocity so will the employers and masters of to-day hold on, with equal tenacity, to their wage slaves.

But, though countless multitudes of wage slaves, duped by the buncombe of selfish politicians, will cling to their chains, and support their oppressors, still the coming man, with the Social Democratic party at his back, will march to victory. The reason is that all events, and all men, are contributing to the progress of socialism. Broadly speaking, a hundred different circumstances, independent of the will of man, are hastening its advent. Socialism has become a political necessity, and the various circumstances of the times are turning to its advantage. Even those who are opposing it are unwittingly serving it. All alike are blind instruments in the grasp of the resistless law of evolution. It is safe to affirm that were it not for this great and immutable law of nature, humanity would fall back into a state of utter barbarism, in which every man would be either a tyrant or a slave. The pessimist would think that we are drifting in that direction now; but never was there a greater error. On the contrary, signs in all directions give promise of brilliant results in the near future. In face of the glaring and monstrous abuses that disgrace our national administration there is every reason to believe that the Social Democratic party will elect its candidate for the presidency in 1904.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness for every man, woman and child are conditioned upon equal political and economic rights. That private ownership of the means of production and distribution of wealth has caused society to split into two distinct classes, with conflicting interests, the small possessing class of capitalists or exploiters of the labor force of others and the ever-increasing large dispossessed class of wage-workers who are deprived of the socially-due share of their product. That capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity, subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people.

That the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system, will compel the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare, or result in the destruction of civilization.

That the trade union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its economic, the other its political wing, and that both must be maintained to abolish the capitalist system of production and distribution.

Therefore, the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be the establishment of a system of co-operative production and distribution through the restoration to the people of all the means of production and distribution, to be administered by organized society in the interest of the whole people, and the complete emancipation of society from the domination of capitalism.

The wage-workers and all those in sympathy with their historical mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic Party will be tantamount to the abolition of capitalism and of all class rule. The solidarity of labor, connecting us with millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. In this direction, we make the following demands:

1. Revision of our antiquated Federal Constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to full and complete control of government by all the people, irrespective of race or color.
2. The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.
3. The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs, and other public utilities.
4. The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal and all other mines, also of all oil and gas wells.
5. Reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.
6. The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of a large number of the unemployed, the public credit to be used for that purpose.
7. All useful inventions to be free to all, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.
8. Labor legislation to be made national, instead of local, and international where possible.
9. National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.
10. Equal civil and political rights for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.
11. The adoption of the Initiative and Referendum, and the right of recall of representatives.
12. Abolition of war as far as the United States are concerned and the introduction of international arbitration instead.

The first national convention of the Social Democratic Party of America was called to order promptly at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, March 6, 1900, by Chairman Jesse Cox, at Reichwein's hall, Indianapolis, Ind.

Comrade Caddon of Indianapolis made an appropriate and cordial address of welcome to the delegates and said the convention would mark a new era in the Socialist movement in this country.

William Mailly of Haverhill, Mass., was unanimously chosen as temporary chairman, and Frederick G. Strickland of Chicago temporary secretary.

Credentials—Theodore Debs, Illinois; Martin, Ohio; Robinson, Kentucky; Haile, Massachusetts; Fechyew, Colorado.

In response to call, F. G. Strickland and A. S. Edwards led the convention in singing "Hark! the Battle Cry Is Ringing" and the "Marseillaise."

The credentials committee submitted a partial report, showing the following delegates present:

On motion a committee of five was appointed on organized labor.

Jesse Cox, chairman, read the report of the national executive board, as follows:

Report of Executive Board

Indianapolis, Ind., March 6, 1900.

Comrades of the Convention:
Your National Executive committee congratulates you, and all the comrades of the Social Democratic party, upon the highly satisfactory growth and condition of the party, and of the Socialist movement in the United States.

It has been deemed proper that at the opening of this convention a concise statement should be made showing the origin and development of the party, its policy and present status, and the prospect of its growth in the immediate future.

The original organizers of our party, profiting by prior experience, believed that it was essential to the success of any Socialist political party that its members should be in accord with each other as to the main principles of the party, and the policy to be pursued.

Therefore, the founders of this movement, while endeavoring to maintain a friendly attitude towards all those who are dissatisfied with present conditions, and who are honestly seeking to better them by any methods, deemed it unwise to associate themselves in a political movement, with any persons, however honest and well-disposed, who did not understand, and could not subscribe to the fundamental principles of international Socialism as stated and embodied in the platform adopted for the party; it is, therefore, made a condition of membership in the party, that the members subscribe to these fundamental principles.

The American people have been slow to recognize the now obvious fact, that the existing economic capitalist system has, by concentrating the capital of the country in the hands of a few, divided American society into two classes, whose interests are necessarily antagonistic and irreconcilable. Our people disliked and hesitated to believe that society had become so divided into classes having conflicting interests; but this truth has now been forced upon their minds by the development of industrial conditions, and it is being recognized and acted upon by the disinherited majority.

It is upon this antagonism of class interests that the Socialist movement has been founded; not so much by the propaganda of agitation, as by the logic of events. The necessary result of this class struggle is the organization of political parties in the interest of these respective classes, and the conflict between the classes, which has heretofore taken the form of an economic struggle, must necessarily in the near future develop into a political struggle between opposing political parties.

Regrettable as this consequence may seem to many, it is nevertheless inevitable; and the sooner this fact is recognized by the people, the sooner the questions at issue between these antagonistic classes will be settled, and the causes of the conflict removed.

It is the mission of the Social Democratic party to remove these causes of conflict; to organize in a fraternal and indissoluble political union the men and women whose only possession is their labor power, and who by their brains and hands produce the wealth of the country, to the end that they may obtain the political power; and to establish a co-operative commonwealth, in which there will be no conflicting classes based upon economic inequalities.

It is evident that blind denunciation of individuals who uphold or profit by the present system of industry is less convincing to the masses than is the peaceful, but clear and forcible, explanation of the causes of existing evils, thus arousing the people to unite in removing them by political action.

It has, therefore, been the policy of the Social Democratic party, by patient but powerful agitation and propaganda, to convince and organize the masses, avoiding so far as possible all merely personal controversies both with enemies and misguided friends. To carry out this policy of propaganda and organization, it becomes necessary, at the beginning of the movement, that the party should be provided with a newspaper, which should be the national organ of the party. Being without organizers in the field, it became necessary that a weekly messenger in the shape of such a newspaper should visit the homes of our comrades, for the purpose of keeping them informed of the progress of the movement, and to maintain their interest in it.

Voluntary contributions of money from friends of the cause, and a timely loan from a comrade, enabled your committee to commence and maintain the publication of the Social Democratic Herald, until the organization became self-supporting. Comrade A. S. Edwards was chosen editor of the Herald; and we cannot too highly commend his unflinching industry, ability and self-sacrifice in the conduct of the paper. But his efforts have been and still are greatly hampered by want of sufficient pecuniary means to properly conduct the paper. The circulation of the Herald has grown from 3,000 to 8,000, and is still rapidly increasing. It is sent gratuitously to every member of the party in good standing.

The Social Democratic party, recognizing that the regularly organized trades unions represent the economic phase of the class struggle, and that their members will ultimately become enlisted in this political phase, has at all times maintained a friendly attitude towards these unions, and rendered them such assistance as was within its power. Some of these unions have courteously received and listened to our speakers; and it is hoped and expected that the doors of the unions will be more and more opened to our agitation.

We hope for large accessions to our party from the trade unionists in the near future.

In the eighteen months of its existence, our party has elected to public office more than twenty of its members.

It is earnestly recommended that our comrades nominate candidates for office in every political election wherever the opportunity shall exist. This course is highly important for agitational purposes, and to give opportunity for the expression of Socialist sentiment.

Our membership has grown with increasing rapidity. We now have about four thousand five hundred dues-paying members. One thousand new members have been added since January 1, 1900.

The growth of the Socialist sentiment, and of the Socialist press in the United States, is highly satisfactory. There are now about twenty-five newspapers supporting the Social Democratic party. One of these, the "Appeal to Reason," has a weekly circulation of over one hundred thousand.

Your committee has sent greetings to the convention of the Socialist Labor party recently held at Rochester, N. Y.; and the Social Democratic party has also been represented by Comrade Eugene Dietzgen at the International Socialist conference in Brussels, held last year. The policy of our party during the last eighteen months, in its attitude towards the trades union movement, in avoiding all personal controversies, and in endeavoring to maintain a dignified but earnest propaganda, has, we believe, commended itself to Socialists, as well as to reformers generally, and this policy has attracted the support of the independent Socialist press.

The good reputation of the party thus gained is inseparably associated with the name "Social Democratic party"; and by this name the party has become known and respected throughout the country.

The hearty thanks of all comrades are due to our national secretary-treasurer Comrade Theodore Debs, for his tireless and unceasing efforts in behalf of the party. We doubt if another in all our ranks could be found more highly competent and devoted.

Mrs. Theodore Debs and Mrs. A. S. Edwards have earned our gratitude by their unselfish services to the national organization.

In an address of this character it is customary to close with a series of recommendations which are supposed to indicate the legislation that is required in the interest of the party. Believing as I do that the representatives themselves are fully qualified to meet all the requirements of the party, I refer to their experience and fidelity, and have full faith in their ability to meet all the responsibilities of the hour, and by their united action pilot the party safely and securely to its destined port.

Respectfully submitted,
Jesse Cox, Chairman.

National Secretary-Treasurer Theodore Debs then presented his report, which is given below:

Secretary Debs' Report

Office of the National Secretary-Treasurer of the Social Democratic Party.

Chicago, Ill., March 1, 1900.
To the S. D. P. in National Convention Assembled at Indianapolis, Ind., beginning March 6, 1900.

Comrades:

I have the honor to submit the following, my official reports as national secretary-treasurer for the period beginning with my election by the executive board, June 16, 1898, and ending February 28, 1900, covering one year eight months and fifteen days.

For convenience I have subdivided the report into three periods, as follows:

First, from June 16, 1898, the day of my election, to and including December 31, 1898, the close of the calendar year.

Second, from January 1, 1898, to December 31, 1899, inclusive.

Third, from January 1, 1900, to February 28, 1900, inclusive.

It will thus be observed that in the absence of any provision in the constitution I have made the fiscal year of the national party correspond to the calendar year in order that it might harmonize with the four fiscal quarters of the year in which, under the constitution, the dues of members become payable and are collected, and which quarters also begin and end with the fiscal year.

Inception of Party

Comrades who were present at the memorable midnight meeting at the Revere house in Chicago in June, 1898, when the present party evolved from the Social Democracy, will remember under what trying circumstances the new party began its career. Not only was the party without resources, but many of its members had lost confidence owing to the split in the Social Democracy and the fierce dissensions incident thereto. It was therefore a difficult task from the very beginning to establish the party, but undertaken by the dauntless few who stood sponsor for it with a full knowledge of the obstacles that were to be overcome, they went to work with a will born of faith in their undertaking and from that day to this have battled untiringly for the success of the party. How well they have succeeded will appear in part in the report of the finances and membership.

Though seriously handicapped for the want of financial resources it will be gratifying to the comrades to know that the party has been able to meet every financial obligation and to maintain its credit unimpaired.

The volume of business transacted during the brief existence of the party shows the activity with which the work of organization and agitation have been carried forward.

In the following report is stated in detail the financial transactions of my office during the period of my incumbency. The official records and account books which accompany the report contain complete record and account of all receipts and disbursements and all other financial transactions in detail, and I respectfully request that the convention authorize the proper committee to audit and inspect my official accounts and report the result of the same to the convention.

The receipts and disbursements appear in the subjoined tables:

Branches and Members

The number of branches in active operation at this time is 226, with a dues-paying membership of 4,536. This number does not, of course, represent the full membership of the party, since there are thousands who support the party at the polls and act with it in all things who are not connected with it in the capacity of dues-paying members. As a matter of fact the latter consist of but a small percentage of the actual supporters of the party, the total number of whom can be known only when the votes are counted and the election returns are made.

Rapid Growth

While the progress of the party has been eminently satisfactory from the beginning, I feel justified in inviting your attention to the extraordinary growth which has taken place in the two months immediately preceding the convention. During the months of January and February of this year fifty-three new branches were instituted and 985 new dues-paying members enrolled. This gratifying increase is going forward while this convention is in session. It bespeaks a year of tremendous increase in the number of branches, in the aggregate membership and in the scope and power of the party.

Extent of Organization

The party has rapidly marched from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the gulf. We are now organized in thirty-two states and territories and growing at a rate to make it certain that within the next few months the Social Democratic party will be organized and will be a factor in every state and territory as well as in the nation at large.

Conclusion

In concluding this, my first report, I congratulate the convention upon the healthy condition of the party and the excellent outlook for the future. In our councils, national, state and local, harmony and good will prevail. There is neither jealousy nor dissension to mar the good feeling or retard the progress of the party. With zeal and enthusiasm our comrades are pressing forward in all directions bearing high the banner of international Socialism.

My work has been a duty of love. I have had the aid and encouragement of true comrades and associates, especially in trying hours. I have also had the unflinching support of the rank and file, and to one and all I wish to express my thanks and the assurance of my lasting gratitude.

With the full faith that the convention will be harmonious in its councils, loyal in its obligations and wise in its deliberations, I have the honor to subscribe myself,

Yours fraternally,
Theodore Debs.

[The tables of receipts and expenditures accompanying the report went astray and are believed to be in the hands of the auditing committee. An effort will be made to secure them for publication next week.—Ed.]

Adjourned to meet 9 o'clock Wednesday.

Morning Session, March 7

Called to order by Chairman Mailly. Seymour Stedman elected chairman of the day.

Communications read. One from Los Angeles referred to incoming executive board.

The auditing committee submitted the following report:

We, the auditing committee, appointed to examine the accounts and vouchers of the secretary-treasurer from June 15, 1898, to March 1, 1900, have examined them at length and find them correct in every particular. It would be difficult to improve upon the method of bookkeeping in use, and we highly commend the methodical accuracy employed. Every cent of receipts and expenditures was rigidly accounted for.

The secretary was instructed to send the following in response to greetings from the Socialist workmen of New York:

"Chairman of Mass-Meeting, Cooper Union Institute, New York City: The Social Democratic Party of the United States, in national convention at Indianapolis assembled, extends its cordial sympathy with the cause of the proletariat of Porto Rico. Three cheers for the international Socialist movement!"

Committee on officers' reports commended all reports and recommended their acceptance and adoption.

Afternoon Session, March 7

Chairman Stedman presiding. Moved that resolution from Boston branch on party organ be referred to press committee. Carried.

Then occurred an incident that will be historical in the Socialist movement of this country and mark the opening of fraternal relations between hitherto separate forces working toward the same goal. The reception committee, amid tumultuous and long-continued applause, entered the hall with Job Harriman and Morris Hilquit, two of the three representatives chosen from the Rochester committee. Comrade Harriman was presented to the convention in cordial and felicitous terms by Chairman Stedman. He spoke briefly but in words excellently chosen and glowing with true comradeship.

Comrade Hilquit was next introduced. He attributed past difficulties and friction in the Socialist movement to personal eccentricities and prejudices, and declared that no good cause exists for the continued separation of the two parties. The Rochester convention, he said, purposely refrained from adopting a name, and the party be represented

To the Workers

Shall you complain who feed the world?
Who clothe the world?
Who house the world?
Shall you complain who are the world,
Of what the world may do?
As from this hour
You use your power,
The world must follow you!

The world's life hangs on your right hand!
Your strong right hand!
Your skilled right hand!
You hold the whole world in your hand.
See to it what you do!
Or dark or light,
Or wrong or right,
The world is made by you!

Then rise as you never rose before!
Nor hoped before!
Nor dared before!
And show as was never shown before,
The power that lies in you!
Stand all as one!
See justice done!

POLITICAL CORRUPTION ITS CAUSE AND CURE

By Charles H. Vall

It is unnecessary to dwell upon the fact of political corruption, most people are so familiar with it that it is taken as a matter of course. They say that "government is utterly corrupt, it is run in the interest of the few and there is no hope of improvement." Such people have no clear conception of the cause of this condition, but they have observed that government is managed in the interest of the wealthy class and have participated, perhaps, in many futile efforts to secure good government.

On the other hand there are those more optimistic, due perhaps to lack of experience, who inform us that something can and should be done to remove this ever growing evil. These people are actuated by noble motives but their efforts betray an utter lack of knowledge concerning the economic question, and consequently of the causes of the evil they seek to remove. Failing to trace the evil to its source, they waste their time in dealing with its effects. They observe that men in public position frequently betray their trust and so conclude that the fault lies with the individual, and consequently demand that better men be nominated and elected to public office. This accomplished, they think the problem solved!

Usually such advocates of reform have but little conception of practical politics and absolutely no conception of the fact that the economic rulers are the political rulers. They little realize the power they are up against and the difficulties in the way of getting men nominated and elected that are not tools of the ruling class. They have also failed to observe that their remedy has been tried time and again and usually proved ineffective even where the difficulties have been surmounted and good men placed in office. The temptations which beset the public official under the present system is often more than his weak human nature can stand.

This brings us to the main question, What is the cause of political corruption? The cause of this corruption is the opposition of private to public interests. Self-interest is the root. Legislators and councilmen are bribed, either directly or indirectly, by those owning vast aggregations of wealth that special privileges may be obtained. Every trust, corporation or important business interest today is admitted to be politically corrupting power. If necessary the officials are bought outright but frequently a little stock a railroad pass, or trolley blue ticket is all that is required. So long as individuals or corporations can advance their own interests at the expense of the public, so long there will be legislative corruption. The lobby, of which so many complain, is but an effect of which self-interest is the cause. It is a perfectly natural concomitant of the present system of industry. Many a man who was upright and honest when he entered public life has fallen from grace. The incentives today to corruption are too great to hope for much improvement. If men were perfect beings they might administer the present government honestly and justly, but in the present stage of human development the temptations seem more than frail humanity can bear. So long as government must be administered by imperfect beings it would seem the only wise course to remove the motive of perjury and dishonesty. It is surely the height of absurdity for reformers to place all their efforts upon getting "good men" in office and leave untouched a system of industry that makes them bad as soon as they get in. If the powers that be are unsuccessful in corrupting the official, he finds himself isolated and at the expiration of his term laid upon the shelf. The party has no use for a man that does not do the bidding of the master class, the campaign contributions are not forthcoming unless the nominee is believed to be all right, and usually only those who have been tried and found faithful are allowed on the ticket.

The would-be reformers, then, are working at the wrong end of the problem. It is futile for them to blame individuals, to censure public officials for doing the very thing they are expected to do. If we support the system we ought not to make war on those who administer it. Neither does it do any good to rail at the political machine and boss. These are effects, not causes. We might destroy a certain political machine and boss, but unless we change the system another machine and boss would come into existence. No political boss could long maintain his power were it not for the contributions he is able to secure from corporate interests in return for favors rendered. It is corporate pap that builds up and maintains the political machine. In New York city the municipal ailment is not Tammany Hall but the business interests that use Tammany Hall to buy legislation at Albany and franchises at the city hall. Behind the political "ring" is the private owners of public franchises. Public corruption is merely the overflow of business corruption. Our corrupt business system corrupts our political system, even in our highest courts. Political corruption has become an integral part of our business system—legislation, municipal, state and national, is now bought and sold in the open market. It is mere shortsightedness that blames the ward politician and public official. A little careful examination will reveal the fact that the ward politician and public official are merely agents of those who are endeavoring to subvert their material interests.

What is the remedy for this deplorable condition? If the cause of political corruption is the opposition of private to public interests, the remedy, eviley systems, etc., is a recognized source of corruption. Many examples might be given of the good results to government from placing these monopolies under public control. Public ownership will remove both the motive and opportunity for this corruption, it will pluck the evil up by the roots. What is true of the municipality is true of the state and nation. It is everywhere private interest opposed to public interest that is the cause of the evil. Collective ownership of the means of production and distribution is the only remedy, and just in proportion as this is realized the evil will be removed. Remove the cause and the effect will disappear.

Socialism would greatly simplify government and render unnecessary its obnoxious powers which result from our false organization of society. Socialism means industrial self-government, a social democracy in which the people are their own masters. Let all who desire the abolition of political corruption join in the establishment of the Co-operative Commonwealth.

THE SOCIAL IDEAL

By Leonard D. Abbott

I know that it is not strictly "scientific" to have ideals, but I frankly confess that I cannot help it! Of course we most of us recognize that the great dently, is to remove this antagonism, to make the interests of the individual identical with the public interest; in other words, to remove these interests from private or corporate management and control. This would remove both the motive and opportunity for corruption. The motive for political corruption is the same as for business corruption—private gain. Private gain is the cause of selfishness and so long as men can advance their own interests at the expense of others, whether of individuals or of society, just so long the evils will remain untouched. This private gain is the cause of the dishonesty in both private and public business. Of course there is but one remedy, the abolition of this system of antagonisms, in which the interests of every man are set against the interests of every other man and of society as a whole. Socialism would make the interests of one identical with the interests of all.

If we wish to remove public corruption, then, we must remove the cause of dishonesty in public administration—private gain—and thus render it impossible for men to subvert individual interests by violating the public trust and then faithful, honest legislation will be secured. If men could not advance their own interests at the expense of the public, they would have no motive to bribe public officials. By removing capital from private control we remove the cause of political jobbery. Under Socialism there would be no opportunity to raid the public treasury or secure fraudulent appropriations for there would be no opportunity for one to engage in private business. There would be absolutely no opportunity for one to secure special privileges at the expense of the public and even if there were there would be no motive. One could only secure an excess of commodities which he would be unable to consume or dispose of. For the same reason the official would have no motive to sell out, even if there were a buyer, but, as a matter of fact, there would be no one with any interest to purchase, however much he might desire to sell. Under Socialism no one would have a desire to accumulate a great fortune for he could not capitalize it and make it a source of productivity.

Political corruption is inherent in the present system and as long as the system remains we cannot hope for any improvement. It is futile, for instance, to complain of corrupt municipal government and at the same time consent to leaving public utilities in the hands of private corporations. The private ownership of the electric light, gas and trolworld is pursuing its course regardless of what your ideal or my ideal may be. Yet after all we cannot but cherish more or less definite hopes of what society may one day become, and in so far as we exert any influence upon the thought of our time, we influence and shape the nature of the society that is to be. It will be a sorry day for our Socialist movement when it loses its idealism. Every idealist ought to be a Socialist; every Socialist must be an idealist, whether he is conscious of it or not.

It is impossible in a few words to adequately describe the glorious ideal of Socialism, to which the men and women of our movement are consecrating their lives today, with a whole-heartedness and a self-sacrifice almost unparalleled in the world's history. We can only say that it is the mightiest ideal that ever stirred the heart of humanity. We can only say that it is essentially revolutionary, and that it represents almost the antithesis of existing conditions. In place of strife, we shall have rest and fellowship; in place of misery, happiness; in place of inequality, equality; in place of ugliness, beauty.

What appeals to one first of all in this new life is its comfort and security. There will be no more of this mad, heartless scramble for wealth, no more of this mean, sordid commercialism. Our life will be sane and normal. We shall no longer conduct society on the principle of the herd in the pigsty, but rather in the spirit of kindly altruism and the recognition that an injury to one is an injury to all. We shall not need to think very much about the physical and material side of life at all. A few hours of pleasant labor, organized in scientific fashion on a national scale, will produce enough—and more than enough—to satisfy every human need.

My soul rises up within me to greet the wholesomeness, the equality, of this new epoch in human history. As I dream of it, I feel like one transported from some pestilential swamp to a mountain summit, with its bracing ozone, its splendid panorama. Think of the petty and nauseous stupidity—the utter woodenness—of so much of our life today, with its snobbish castes and grades into which we so solemnly divide ourselves, its so-called "higher" and "lower" classes. Consider, on the one hand, the butterfly life of the ball-room; on the other hand, the drunken soddenness of the saloon. What inspiration it gives us to even think of these things swept from the earth forever! What joy it is to know that we shall one day have a society of real men and women, instead of (too often) dolls! The world will never realize the pitiful waste and degradation of human life that has been going on through the long centuries, until Socialism produces a new race of men.

Socialism will mean simplicity. It will mean that we deliberately turn our backs on the myriad shams around us. The luxuries of today—the twelve-course dinners, the two hundred dollar dresses, the multitude of servants—are simply signs of disease. It is hard to say which is the more detestable, the overbearing conceit of the plutocrat, or the cringing servility of the flunkey. How pleasant it is to think of the society of equality, enthroning honesty, simplicity, fellowship, and relegating to the ash-heap the pompous shams and the silly "respectability" of today!

Lastly, Socialism will mean beauty. I am sure that one of the first things men will turn their attention to, after the nightmare of capitalism has passed away, will be the beatification of their environment. We will no longer be able to tolerate for an instant the wretched shabbiness and sordidness of modern commercial life. We will put our souls into the architecture of our towns, and make them an ornament to nature, instead of a blot upon it. Everything in those days—from the cup and platter to the steamship—will be worth admiring. We will make the world a garden of beauty.

To my mind, William Morris' "News from Nowhere" is the most beautiful picture of the ideal society ever planned by the hand of man. And I think one might search long without finding anything to equal the exquisite charm of his verses:

Then all Mine and all Thine shall be Ours, and no more shall any man crave
For riches that serve for nothing but to fetter a friend for a slave.

And what wealth then shall be left us, when none shall gather gold,
To buy his friend in the market, and pinch and pine the sold?

Nay, what?—save the lovely city, and the little house on the hill,
And the wastes and the woodland beauty, and the happy fields we till.

The homes of ancient story, the tombs of the mighty dead,
The wise men seeking out marvels, and the poet's teeming head.

The painter's hand of wonder, and the marvelous fiddle-bow,
And the banded choirs of music—all those that do and know.

For all these shall be ours and all men's, nor shall any lack a share
Of the soil and gain of living, in the days when the world grows fair.

THE MAN UNDER THE DRAY

"A heavy dray broke down in the street and a man was crushed and held captive beneath it. On top of the dray was a load of merchandise and on top of the merchandise were sitting a lot of Monopolists.

"A crowd of men gathered about and began to discuss how to relieve the man crushed by the dray. They stayed so long and discussed so hard that the people finally created them into a Legislature.

"Then they called in a lot more men, called Political Economists, who decided that the man had always been so crushed; it was his natural condition, and it was useless to think of releasing him.

"Edward Atkinson said it would overturn civilization to let the man get out from under the dray—and so it would.

"Next, chairs were adowed in universities to teach that the man was there because he was not fit to survive, or that he had too much overproduction on top of him; that even if he got out he could not walk, because of lack of experience in walking.

"Then came the Theologians, who said the man's heart was bad and that he must be saved before the stuff could be taken off; finally, that if his heart could be got right he need not have the weight taken off.

"And the Theologians secured a life job for centuries, just for preaching that the man could not possibly be anywhere than where he was.

"Finally a man came along who said: 'Why, take the stuff off and let the man go free.'

"That man was a Socialist."—George D. Herron.

Social Question and the Answer

The social problem is a problem to organize the world so that all men may be equally secure in the material means and social resources needful for a complete life. Public ownership of the sources and means of production is the answer to the social question, and the basis of spiritual liberty.—Herron.

Prosperity and Freedom

Property, when first instituted, was endurable; it did not take away from anybody the right and the means of becoming a land-owner, for there was no money, while there was vacant land in abundance. From the moment, however, that every free man could no longer appropriate a part of the soil, property has ceased to be a right. It has become a crying evil, and the cause of the misery and destitution of the masses.—Weitling.

WHAT I HEAR PEOPLE SAY

The people are being educated—some by choice, but more from necessity. Employers are studying the "logic of events," owing to trusts. Employees are forced into this great "student class" by the infrequency of food in their stomachs and the frequency of patches on their clothing. It is true that some are only in the A B C class, but they are all earnest students!

A real estate man who used to occupy a large suite of rooms with help galore, but who now has "desk room," says: "There is something wrong somewhere; I can't make things move."

A lady whose business it is to supply ladies' furnishings remarked: "It is terrible the number of people in the silk business who are thrown out of work by the combination."

Two business men who used to have offices of their own are now working for insurance companies. I asked one of them how he was getting along. "Fine," he replied. "The company has done more business this year than ever before." "Oh," I said, "of course the company is doing well. Nearly all the big companies are doing well. The country is in the interests of the big companies. But I remember the time when you used to have your own business in your own office." He sighed! I inquired of the other one if he had noticed this peculiarly partial phrase of "prosperity" and if he intended voting for the "prosperity" men again.

Another real estate man is also thinking. He has noticed the growth of trusts and the fact that they get anything they want from congress down. I gave him some facts and figures on Socialism, municipal ownership, and what has been done in New Zealand. It is his opinion that "something like that will have to be done here. It seems that everything tends toward trusts, which throws out not only thousands of employees but many employers as well, who are forced to join the workers."

Still another real estate man, who has grown tired of being part of the great but stupid public who are not only being "skinned" by the street railway companies but crowded and almost frozen to death as well, says: "I am in favor of municipal ownership of public utilities; I can't go as far as you do." Nevertheless he is in the lane that leads to the great Socialistic highway, and I can see his finish!

James T. Fishel, a private in the Seventeenth United States Infantry, recently completed his term of enlistment and returned from the Philippine Islands. In an interview in the Chicago Record a few days ago he said: "I should like to go back to the Philippines if Otis would allow me a license to go into business, but his policy is 'once a soldier, always a soldier,' and he will not grant them to any of the boys who have served out their time."

Think of it! That man went there to fight for his country, as he supposed, but that was a great error on his part. In reality he was fighting for the trusts. He can't go into business in the country he helped to grab, but the trusts and rich men, who dodge taxes and don't do any of the fighting except with their mouths, can engage in business there.

"Trade follows the flag," you know! A lot of moral buzzards follow the flag, too, but they follow it after the Fishels risk their lives to place it there. A vote for either of the old parties is a vote for a continuance of generals who are kind to the trusts. Don't forget that.

I think Mr. Fishel ought to be cutting his economic eye teeth!

Miss Frances E. Willard, the great temperance agitator, in her address before the Woman's Christian Temperance union at Buffalo, N. Y., October 29, 1897, spoke of Socialism as follows: "What the Socialist desires is that the corporation of humanity should control all production. Beloved comrades, this is the frictionless way; it is the higher law; it eliminates the activities for a selfish life; it enacts into our everyday living the ethics of Christ's gospel. Nothing else will do it; nothing else can bring the glad day of universal brotherhood."

To all who believe in a religion that touches men's homes and families and pockets—a religion that is a reality and not a Sunday suit only—I make this solemn appeal: Get some simple Socialist literature and read it until you understand it. Socialism is not robbery—it is justice. If it were robbery it would not number among its followers such men as the Rev. George D. Herron, W. D. Howells, Henry D. Lloyd, Washington Gladden, Mayor Jones of Toledo and others. And after you understand it, vote for it.

A vote for the Social Democratic ticket is a vote for a great principle; it is a vote for the universal brotherhood of humanity without distinction of race, creed, sex, caste or color.

A vote for the old parties is a vote for the old system of genteel but remorseless plundering of the people.

THE SOCIALIST PROGRAM

The programme of Socialism is the emphatic assertion of two leading principles: First, we recognize, as the central truth of modern society, the independence of all. No man now works alone, by division of labor and mutual exchange, all are sharing in each other's toil. Second, we apply the doctrine of economic science to the art of government in insisting on the ethical right of the joint workers, and the workers alone, to the whole product of their labor, without any deduction for rent, profit and interest, or any other form of capitalist appropriation. We contend that the whole produce of labor is created by the working class through access to the natural resources of the earth, and to this class it rightfully belongs.

OBJECTS AND PRINCIPLES

Socialism is economic democracy and implies the socializing of all industries. It proposes to emancipate society from class rule, which rests upon the money power, which power in turn rests upon a monopoly of the instruments of production and distribution. Socialism proposes to put an end to the devil's dance of capitalism now going on in the world, by taking all interests whatsoever from the control of the present irresponsible capitalist class, who are using these interests solely for their sordid welfare—thus enslaving the people—and placing these interests in the possession of a responsible national organism, the government, to be owned and operated for the benefit of all the people collectively, who have created these interests and to whom they rightfully belong. The fundamental principle or keystone of Socialism is that the workings of a Socialistic state must be for the benefit of all the people collectively.

The aims of Socialism are principally educational on account of its magnitude, requiring for its complete undertaking the acceptance of a large majority of the people, but the time is not far distant when Socialism will bombard capitalism out of its entrenched monopoly and give it a dose of its own medicine. "What are you going to do about it?" with the answer, Socialism.

Practical Socialism is a method of co-operation managed by a state or nation, by which all production and distribution—in fact, everything which is required for the support and welfare of the individual—shall be owned and operated by the people collectively and co-operatively, so as to enable them to provide for all their wants and guarantee them security of possession and employment for all time.

By doing this things will be produced for use in natural and legitimate channels, and not for profit, which will not exist under a Socialistic state.

Thus everything produced from land and raw material will be produced for use and not for profit. Houses will be built so that people may live in them, and all products will be utilized to serve a legitimate end and purpose. Under the present senseless system everything is produced for the one purpose—that of making money.

Socialism is a principle which requires that industries will be operated to enable people to live, and not pay tribute to and enrich one class, to the manifest injury of the great masses of the people.

The system under which we now live is essentially a robber system, and no honest man can succeed under such a system. The man who can lie, steal, cheat and take a dishonest advantage of his fellow-men at every opportunity, under a legally established system of rent, profit and interest, represents the "survival of the fittest" under our robber system.

Socialism requires that all land, natural resources and all means of production shall be owned and operated for the purpose of enabling the people who labor to live and receive the full product of their labor, thus preventing the capitalist class from despoiling them as is now done of four-fifths of the products of their labor. This implies a change of ownership from the present private system to the collective system, and much of the so-called private property will be looked into and called to account. At present the above interests do not belong to the people, but to a few wealthy men who do not use them for the good of all the people, but simply to make wealth for their owners.

The returns of the United States census of 1890 show that—

Nine per cent of the population of the United States own 71 per cent of the wealth of the country.

Ninety-one per cent of the population owns the other 29 per cent; 4,000 people own the above 9 per cent owning one-fifth of the total wealth of the country.

The national wealth is owned by—

The capitalist class, $42,203,000,000, or 9 per cent of the population.

The middle class, $14,550,000,000, or 39 per cent of the population.

The working class (producers of all wealth), $2,746,000,000, or 52 per cent of the population.

The above figures are suggestive as to who owns the country, and the records of past history show no such complete robbery of the people since the ages when conquest meant confiscation of all the conquered people possessed.

Thus it is plain by the above figures that the wage-workers, who have produced everything, do not own the land, farms, mines, mills, plants, railway and industrial systems of the nation, but that these are owned by the 9 per cent of the population—i. e., the capitalist class—who operate them solely for their own benefit. Under a Socialist state the people would own and operate the above.

THE PAST AND THE FUTURE

At the beginning of a new century our convention assemblies. The time is portentous of mighty changes. The heavens are darkened with bloody colored battle clouds; but we who have a certain hope for the future know that soon the gloom of strife will be dispelled by the golden effulgence of liberty's rising sun. At the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the century now nearly dead the dynasties of European nations were hurled into oblivion by the French revolution, and the myrmidons of the mightiest monarchs were trampled beneath the swinging onward march of Napoleon's victorious legions. The old was dead and the new was not developed. Nought but battle and bloodshed on every side, the outlook was decidedly hopeless. Nevertheless, we who live at the end of this century perceive this striking lesson when we peer backward through the vista of the past one hundred years: Out of the social chaos caused by contending forces we see emerging the form of civic freedom and political equality. Political freedom, it is true, is not the ultimatum bonum, yet it is the means of reaching any desired end required. As in the past, kings passed away and political power was assumed by the people, so in the near future capitalists will go and the proletariat inherit as its own the wealth which its labor has made possible. Liberty, Equality and Fraternity will be the motto of the French revolution; Liberty, Equality and Fraternity will be the battle slogan of the future.

In Germany, France, Italy, Belgium and England we perceive an international army of militant Socialists 7,000,000 strong, and America will soon swell the ranks of organized intelligent revolt with the solid phalanxes which are being marshaled beneath the standard of the Social Democratic party. Everywhere where political liberty prevails it is being used as a means of obtaining economic freedom. In all lands where political freedom prevails, yes. But there is one great land with an area of 8,660,395 square miles—one-sixth of the land surface of the globe—and a population of 129,932,173, in which not even the remotest vestige of political liberty is enjoyed, and where the despotism is as absolute as that of ancient Persia under a Darius, a Xerxes or an Artaxerxes. Nevertheless this government knows no aristocracy between despot and people, and neither has it a well-developed plutocracy as is the case in other European countries. In Russia the autocrat is the great arch capitalist; the government, which consists of one ruler, controls all the railroads, telegraphs, telephones, salt mines, the silver and gold mines of Siberia and owns almost one-half of the national domain. Besides this it has a monopoly on the sale of tobacco, salt and spirits. A change in this government from a despotism to a republic would be a much nearer approach to the realization of Socialism than the colony of New Zealand is at present. Such a change may be possible in the near future, for it cannot be that Berliński, Korelenko, Sergius, Stepniak, Michael Bakounine, Peter Kropotkin and Leon Tolstoi have lived and battled in vain. It may be that while the Anglo-Saxon and Teuton are agitating and debating that in that far-off northeastern region of darkness and servitude, a Flaric Demos may suddenly arise, cast off manacles made weak with the rust of centuries and call in clarion tones upon the peoples of the earth to follow in the onward and upward path of liberty.

From whence or how the great change for the better will come I do not know. Yet oftentimes in the moments of my deepest pessimism I see a vision of hope. The great Goddess of Freedom, five thousand cubits high, with soft, benignant blue eyes, but with stern resolve enthroned upon her broad white brow, with the naked sword of revolt in one hand and the olive branch of peace in the other, advances with swift, unswerving stride, and in her train arrayed the deep phalanxes of the militant class-conscious proletariat, who march onward singing in the words of William Morris: "Wish ye peace, then be ye with us, let our hope be your desire; Wish ye war, then shall ye perish like the dry wood in the fire."

James Allman.

(Farmers' Review, Bonham, Tex.) The growth of the Socialist movement is something phenomenal. Only a few years ago such a thing as an avowed Socialist was uncommon, but they can now be found in every neighborhood contending for the Co-operative Commonwealth. They are to be found in all classes of society, among the rich as well as among the disinherited. Socialist papers are springing up all over the country proclaiming the necessity of the social revolution. Many ministers are becoming advocates of Socialism and the whole social fabric is being permeated with the doctrine.

HOW SOCIALISM WOULD IMPROVE NEW YORK

Chas. H. Conter in N. Y. Journal

In the first place, it would abolish taxes and give you an ideal city. It would abolish the gambling in the necessities of life and it would make it impossible for one man or a few men to fatten on the great body of our citizens. It would make the happiness and well-being of the millions independent of the whim and rapacity of a few.

Put every enterprise of public utility into the hands of the people and have it run in the interest of the people, instead of for the profit of a few millionaires, and you would get enough revenue to make all taxes impossible and at the same time enable you to build up a city which, in the perfection of its public institutions, charities, hospitals, schools, places of recreation and amusement, street improvements, facilities of transportation, etc., would outrank anything yet imagined.

The principles of socialism are now so well understood by careful and disinterested students than to dispute the accuracy of the above deductions is to set yourself down as ignorant. The matter is capable of exact mathematical proof.

Much more than this, however, can be accomplished, and will in the end be accomplished.

It is only a matter of time, when all would improve it—would improve it so vastly that within less than a decade it would be hard to believe that the conditions of life, as they are today in this great metropolis, had ever existed.

Let me begin with the children, the children as I have seen them during my stay here, who live in the lower city, especially on the East Side. There is nothing more pathetic than their lives. Often unable to find room in the public schools; more often not furnished with proper clothing to be presentable in school, they grow up in squalid and vicious surroundings without a chance to fit themselves for the duties of citizenship.

Under a socialistic form of government every child, no matter how poor, no matter of what nationality, would be provided with the necessary clothing and the necessary food to attend school. It is, in my opinion, the state's duty to see to it that every child during its school-day age should not only be permitted but obliged to attend, and I am in favor of providing everything to facilitate this, even though it be necessary to provide in addition to shoes, clothing and food a decent abode for them. This necessity has struck me with particular force in New York.

Of course all things which in their nature are connected with the public service should be under municipal or national control, as the case may be. That means, so far as New York is con-production and distribution will be in the hands of the people—run by the people and in the interest of the people. When all profits will be devoted to the betterment of all the people, but when, nevertheless, each individual will be able to live his or her private life independent of the others. Departments will be established for the operation of every industry and every man will share in the profits according to his ability and his willingness to work. His private life and his amusements he can regulate for himself. One may prefer a fast horse—the other a piano. That is none of the community's business. To interfere with the latter would be "communism," which is often confounded with "socialism."

The average man produces under the present system in four or five hours work a day sufficient to equal five or six thousand dollars a year—I mean that his actual labor is worth that amount, and that under a socialistic form of government the average man would get much.

We advocate strongly the supplying of children with all they need to go to school. They should be properly clothed, shod, fed and sheltered in order that they may be properly educated.

I have been asked what position the socialists take on the liquor question. I answer that I am thoroughly in favor of letting every community decide that for itself. Let the majority say whether alcoholic liquors shall be sold and let the majority impose such restrictions as it deems necessary.

There should be no rival political organizations fighting for patronage and spoils, and there would be none under a socialistic form of government. It would be to the interest of every man to see that the government was properly administered, and there would be no political parasites, hangers-on and professional politicians.

Among other things the pawnshops should be owned by the municipality. This would be of especial benefit to New York, where many people are often obliged to resort to them. Under a system of absolute socialism these would eventually disappear entirely, because they would get no customers, but in the meanwhile their operation by the city would be a boon to the poor.

These are only a few and hastily selected improvements that would follow if New York were governed on socialistic principles.

John C. Chace in N. Y. Journal

Every principle of true socialism, if put into operation in New York city, cerned, in addition to the public utilities common to all cities, the operation of the ferries. When I watch the throngs that are daily transported across your two rivers I am amazed that the desirability of having these great water highways run for the benefit of the city—that is, the benefit of the people—has not long ago suggested itself to every man and woman.

I assert—and the figures can be furnished—that if all the public utilities, such as railroads, street railways, gas and electric plants, coal mines, water distribution, etc., were run under proper national and municipal control it would not be necessary to assess one cent of taxes for any purpose whatsoever, and we would have enough money to spend on improvements, schools and otherwise to turn every city into a model municipality. And especially is this true of New York City.

But this is not all, by any means. I believe that our present method of production and distribution is a constant breeder of misery, poverty and crime. I believe that an entire overturning—peaceably, of course—of these conditions is necessary.

If everything that is produced now were produced under the supervision and guidance of the people, instead of being wholly a matter of profit and caprice of a few, no man would be obliged to work longer than, at the most, six hours a day, and yet be able to enjoy life, surrounded by the same comforts and luxuries that are now at the disposal of the man who earns $6,000 a year or more.

The postmaster-general in our country today stands at the head of our postal system. He can figure to a nicety just how many stamps are needed, how much stationery is needed, etc. I believe that if every industry were thus in the hands of a separate department of state there would be neither over nor underproduction, and there would be, consequently, no artificial fluctuation in values. The working hours of the men would be regulated by the department, and would in no case be longer than six hours.

If this system were adopted it would benefit New York more than any other municipality, because on account of its great size, its diversity of nationalities and the vastness of its public utilities, the evils that are sought to be remedied are more glaring here than anywhere else.

THE INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION

Since the human race has no means of enjoyable existence, or of existence at all but what it derives of its own labor applied to the resources of the earth, and since the transformed tools of production have become the property of a class and are used primarily, not for supplying wants, but for making profits, it would be reasonable if the great body of workers, divested by the economic evolution of ownership in the modern tools of production and dispossessed also of the land, demanded that the whole question of labor be considered in all its bearings as if it had now appeared for the first time. The working class, as such, has a right to demand a re-examination of the whole question. Justice and the good of the community demand it.

When the present century opened nearly all work was performed by hand and the various industries afforded opportunities for living getting. The persons engaged in them were, to a large extent, the owners of the tools or means of production. Note the marvellous change and try to grasp its meaning, its effects on civilization.

Work, in constantly increasing measure is done by machinery; the various industries afford opportunity for gaining a living to a comparatively few only, and a diminishing few, with almost unlimited opportunity for the owners of machinery to extend their dominion over the human race.

Millions of men are being reduced to beggary and the dependent class by this one fact of the monopolization of the modern means of production in the hands of an exploiting class.

It is estimated that the productive capacity of the labor-saving machinery in the United States is now equal to a hand-working population of 400,000,000. The machinery in the mills and factories of Great Britain alone is equal to doing the work of 375,000,000 men, more than all the adult inhabitants of the earth at this time.

The single state of Massachusetts has machinery enough to do as much work as 50,000,000 men could do by hand.

Massachusetts contains in its shoe factories enough machinery to produce in six months all the shoes that all the men, women and children in all the states require in twelve months.

A sewing machine does the work of twelve women. A Boston bootmaker with one man to run it makes 300 pairs of boots a day. In 1880 300 of these machines were at work in various countries and turned out 150,000,000 pairs. Glenn's California reaper will in twenty-four hours cut, thrash, winnow and bag the wheat from sixty acres. The Hercules ditcher removes 750 cubic yards per hour. The Darlington borer enables one man to do the work of seven in tunneling and reduces the cost by two-thirds.

A single boy with a knitting machine does as much knitting as 100 persons could perform 100 years ago.

The productive power of society, by discovery and invention, has been doubled every ten years, and even in less than ten, during the century, yet misery, want, degradation, insanity, suicide and murder—nearly all having their procuring cause in the economic distress of the masses who have made civilization only to be stripped of the means of maintaining it—are commonest where capitalism is strongest.

The increase of crime, due fundamentally to the private ownership of the people's tools of production, has become so alarming that a scientific writer proposes the restoration of the "Tarpeian rock, from which the criminal class may be hurled to death."

Private ownership of the machinery of production, which machinery is quite as essential to society now as the individual tool used to be, is a standing menace to the peace of society and involves the destruction of civilization if continued.

The Social Democratic party calls upon the working class to examine the labor question in the light of these revolutionizing facts and to support, this year, the practical program of this party for the emancipation of the makers of civilization who, under capitalism, are denied the enjoyment of the results of their labor.

Dr. H. F. Titus, one of the ablest and most popular ministers of Washington, and hitherto a leader of the non-partisan movement in Seattle, is out with the following declaration:

"Bryan stands for free silver, Agui-naldo and trust regulation, all makeshift or superficial issues. Some populists fondly fancy they can go into the democratic party and make a 'new democracy' of it under Bryan. I do not so read the signs of the times. Rather, a new party is coming, with a new foundation principle—namely, just distribution of the products of labor. Eugene V. Debs, and not William J. Bryan, is the exponent of the new, the Social Democracy. We might as well begin first as last to cut straight down at the root of drunkenness, licentiousness, crime, poverty, idleness, of misconduct and misfortune—namely, capitalism, the exploitation of the many for the benefit of the few."

Among the valued contributors to The Herald we are pleased to reckon the Rev. H. S. Geneva Lake of Olympia, Wash., who has in this number some stirring lines, "We're Coming, Great Jehovah." Comrade Lake has been listened to by thousands from Maine to California and is pronounced one of the most profound and eloquent speakers on Socialism and kindred topics in the country. We should be glad to learn that the comrades in the Evergreen State were making opportunities for Mrs. Lake to be heard. Branches can secure her services by addressing B. L. C., Box 502, Olympia, Wash.

The "Social Democracy Red Book," fresh from the press and fresh with an up-to-dateness that does great credit to the editor, Comrade Frederic Heath, is before us. It is a book that comes just in time to be of great service to the movement, and will, we hope, be given an extensive circulation by the Comrades everywhere. If you see it you will want it. The price is 15 cents; ten copies for $1. Orders filled from The Herald office.

The Bohemian comrades of Chicago celebrated the commune last Saturday night. There was a large attendance and the musical programme and dance were much enjoyed. The financial result was satisfactory, and the publishing fund of Spravednost, the new Bohemian paper, will be benefited to the extent of $70. The Herald trusts that the new paper, which was indorsed by the convention, will be well supported.

The national secretary asks for the indulgence of correspondents for a few days while he disposes of the letters accumulated at headquarters during the convention. It might be several days before he can catch up, as a large amount of correspondence awaited his attention on returning to the office.

When I die I wish but two words written on my tombstone—"infidel" and "traitor." Infidel to a church that could be at peace in the presence of sin, traitor to a government that was a magnificent conspiracy against justice.—Wendell Phillips.

The Tampa (Fla.) Advance refers to the visit of Bryan to that place and says that all the questions he discussed are dead ones, while E. V. Debs dealt with the live economic questions of the day.

The Social Democrats of Somersworth, Mass., have nominated Comrade Charles H. Mellen for mayor, with a full list of aldermen and councilmen.

WELL, WHAT OF IT?

We are often told that laborers are better off today than ever before; that they are better fed, better clothed, better housed, better schooled. Admitting this for the sake of argument, the question arises, What of it? Are they any nearer economic independence? Are they any less under the thumb of their employers? After the owning classes have once obtained possession of all the land and tools of production the question of the temporary rate of wages cuts no great figure with them. Having secured permanent control of the laborer by controlling his means of livelihood they can play with him as a cat does with a mouse—let him live awhile and then pinch him awhile. They have him on a chain and can let it out a little or pull it up a little, as it suits them; but there is no hope of ever getting beyond their clutches. The wage laborer is still nothing but a "hired man," and his class never can be anything else under the present system, no matter what their standard of living is. As one writer puts it, "The margin for the possible improvement of their lot is confined within narrow barriers which cannot be passed."

So is a horse better off today than formerly. Horses today are better fed, better stabled, better curried, better harnessed, better blanketed, better shod than one hundred years ago. In these particulars horses have made as much progress as laborers, if not more. In fact, the cab horse standard of living was set up by Gen. Booth as the highest he expected to achieve for the poor of London; to attain anything as good as the jail standard he admitted was impossible. But after one hundred years of progress a horse is, after all, nothing but a horse and can never be anything else; and likewise wage laborers may improve and improve until doomsday, and yet after all as a class they will be nothing but dependent wage laborers, working only for their "keep," so long as the present system lasts. "Once a wage laborer, always a wage laborer," is truer today than ever before. The only substantial improvement that can be effected is to improve the wage system out of existence entirely.

To claim that the present system of production is the best that ever existed is to utter only a platitude. The fact that it has become the prevailing system is sufficient evidence that it is the "best." So was the slavery system of production at one time the "best," inasmuch as it was the prevailing system until new forms of production rendered it obsolete. The fact that changes have taken place in the past is the ground for our firm conviction, amounting to a moral certainty, that changes will take place in the future. By studying the tendencies of the time we are able to outline what the coming change will be and how and by whom it will be brought about. The industrial change (if that name is more acceptable than the word "revolution") which has already taken place will be followed by a corresponding political change, as has always been the case in the past. This change will be brought about by the intelligent use of the ballot. It will consist in the emancipation of the working class, for the working class and by the working class. This is the only class which is able to bring about a political change, and the only one in whose interest it is to do so.

"DIVIDING UP"

"You Socialists want to 'divide up things'—make people who have niggered and saved all their lives divide up with a lot of bum-throwers who ought to be run out of the country or hung."

"Well, even so," retorted the Socialist, "that need not worry you, for all you have to 'divide up' is the contents of that little brown jug you ship up from the city as often as you get your pension check, and the more you are obliged to 'divide up' that the better it would be for you. Now, did it ever occur to you to figure on the 'dividing up' that is taking place now in this era of prosperity fostered by your g. o. p., with its gold standard, protective tariff and benevolent assimilation policies?"

"Never did? Then let me give you two or three of the simpler mental arithmetic problems in economic division."

The actual labor cost of running a railway train is not to exceed, in all departments, that of fifteen men, or for a ten hours' run, 150 hours' labor; distance run, 400 miles; passengers carried, 300, or a labor cost of one-half hour for each passenger. At 3 cents per mile railway tariff the cost is $12 to each passenger. Now, the average earnings per diem, according to the United States census, for farm labor is 25 cents, or 24 cents per hour, if the farmer works only ten hours each day. The ratio of compensation under your g. o. p. prosperity regime of railway service to farm service is 960 to 1; that is, under the present scheme of "dividing up" the average farmer gives 960 hours of productive farm service in exchange for one of railway service. If this is not "dividing up," my capitalist friend, let us have the details of what in your opinion does constitute that operation. In the capitalist arithmetic the process of division is always "long" for the railways and "short" for the farmer, no matter how vociferously he may shout and persistently vote for "the best system on earth."

Or again, according to the Associated Press correspondent, Mr. Frank A. Carpenter, the labor cost of a factory-made pair of men's shoes that retail for from $2.50 to $3.50, is but twenty minutes—one-third of an hour. But make it three times as much—one hour. For that one hour of shoe-factory labor the farmer has to return from 100 to 150 hours of farm labor, a ratio of from 100 to 150 to 1. No "dividing up" there, of course. But what blank ruin would engulf the American voting king if an industrial bureau were to furnish him shoes on the same plan it does postage stamps—viz., the cost of the service! Perish the thought and vote the old ticket.

Or again, the farmer buys a common lumber wagon, price $75. Labor cost of production at factory, forty-five hours or less. Ratio of division in this 'sum' in economic division, 67 to 1, and Grandpa Hayseed keeps on voting the good old party ticket. He believes in "incentive," he does, and means to maintain his "glorious independence."

Or, again, as actually happened in this county lately, attorney fees allowed by the court for less than five days' actual services—but call it ten days—were $400—$40 per day; or a division at the ratio of 160 to 1, and our fusion friends propose to fill the gap with a 16 to 1 free standard white metal and national license-to-trusts policy. Let us pr—I mean "divide up." F. E. Miller.

THE VOTERS' CHOICE

By William Maily

Socialists contend, and will continue to contend, that as long as capitalism exists there can be but one vital issue in all elections. And this issue covers all other so-called issues from whatever source they spring, be it the currency, imperialism, the tariff or the trusts.

In this national election, the notes will have to choose between capitalism and Socialism. That is the supreme issue in every country where exploited labor pays tribute to an exploiting class. Of the conditions that make this paramount to all other questions, what need to speak? They are known and realized by all who care to see, better then tongue can tell or pen depict. Let us waste few words on existing evils. Rather let us explain why such things are possible, and what can be done to ameliorate them.

The life blasting and soul withering conditions of today exist because of one fact, the ownership by a class, a comparatively small proportion of society, of the instruments used to produce and distribute those things necessary to the sustenance and welfare of life. These factors are the land, railroads, mines, factories, stores, in short, the entire machinery of wealth production and distribution. Ownership of this machinery presupposes control, and control in its turn means the absolute supremacy of this class in the social, ethical, religious and political life of the remaining members of society. This class is consequently the ruling class in every nation, large or small, republic, monarchy, a despotism, wherever the present civilization prevails. Monopolization of the means by which society exists admits dictation of the manner in which society lives.

Ownership by society, the whole people, of the machinery of wealth production and distribution will mean equal advantages and opportunities to every member of society, first, to make a living, and secondly, to enjoy life by cultivating the sciences, the arts, literature and every other form of social and intellectual activity. An industrial system barren of classes, because it could not heed them. This is Socialism.

The ruling possessing class at present is the capitalistic class. To continue its existence this class seeks to perpetuate the cause of its existence—Capitalism. The governments, local, state, national and finally international, constitute the chief medium through which and by which the capitalist system can be perpetuated. Consequently the capitalist class consciously supports only those political parties whose managers and leaders wilfully or ignorantly plan a continuance of the capitalist system. In the United States these parties are the republican, the large capitalist, and the democratic, the party of the rapidly diminishing small capital, each differing in name, both identical in aim and purpose.

The more possessing masses constitute the working class. With no intent in common with the capitalist class they must consciously support a political party whose aim and purpose is the abolition of Capitalism and the establishment of Socialism. Freedom from the oppression of the ruling class must come through the concerted efforts of the oppressed class. A political party pledged to Socialism is the only party entitled to the support of the working class.

This is an old story now, oft repeated but worth repeating.

If there be any who doubt or mock what is herein written let them look about them. The time has come when they must read and think and act. This must be done sooner or later, and sooner rather than later.

Call us idealists and our theories utopian, we hold nevertheless that ceaseless striving, for a utopian ideal is nobler and grander than slavish submission to a present day inferno.

IN MEMORIAM

The Herald regrets to learn of the death of Comrade Frederick Scrimshaw, assistant editor of the New York People and author of that clever satirical work "The Dogs and the Fleas." This regret will be shared by Socialists everywhere who admired the man and appreciated his work for the cause he loved.

We have the painful duty of recording the death of Comrade Fred J. Braun of Cleveland. Our deceased comrade was one of the most devoted workers in the organization. At the joint meeting of Branches Nos. 2 and 3 of the Social Democracy, held Sunday, March 4, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas, It is with the most profound sorrow we learn that one of our comrades has passed from this life—one of our most patient and hardest workers in the cause of freedom and the emancipation of mankind—namely, our dearly beloved comrade and brother Fred J. Braun; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we here assembled in behalf of the Social Democratic party extend to the bereaved family of our departed comrade and brother our most sincere and heartfelt sympathy and condolence; further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to our official organ and also to the Cleveland Citizen."

The grim reaper Death cut down a true and noble worker in the cause of emancipation when Mrs. Sabrie G. Aikin of Duluth ended her labors as editor and publisher of the Labor World. She was endowed with true heroism and rare ability and made her mark in her chosen field of work.

Peace to our dead. May their worth and fidelity be a source of encouragement to the living.

with his colleagues held itself open to adopt any name.

Comrade Benham was the next to speak, and supported the purpose of his committee in coming to the convention.

An Indianapolis photographer who had waited long to get a shot at the delegates was then given an opportunity, and all present were grouped together for that purpose.

After the recess the report on platform was received, and while the discussion was on Max S. Hayes, editor of the Cleveland Citizen, the third member of the sub-committee from Rochester, arrived and was given a rousing reception. He responded in a heartfelt manner.

On motion the visiting delegates were given seats and a voice in the proceedings of the convention.

Comrade E. V. Debs moved that a committee be elected to meet the committee representing the Socialist Labor party in conference for the purpose of considering and deciding upon the matters relating to the unification of the parties; said committee to report its action back to this body and to be subject to the approval of the same. Carried.

The committee elected was as follows: Hoehn, Putnam, Berger, London, Robinson, Chase, MacCartney, Butcher, Strobel, Lonergan, Brown, Putney, Cox, Heath.

Discussion of the platform was then resumed, and after some slight changes the same was adopted.

The Platform

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

Adjourned.

Morning Session, March 8

Convention was called to order by Chairman Stedman.

The credentials committee reported that sixty-seven delegates were present from seventeen states, with 2,090 votes.

John C. Chase was elected chairman for the day.

The following report from the press and publishing committee was read and received. After discussion, in which the need of free discussion in the party organ was emphasized, the report as adopted was as follows:

The undersigned, your committee on Social Democratic press, respectfully report that we have had under consideration suggestions made relative to the establishment of a co-operative publishing plant controlled by the party. While we are not prepared at this time to make any definite recommendations, owing to financial considerations, our opinion is that the course of the party should be in the direction of such control and we recommend:

First—That the incoming National Executive board be instructed to take under consideration the establishment of a central bureau of literature.

Second—That a committee consisting of three be selected by the convention with instructions to arrange for furnishing to publishers of Socialist and other newspapers plate matter.

Third—That members of the party consider wisely the difficulties incident to starting new papers and the almost inevitable loss attending the duplication of printing plants.

Fourth—That a communication be sent from national headquarters to editors of all publications in sympathy with the principles of the party and printed in German, Bohemian, Hebrew and other languages, requesting them to print all official or party news for the benefit of their readers and that official documents be furnished for that purpose.

Fifth—That official indorsement be given the Sparvelsdunst, a Bohemian weekly paper to be published by the Bohemian comrades of Chicago. This recommendation is made upon the understanding by your committee that the paper will be the property of the Bohemian branches of Chicago and under their editorial control.

W. E. Farmer, Chairman.

A. S. Edwards, Secretary.

For the Committee.

After much discussion relative to some parts of the report on organized labor the following resolutions were adopted:

Attitude Toward Trades Unions

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

First—Join the union of your respective trade.

Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.

Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.

Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.

Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.

Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.

Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

The conference committee of fourteen on union then reported. After thorough discussion the following recommendations were adopted:

First—That a committee of nine be elected by this convention to confer with the committee of the S. L. P. in relation to union.

Second—That the convention instruct its committee of nine to urge the selection of the name "Social Democratic Party" as the most appropriate name of the united party if union shall be effected.

Third—That after the conference of the two committees aforesaid all recommendations or reports of the committees and all questions, including especially the question of party name, shall be submitted to a majority referendum vote of each party, said vote to be taken separately by each party.

Provided, however, that in case any question other than that of party name submitted to a referendum vote shall fail of concurrence, the committee shall have power to submit new propositions regarding such matters to a referendum vote.

The Nominations

On motion the convention then proceeded to nominate candidates for president and vice-president of the United States. Frederic O. MacCartney of Massachusetts took the floor and said:

Mr. Chairman and Comrades of the S. D. P. in Convention:

I know that it is customary in the nomination of a candidate for president to give forth utterances which are winged with eloquence. Now, I am not an eloquent man, but I believe that the comrades will accept in lieu of eloquence a few words that come from the heart of the one who makes the nomination.

In a dark epoch of strife a child was born, an epoch of strife between two great classes of society. On the one hand there was the maturing capitalist class, and on the other hand there was the evolution of the self-conscious, class-conscious, wage-earning, working class. From the earliest time that this child could take cognizance of the condition of the class into which he was born his interest began to develop in the destinies of his class. There was therefore the conjunction of the birth of a great movement with the birth of a great man. The individual is subservient to the growth of any epoch; nevertheless, the individual who grasps the meaning of the epoch in which he lives makes his impress upon the epoch, and molds it by the power of his individuality.

And thus began a campaign of conquest of the minds of his fellow countrymen in order to bring it about.

I say that the man contributes to the epoch, and the epoch in turn contributes to his life.

Twenty-five years ago the young man, grown from a child, definitely gave his life in consecration to his class and to his kind. He took the first movements which were open to his influence. He was a wage-earner; he was a working man. He therefore identified himself with those movements which look to the improvement of the conditions of his class, to the maintenance of the standard of living of his class.

This was the great trades union movement, and it finally culminated in one of the most heroic strikes in modern history, a strike based upon love for fellow-man, a strike which was the quintessence of unselfishness, of self-abnegation, a strike in which men asked not only that their own rate of wages should be maintained but that the wages, the standard of living, of their fellow-men, should be maintained.

In the meantime capitalism had been reaching its maturity. A critical point has been reached. A strike was inaugurated by the American Railway union delegates and men. The capitalist party gave forth its ultimate power in the courts, for the courts in the evolution of the capitalist class had become subservient and did their will. This man defied the courts in the cause of humanity. This man jeopardized his life, and finally he gave himself to imprisonment. For the time being the courts had their sway, and the capitalistic class was triumphant.

The man thus giving himself had followed the evolution of the labor movement. He had gone from one party to another party in the evolution of politics, his mind open, all alive. When he entered the tomb he had completed one cycle of his life. There it was that, like a John of Patmos, he had revealed to him a vision of the things that were to be, of the new kingdom, of the new era. There it was that there came to him a message which was the completion of the Pilgrim's Progress of labor. When he came forth from that tomb it was to a resurrection of life and the first message that he gave to his class as he came from his darkened cell was a message of liberty. He became the liberator. Then the inevitable movement and the man had met, and they were never again to be separated. He was still to continue to mold the movement, and the movement was again to transform him into a liberator of his kind, and now the time has come when the first presidential campaign shall be prosecuted.

We would not tax him. We would rather preserve his life as more precious than our own. If he will commit that life to us we will preserve that life. We ask him to give us his name. It is for him to decide. I therefore place in nomination the name of one whom we love, the peerless champion of labor, the knight errant of the new chivalry which will mean the emancipation of our land. I place in nomination the name of Eugene V. Debs.

A mighty wave of enthusiasm rose when the speaker resumed his seat. All eyes were turned on Gene. The applause gradually subsiding, he arose and said:

"Mr. Chairman and Comrades: How completely I respond to the very beautiful and touching words of the comrade it is impossible for me to say, deeply moved as I am by this manifestation of your confidence and good will. When I attempt to give expression to the emotions within me, all words become meaningless. Far more than language can express do I appreciate the confidence of the comrades who would make me the standard-bearer of the campaign in which we are now entering. I say again in the presence of my comrades that there is nothing within my power to bestow that I would not gladly give in the interest of this party. But for certain reasons which are sufficient but not necessary to be stated, it is not possible for me to accept the honor you wish to confer on me. Strange as it may seem to you, I say that I cannot accept the nomination. I am not considering my own honor, but only that of the Social Democratic party, of which I am only a simple member. I hope you will not consider me indifferent to your appeal. I could not be insensitive to it without being destitute of every quality that dignifies human nature. For twenty-five years I have been enlisted in the cause of labor; I have done what has been in my power to advance that cause. There are considerations of health which make it impossible for me to accept the nomination. I hope the comrades will be considerate and accept my declination in the same spirit in which I am compelled to tender it."

For a few moments the profoundest silence prevailed, every one present realizing how much to this man meant any other course, but all hoping that the very silence itself was the herald of joy to come. Hoehn of Missouri was the first to break it; with great feeling he appealed to Debs to reconsider his decision. Benham of the S. L. P. committee followed, and, urging an acceptance, said: "We have a climate out in California that is good for men like you. Come out there with us; we will care for you." Harriman added his plea for the sake of duty, union and Socialism. Others also pled, all in vain; the convention's choice, the choice of the visiting delegates, sat immovable as a statue.

The session had been prolonged for the purpose of making the nominations Thursday night, but failing in this an adjournment was taken to Friday morning.

Morning Session, March 9

The convention was called to order by Chairman Chase.

On motion the following were appointed a committee to arrange to furnish plate matter to Socialist and other publishers: Gordon, Evinger, Edwards.

The following resolution was adopted: "That the national executive board be instructed to formulate and publish, in such form as they deem advisable, general instructions to organizers in reference to the organization or formation of local branches of the Social Democratic party."

Eugene Dietzen was nominated for delegate from the Social Democratic party to the International Socialist congress at Paris; but after discussion the matter was referred to the committee of nine.

Debs and Harriman

MacCartney of Massachusetts then took the floor and in a few words renominated Eugene Victor Debs for president amid a storm of cheers. Benham of California rose and seconded the nomination, which was made unanimous by a rising vote.

Victor L. Berger of Wisconsin then placed in nomination for vice-president Job Harriman of California. Instantly the delegates were on their feet; the ticket was complete; the ideal ticket had been named. While the nominees stood on either hand of Chairman Chase, the convention indulged in a demonstration the like of which has never before occurred in a Socialist gathering on American soil.

The nomination of the committee of nine to confer with the Rochester committee was then taken up. There were fifteen nominees and the vote was taken by ballot, each delegate casting as many votes as he had credentials.

On motion the committee of nine was empowered to fill vacancies.

The following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, That our incoming national executive board be instructed to devise ways and means for a systematic campaign of agitation and organization among the working women of the country by means of a special committee."

A new constitution was submitted, adopted and referred to a committee of eighteen.

On motion the present executive board and officers were instructed to serve until the committee of nine reported.

On motion the Manifesto was referred to committee of eighteen.

On motion the matter of party emblems was referred to the joint committee.

On motion the time of meeting for the joint committee was left to the committee itself.

On motion Seymour Stedman was chosen as chairman of committee, with power to select four others to solicit funds.

On motion the convention tendered a vote of thanks to the comrades of Indianapolis, to the city press, the secretary and assistants.

Short addresses followed by Harriman, Hilquit and Hayes.

Chairman Stedman announced as the committee on funds—Strobel, MacCartney, Finn, Haile, Zorn, Mil'ner (N. Y.). Stedman, MacCartney, Hilquit and Benham were appointed a committee to escort the candidate for president to the hall.

Adjourned.

Afternoon Session, March 9

Called to order at 2 p. m. by Chairman Chase.

Debs and Harriman were escorted into the hall, creating an extraordinary scene of enthusiasm, which was repeated when both ascended to the platform. Again and again the cheering was resumed as Debs in a brief speech announced his acceptance. He was followed by Harriman, who met with a demonstration that indicated unmistakably the spirit and purpose of the delegates.

Tellers reported the following elected as members of the union committee of nine: V. L. Berger, J. C. Chase, W. Butcher, Mararet Haile, G. A. Hoehn, Frederic Heath, W. E. Farmer, Seymour Stedman, J. F. Carey.

Moved that those next following the nine in number of votes fill vacancies. Carried.

The convention then adjourned sine die, all joining in singing the "Marseillaise."

Social Democratic Party

The committee of nine was instructed, as the report shows, to urge the adoption of the name "Social Democratic Party" for the united party. This met with no opposition in the convention, and was the unanimous sentiment of the delegates. Morris Hilquit in his first address to the convention declared that the Rochester convention had purposely refrained from adopting a name, and the party he represented was willing to adopt any name the committee on union might agree upon.

The committee of nine representing the Social Democratic party met and decided to hold a joint meeting at New York in two weeks. In the event that any of the nine are unable to attend, the four receiving the highest vote in the order named and entitled by vote of the convention to fill vacancies are: Lonergan, Connecticut; Martin, Ohio; Mahoney, Tennessee; Strobel, Newark.

A Pleasant Incident

One of the incidents of convention week that will not soon be forgotten occurred at the New Occidental hotel Friday. When the delegates were seated for dinner one of the comrades rose and proposed a vote of thanks to the waiter girls, which was given with a hearty cheer. A few moments later another was seen trying to make himself heard above the din of conversation. He said he thought the delegates should do more than give thanks, and in behalf of those present tendered the girls a purse of $11, which had been quietly made up for their benefit. Then Mrs. Corinne Brown seized the occasion for a few appropriate words to the girls, telling them who the guests were and advising them to study Socialism and marry Socialist husbands. One of their number acknowledged in an appreciative manner this parting evidence of good will, and the delegates turned their attention to the dinner.

They Hewed the Path

The sword of Gideon, sword of God
Be with ye, Boers. Brave men of peace
Ye hewed the path, ye broke the sod,
Ye fed white flocks of fat increase
Where Saxon foot had never trod;
Where Saxon foot unto this day
Had measured not, had never known
Had ye not bravely led the way
And made such happy homes your own.

And yet meanwhile ten thousand miles
She seeks ye out. Well, welcome her!
Give her such welcome with such will
As Boston gave in battle's whirl
That red, dread day at Bunker Hill.
—Joachim Miller.

The Paupers of the Land

We've toiled through life in grief and strife
And earned a pittance bare;
But now we're left, of work bereft,
To feed upon despair.

For Youth must come, and Age must go
To wander where it will,
Our last few years shall end in tears,
For we are Paupers still.

They count for naught the days we wrought,
A grateful country knows
Our work is done, with it we've won
The Union's strange repose.

For such as we no brighter fate
May bid the heart be brave.
A little while to watch and wait—
And then the pauper's grave!

We strove too well to earn that Hell,
The Workhouse and its gloom;
Those dismal halls of whitewashed walls
Are sombre as the tomb.

But go we must to join the throng
Of State-imprisoned Poor,
God grant our days may not be long
Till death brings rest secure.

[How would it do for those who toil and create wealth to "brace up," and instead of waiting for "the rest that death brings," assert their right to live by wresting the governing power from the exploiting class and socializing the means of life?—Ed. S. D. H.]

ON THE EVE OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

A Vision

I dreamed I was once more in exile in the Arctic region, watching the dark blue starry skies at night, nearly in the center of the northern part of the horizon. I saw a deep, dark segment, so deep and dark and menacing that a feeling of awe and terror crept unawares over me. Strangely enough, the deep dark segment, glaring like a bottomless abyss under the feet of a daring mountain climber and ready to swallow him at any moment not only did not repel me, but rather attracted all my attention with an unexplainable fascination. Whittish clouds of indistinct, perpetually changing shape and outlines were slowly creeping forward and backward, like shadows of dethroned ancient deities, over the black abyss. At times the shadows broadened, spread out, glimmered with phosphoric flames covering like a phantastical huge curtain a considerable part of the horizon and then vanished at once, leaving the same menacing deep Egyptian darkness behind. The gigantic shadows reappeared, took more distinct shape and outlines, more intense colors; green, blue, red; all the shades and hues of the rainbow in the most unexpected but always harmonious combinations.

It was a chaotic vision, a series of perpetually changing pictures. At times a part, at times the whole horizon, at times the starry heavens and the snowbound soil, and even the intensely cold atmosphere appeared in flames, as if all the volcanoes of the globe were thrown into a state of the most violent eruption. The waves of the scene of colored flames seemed to menace everything and everybody on earth, like an irresistible flood of fire. And not a sound, even the faintest, could be heard. I looked and waited and wondered. A crushing feeling of my human nothingness overwhelmed me. I felt like shutting my eyes, dazed and tired out by the vision, when suddenly a divine being approached before me, as if borne by the waves of flaming air. It would be futile and sacrilegious at the same time on my part to attempt to describe the heavenly apparition—so celestially beautiful and radiant and yet so human, plain and everyday like. I felt as happy, calm, hopeful as never in my life before or after. So much goodness, so much sweetness and simplicity radiated from the childlike, womanly countenance of the goddess. I at that moment felt with all the fibres of my body, with all the powers of my soul that I was in the presence of a goddess, and all the dross of everyday drudgery, cares, fears and anxieties melted away, leaving behind the pure gold of an exalted human being.

"Follow me!" uttered the goddess, touching me with the torch in her left hand, and her voice sounded like the murmur of flowers caressed by the zephyr wind in spring. "I am the future of the human race."

I had no will but hers, and obeyed silently and joyfully, like a child, the command of a well-beloved mother. The earth at once lost the power of attraction for my body and soul, and I felt lifted to heights unspeakable. I lost all idea about space and time. The stony walls, iron doors and armed sentinels did not exist for us, and we passed into a dark, damp, cold and filthy dungeon deep under the surface of the earth. A prematurely aged man with remarkably noble and intelligent features with chained hands and feet kept near to the slimy wall on a wooden bench. Fearful phantasma seemed to disturb the prisoner. The goddess touched him with her torch. The prisoner did not rise, but a happy smile rejuvenated the careworn face of the martyr.

"It is new year, the first of a new century. You know me; I came to console you," said the goddess.

"To console me?" retorted the unfortunate, with a faint, broken voice, once so musical and magnetic. "Do not trouble yourself about me! You had no more devoted servant than me. I sacrificed my life-blood to the cause of humanity and here I am—a slave of slaves, a broken vessel! Go to the mighty of the earth—to the kings, emperors and czars!"

An indescribable sadness overshadowed the divine face and we departed. Again we soared silently through the space still we stopped before a small frame building and entered a small room all filled with books, manuscripts, maps and philosophical instruments. An old, venerable sage was dreaming in his old-fashioned chair. The goddess touched him with her torch and repeated her greeting.

"A new century, indeed! What a consolation!" answered the scientist sarcastically. "I spent all my life in the seeking of truth, opened new vistas of thought, made many discoveries and inventions. But did all this improve the conditions, lighten the burden of the poor, the down-trodden, the persecuted, the disinherited? Go to the priests, to the successful captains of industry and politicians!"

Again sadness crept over the features of the deity and we departed. We then entered the splendid palace of a mighty ruler—the Czar of Russia. Surrounded by almost inhuman luxury, and treated like a demi-god, he dreamed on his gorgeous throne. The goddess did not touch him with her torch, and he took no heed of us. His wife and child came in and congratulated him on the advent of the new year, a new century. The ruler of a hundred million of subjects did not seem to be happy and contented.

"I wish I could be a poor peasant," said he to his wife. "The burden of my crown is too heavy for my head. I am the least free of all my subjects, and my rule is, after all, only nominal. I do not and cannot know and ascertain the real needs of my people, and if I would and could I would be powerless to accomplish any real good. I am the servant of my advisers and cannot make one step independently. I am surrounded by people I cannot trust and must any moment be ready to meet a violent death. The future does not belong to us so-called mighty rulers. Our days have passed. O! for the humble lot of the poorest of my subjects!"

Not less surprising was our experience in the palace of one of the richest men on earth. "Do not congratulate me with new years and centuries," said he to his intimate friends. "The future does not belong to us financial kings. Our days have passed and I really am not quite certain if there is any cause to lament it. My life was, frankly speaking, a failure as far as real human happiness is concerned. I exhausted all my energies in amassing fabulous wealth. At first I enjoyed success; but soon got used to it and looked upon it as a matter of course. I had no time to enjoy life in my young years and lost the capacity for enjoyment in my declining age. My friends are few, my enemies name are legion. And my conscience bothers me sometimes more than I care to confess. I did, alas! many a thing in my career I would give my life to be undone. O! for the humble lot of one of the humblest of my employers! My wealth turns more and more burdensome to me with every hour."

We then visited the pope of Rome. He at once recognized the goddess, but did not seem to be especially edified by her arrival.

"I do not see any reason to rejoice in the advent of the new century. As a representative of one of the strongest dogmatic religions I have to confess that our days have passed and the future does not belong to us churchmen. The old creeds are decaying fast. But what replaces them? A total absence of any philosophy of life, of any guiding principle of conduct."

Again we soared through space till we stopped in the midst of one of the largest cities of the United States. A numberless crowd of listeners was gathered around a young carpenter, a speaker with a self-concentrated, dreamy expression on his unusually handsome face. His voice was remarkably clear, strong and winning. The audience was spellbound and thoroughly in touch with the magnetic personality of the orator. He spoke about the prospects of the new century with unsurpassed eloquence. The passing nineteenth-century was the epoch of unchecked individualism, pessimism and selfishness, of purely negative ideas (as so-called political freedom, competition, etc.), of destruction of old institutions without building new ones to replace them; of religious hypocrisy and general moral cowardice. The speaker hailed in glowing words the twentieth century as the dawn of a new era of race consciousness instead of individualism, altruism instead of selfishness and optimism instead of pessimism. Positive ideals as a basis for the construction of perfected social institutions, ideals of human brotherhood and solidarity of all interest will replace the old fetishes of the sovereign personality.

There was no trace of declamation or mannerism to be noted in the speaker. He appealed not only to the reason, but the innermost hearts of his audience, to the holy of holies of the human soul. And there was not one man or woman so hardened and soiled by the meanness of their lives as were not touched and ennobled for the time being. The divine spark weakly glowing under the heaps of moral, or rather immoral, rubbish even in the most depraved human being was blown into flames and the enthusiasm of the listener was great. Indeed, before their spiritual eyes were unrolled vistas of thought and sentiments, of the existence of which they never dreamed, were pointed out motives of action about which they never heard. But, above all, they were made to feel for the first time in their barren lives the deep sacredness, high dignity and true significance of human relations. He preached the gospel of humanity turned divine, of humanity identified with divinity, of the total renunciation of the personality in the interests of the race—this sublime unity with a past full of mysterious charm and a future too glorious to be imagined by us. The longer he spoke the greater ran the enthusiasm of his listeners, the more their number grew. Every word of the prophet of raceism was wired by special reporters to all the nooks and corners of the globe and aroused everywhere the same enthusiasm, kindled the same religious ardor, implanted the same ideals and aspirations. For the first time in the history of the world all humanity was united in one all-absorbing thought—its perfect solidarity as a race.

Again we soared through space till we arrived at Paris. The world's fair was in its climax of attraction, but it was overshadowed by the world's congress of nations assembled with the purpose to inaugurate eternal peace on earth and good will to men, to devise new social and economic institutions on the basis of reason and equity, to do away forever with exploitation of one class by another in any shape or manner, to inaugurate real freedom and equality, to proclaim the religion of divine humanity. The world's history never witnessed such a mighty throng of people of the higher mental and moral capacity as the representatives of this congress. The world's history never witnessed deliberations so profound in their nature, so broad in their scope, so deep in their significance.

I was so enthused by the sight of the world's congress of nations as to venture to say a few words myself, but at that moment I awoke, and the vision vanished. The sun was still under the horizon, but its light messenger, the rosy rays, spread like a heap of sheaves upward into the deep azure of the starry sky. The eastern part of the sky seemed to glow in a sea of molten gold, silver and rubies. The upper rim of the sun appeared over the horizon, blending us, joyous spectators, with its fiery light and inaugurating the glorious dawn of the XXth century.

Son der Thorheit! Traume immer Wenn dir's Herz im Busen schwillt, Dach im Leben suche nimm mer Deiner Traume Elenbild.

Song of the Factory Slave

(By Ernest Jones.)

The land it is the landlord's;
The trader's is the sea;
The ore the usurer's coffer fills,
But what remains for me?
The engine whirrs for master's craft;
The steel shines to defend;
With labor's arms, what labor raised,
For labor's foe to spend.
The camp, the pulpit, and the law,
For rich men's sons are free;
Theirs—theirs are learning, art, and arms;
But what remains for me?

The coming hope, the future day,
When wrong to right shall bow;
And hearts that have the courage, man,
To make that future now.

I pay for all this learning,
I toil for all their ease;
They render back in coin for coin,
Want, ignorance, disease;
Toil, toil, and then a cheerless home,
Where hungry passions cross;
Eternal gain to them who give,
To me eternal loss!
The hour of leisure—happiness—
The rich alone may see;
The playful child, the smiling wife;
But what remains for me?

The coming hope, etc.

They render back—these rich men—
A pauper's niggard fee;
Mayhap a prison, then a grave,
And think they're quits with me.
But not a fond wife's heart that breaks,
A poor man's child that dies,
We score not on our hollow cheeks
And in our sunken eyes;
We read it there, whenever we meet,
And as the sum we see,
Each asks, "The rich the wealth have got,
But what remains for me?"

The coming hope, etc.

We bear the wrong in silence,
We store it in our brain;
They think us dull, they think us dead,
But we shall rise again.
A trumpet through the lands will ring,
A heaving through the mass,
A trampling through their palaces,
Until they break like glass;
We'll cease to weep by cherished graves,
From lowly homes we'll flee,
And still as rolls our million-march,
Its watchword brave shall be.

The coming hope, the future day,
When wrong to right shall bow;
And hearts that have the courage, man,
To make that future now.

"MY BOY"

By Morris Rosenfeld, Author of "Songs from the Ghetto"

I have a little boy, a fine little fellow is he! When I see him, it appears to me the whole world is mine.

Only rarely, rarely I see him, my pretty little son, when he is awake; I find him always asleep, I see him only at night.

My work drives men out early and brings me home late; oh, my own flesh is a stranger to me! oh, strange to me the glances of my child!

I come home in anguish and shrouded in darkness—my pale wife tells me how nicely the child plays.

How sweetly he talks, how brightly he asks: "O mother, good mother, when will my good, good papa come and bring me a penny?"

I hear it, and I hasten: it must be, yes, it shall be! The father's love flames up; my child must see me!

I stand by his cradle, and see and listen, and hush! A dream moves his lips: "Oh, where is, where is papa?"

I kiss the little blue eyes, they open: "O child!" They see me, they see me, and soon close up again.

"Here stands your papa, darling! Here is a penny for you!" A dream moves the little lips: "Oh, where is, where is papa?"

I stand in pain and anguish, and bitterness, and I think: "When you awake some day, my child, you will find me no more!"

Whenever a part of society possesses the monopoly of the means of production, the laborer, free or not free, must add to the working time necessary to his own maintenance an extra working time in order to produce the means of subsistence for the owners of the means of production, whether the proprietor be the Athenian Etruscan theocrat, Norman baron, American slave-owner, Wallachian boyard, modern landlord or capitalist.—Karl Marx.

SHOES AND SOCIALISM

An article under this heading appeared in the New York Sun, date of December 24, 1899, and was printed in the Social Democratic Herald of January 6, 1900. It would seem that the Sun would like some light in connection with the recent Social Democratic successes in Haverhill and Brockton, relative to the relationship between shoes and Socialism.

If the Herald will permit, the writer, an inventor and deviser of new things and ideas, would like to mention a few points which may throw some light upon the question.

History tells us that nearly all great and good men spent their youthful days in shoemaking and thus the reform movement began. The shoes are the guide and protector of humanity's forthcoming. The emblems or tools that the shoemaker used were connected with some good old historical names that served as the mainspring of the forthcoming of the battle of humanity.

The mention of a few will illustrate. First the (awl), all, which means the same as alpha, if we jump over the small (kit), we will find the (last), that means omega. We have thus found the beginning of the end. The shoemakers are the founders of the people's understanding; they cut and form the innersoul, trim and finish to their own last, the same he does with the (outersoul) which is turned out to endure the hardships of world. Then the (sole) sole is truly hammered and leveled. You can step upon snakes and scorpions and all the sharks of Wall street cannot stand up against you.

They are the cutters and shapers of the (tongue) and the tongue that they form serves for all nations, regardless of languages.

He digs the (channel) through which all (thread) must run, and whether you believe it or not, the shoemaker never gets stuck like others who may have tried, for he has a small bunch that is bristling with good points and his thread runs as smooth as wax. If you are getting weak, the shoemaker will put on a backstay. If your (soul) is uneasy or noisy, he will ease it up and bring about harmony. He connects the top and bottom (body and soul); he puts (eyes) in the body so the shoes are the feet's lantern and light you on your paths. They upbuild people who are going wrong, and when they find a wicked (sole) they cut it off and throw it in a consuming fire. He connects the now (so common welt) to the (soul) and without him we would all die within six months of consumption or some other sickness.

The only thing he does not part with is his heart and brains, for he needs them for future use.

Breaking away from genuine shoemaker's language, and using common, every-day talking, we can sum up the relationship this way: A shoemaker as an individual has been able to make a fairly good living, and has had something left with which to buy literature; furthermore, his place of business has been a bureau of information, particularly in the line of politics, and has had a good following in those who came in to kill time. There was a time when a skilled workman received medals and honors of various kinds for a high quality of workmanship, using the best material; then the competition was in seeing who could produce the best. Today this competition is on a different basis—to see how greater price can be produced by using the cheapest materials and get the greatest production in the least time; hence we have few or no shoes that are manufactured, but shoes that are machine-made. A competent worker knows his business from beginning to end, and is justly a shoemaker. The only opportunity now left a thorough shoemaker is to become a sixty-second part of a shoemaker, or a feeder on a machine that makes shoes. Thus the shoemaker has seen his trade ruined and can only see his salvation out from wage slavery through Socialism. There is no chance for a workman to compete with capitalism, for it requires millions of dollars instead of a few hand tools, as was the case a few years back. The shoes are now made for profit instead of for wear and comfort.

The greater part of the shoes made today consist of shoddy, such as paper counters and heels with vamps cut short. The upper leather is glazed, enameled; creased, pressed and pebbled. The upper leather made from one ordinary cow hide will appear in the market under twenty or more different false names, some of which are the following: Grain, kip, calf, seal, goat, kangaroo, with numerous prefixes and affixes.

Is it, then, any wonder that shoemakers, as a class, have had the advantage of others in discerning the deceit practiced under a capitalistic system of commercialism? The shoemakers are heartily sick of the system which has ruined their trade and compelled them to participate in making an inferior product from that made by them with the old hand tools for a bare existence. This would not be the case if the machinery were operated by the community, for then the best material would be used and the shoes would be made for wear and comfort, and not for profit. The same will apply to all branches of industry; therefore, if you would like all things which you are consuming pure, wholesome and durable, become a Socialist. Wake up! Follow the leaders who proclaim the dawn of the new day, when no man shall live upon the sweat and toil of others or by rent, profit or fraud, but where every man shall have what he produces, and not, as now, only a small portion which comes to him in the shape of a wage. In view of the experiences of shoemakers and their honest belief that salvation can only come to the human race through unity at the polls, consequently they have identified themselves with the Social Democratic party in a class-conscious movement.

Down with the classes!
Up with the masses!
Defeat to the traitor
That money can buy.

This has been the battle cry in both Haverhill and Brockton, and has surely been a winner. May the same battle cry be heard in every city and town until there is no more talk of the classes and masses, but of the common welfare of the human race.

Karl W. Leaf.

ANOTHER VIEW OF GOEBEL

Editor of The Herald: The article of Comrade James Allman in your issue of Feb. 24 moves me to say a few words with reference to the assassination of Goebel.

From the proletariat point of view, it is a great error to conclude that Wm. Goebel was an enemy to any corporation. He did not question their right of exploitation of the people, although as a matter of political tactics he did publicly object to their having certain special privileges—at least without his consent. As a member of the bar, and having had a few cases in Covington (Goebel's home) I am somewhat familiar with Goebel's "opposition" to the capitalistic class.

While the assassination must meet with the severest condemnation, on every hand, yet Goebel was himself responsible for the conditions which caused it, just as he was responsible for the conditions which resulted in his killing Banker Sanford. Sanford may have drawn his weapon first, but Goebel's merciless abuse drove him to desperation.

As a Socialist, I do not believe in attacking individuals, realizing that they are but the creatures of their environments, but it is sometimes necessary to the explanation of circumstances.

Goebel was a most capable, cold-blooded, mercenary, political bully, who was never known to smile. His method of accomplishing his end was by force and chicanery. At the moment he was shot he was accompanied by the two most notorious duellists and bullies in the state of Kentucky—Jack Chinn and Eph Lilliard—for several years his principal henchmen in state politics.

Goebel was the czar of Kenton county politics and the most powerful leader in state politics, and herein lies the solution to his "capitalist opposition." He bled the corporations.

All legislation in the state, and particularly in Kenton county, required his indorsement.

Furthermore, his ability to get enormous judgments against corporations was recognized, and hence nearly all the damage suits filed in Kenton county for several years were filed through him. The judges of the bench were practically his appointees, and the "hangers-on" of the courts, some of whom always got on the juries, were his ward-healers. Is it any wonder that corporate greed chafed under his regime, and connived for his downfall? This seeming opposition to corporations made many friends for Goebel among the common people, but he was not fighting their battle. The class-conscious Socialist will not allow these events in capitalist politics to confuse him, knowing as he does that that fight does not concern him, but is merely a fight over the division of spoils fleeced from the working class.

Goebel was not the advocate of any principle the operation of which would directly facilitate the emancipation of the working class.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

Human vivisection.

I have just received a dainty, perfumed request from a society in Boston to fill out an inclosed petition against the practice of vivisection in the state. It is in furtherance of a dignified attempt made by "culchah" to save the poor "dawg."

It's well enough in its way. The dogs deserve our help, no doubt, against the barbarities practiced on them by the students of science. There is much unnecessary pain inflicted on animals in this study, and our fellow-brutes deserve our assistance.

But good heavens! have these people time to waste on cats and dogs when a process of human vivisection is going on? What right have they to use their human energies to abolish brute wrongs when their human fellows are undergoing a process equally painful and unnecessary?

I say that this competitive life is pure, cold-blooded vivisection. By its infamous methods the poor are being literally torn to pieces and flayed alive.

In factories where wheels whirl, and where greed refuses to put up barriers of safety, the workers are daily caught, crushed and flung out, a mass of bloody jelly.

In sweatshops where women and babes toil from dawn to dim, from birth to death, their lives are crushed out with greater and more prolonged torture than any dog suffers under the vivisectioning knife.

In homes, so called, where haggard women dread the wakening hunger of their babes, and await the slow step of the husbands whose bread-winning services society rejects, there are human hearts crushed, broken, torn out with a cruelty no doctor, however savage or calloused, would think of inflicting on a brute.

And yet, in spite of it all, these gloved reformers applaud sentiments of republican prosperity, vote for puppets and plead for pups!

When we have stayed the social knife that cleaves homes, hearts and happiness in pieces, we may perhaps assist our four-legged brethren. At present we will use our energy for the relief of bipeds.

Heathendom here.

Not long ago I heard a minister—one of that class who go out to heathendom for a six months' jaunt, and then spend the next twenty-five years as ecclesiastical tramps, or, as they are generally called, "returned" missionaries—describe in harrowing phrases the condition of the poor benighted heathen, who never read the bible nor said grace before they indulged in a cannibal feast.

He pictured the various acts of heathenish barbarity practiced by the un-Christian race, and pleaded pathetically for his hearers' co-operation and cash—mostly cash—in order that the heathen might receive the blessed gospel whose tenets are so comforting to McKinley, Rockefeller and Russell Sage.

As he drew one vivid picture after another of heathendom there came up in my mind a parallel to each in so-called civilization. We in our own way are guilty of deeds just as evil, but we have acquired the art of gilding the brass of barbarism with the gold plate of civilization.

There is not a deed of cruelty, of superstitious folly, of selfish injustice, that is not duplicated in present-day civilization. Tear off the cloak of religion and refinement and you find the savage.

Slaying our babes.

Women, we are told, used to unclasp their babes' clinging arms from their necks and fling them screaming into the jaws of crocodiles in the Ganges. We shudder with horror, and do the same thing.

Every one who is aiding to perpetuate, by influence or vote, our present system of competitive life, is consigning his or her children to a cursed fate. Every parent who conservatively continues and religiously worships the river of wealth, is literally flinging his children to the crocodiles of capital.

The thousands of suicides who last year cast away their lives had parents who a generation ago voted to sustain the system that has slain their offspring. They were "good, patriotic citizens," most of them, who believed that competition was the life of trade, and who never foresaw that it would be the death of the trader.

What chance have our children to win success unless we aid in making social conditions more conducive to health and happiness? How dare a man face his children who is making no attempt to rid the path of industrial life from the pitfalls that are proving the death of so many now?

The thousands of prostitutes in our cities today had parents who believed in things as they were, and are, never dreaming that their conservatism helped to fling their daughters into the stream

WE ARE COMING, GREAT JEHOVAH

A LABOR ANTHEM

BY H. S. GENEVRA LAKE

We are coming, great Jehovah, thou who makest stars and years;
We are coming from the lowlands of the Earth with all its tears;
We are coming with our cypress for the sins that we have done;
We are coming, great Jehovah, with our faces towards the sun.

We are coming from the darkness, we are moving toward the light;
We have toiled too long for nothing, we have strayed away from right;
We have lain in meek submission, we have crouched, and cried, and prayed;
We are coming now from darkness, with our spirits undismayed.

We are coming, great Jehovah, as the slime comes from the sea;
We shall toil no more for tyrants, who pretend 'tis toil for thee;
For the God of all the planets needs no sacrifice from man;
We can see with clearer vision in the great eternal plan.

We are banner bearers, only, of the truth that all are free,

For the toil of loving service in "the bonds of liberty";
And the one who would have comfort must of comfort ever give;
We are coming great Jehovah, and declare our right to live.

We shall live as freemen, truly, with our passions curbed to peace;
We shall scatter and shall gather, and shall share the earth's increase;
Oh, we shout with solemn gladness as the squadrons march and form;
"We can see the sun is rising through the blinding mist and storm."

We are coming, great Jehovah, as the shipwrecked from the sea;
We will climb the rigging Progress, and survey the life to be;
We are coming, oh, we're coming, with our leader true and tried,
In the Commonwealth of Justice to forevermore abide.

Chorus:—
We are coming, oh, we're coming, with our leader true and tried,
In the Commonwealth of Justice to forevermore abide.

of vice. They dreamed of heaven and voted for hell!

The American juggernaut.

Again, we read of the car of juggernaut, under whose ponderous wheels the religious fanatics flung themselves, to be crushed to death.

No one can question the suicidal character of such acts. No one will think them either wise or sane. And yet we have in our own country scenes almost identically similar.

Do you remember the crowds of workmen who in 1896 used to tear up the turf on a Canton lawn and made the air hideous with their patriotic yells? Do you remember how workmen cast their votes for the presidential idol of the idolatrous jingo, thinking thereby to gain the favor of the gods of fortune?

What has come of it all? Have the gods smiled on them? Have their sacrifices been rewarded?

Or have not the wheels of industry, on which the republican god rested, rolled on and over them?

Every workman who is urged on into patriotic fervor by the subsidized press, and is made to vote for a capitalistic party under the guise of loyalty to a flag-fetich, and is afterward robbed by the party for whom he voted, is in precisely the same condition as the heathen devotee, who, spurred by the priesthood, flung himself under the wheels of juggernaut.

A republican workman is a social suicide.

The aged poor.

Not very long ago certain tribes of pagan Canadian Indians practiced the custom of killing all those of the tribe who by reason of age or infirmity were unfitted for work or war. When it was decided that a man had outlived his usefulness he was quickly put out of the way.

Sometimes I think we have not greatly improved upon the expeditious method of the Indians. Contrasting it with the treatment accorded the old poor now, it seems to resolve itself into a question of speed only.

It is a commonly accepted fact today that the old have less and less chance to procure employment. Tendency of industry is to discriminate, constantly and increasingly, in favor of the young and against the old.

I have seen on the streets of Boston, times without number, old women with scrawny and bruised fingers, clawing over the contents of the refuse barrels on the sidewalk.

I have seen, in poorhouses, the aged poor herded with the insane, spending the remainder of what in many cases have been useful lives in the company of fools and imbeciles.

Better would it be, and more humane, to shoot them down by a charitable bullet, and give them at least the blessing of oblivion. Better still to give them, under Socialism, their rights and reward.

MUSINGS IN MY LEISURE HOUR

Among the charming Rubayat of the Persian astronomer-poet Omar Khayyam there is a quatrain which, in Fitzgerald's masterly translation, reads as follows:

"Whether at Naishapur or Babylon,
Whether the cup with sweet or bitter run,
Life's wine is oozing drop by drop,
Life's leaves are falling one by one."

Ever since the 7th day of last month those lines, which for a number of years have lain dormant in my almost overburdened memory, have risen ghost-like in my mind, stalking there by night and day, now and then disappearing for a moment, only the more impressively to mark their reappearance and to persecute me by their presence.

There they were, do what I might. In vain I sought refuge from them in the truth of Dickens' pages, and in the fiction of the newspaper columns; in vain I tried to find a means of escape by studying the gentle ways of the rude Boers, and the poetical brutality of the polished Kipling; in vain I busied myself in figuring out the income of Carnegie, and the outcome of triumphant plutocracy. All in vain. Everywhere and in everything I seemed to see nothing but "Life's oozing wine," or "Life's falling leaves," just as if the structure founded on greed and propped up by crime which we call human society contained no other real living fact but grim, ghastly death.

Now, I am not generally given to gloomy contemplation of incurable ills, but as from time to time one or the other of the great intellectual leaders of our movement disappears from the surface, I seem to drop into a mood such as the one alluded to, and then there is, for a while at least, nothing but visions of what the Scandinavian saga calls the ride of the heroes to Valhalla.

It was on the 7th of last month that a message was cabled here from Paris, France, that Peter Lavroff, the grand old Russian, had ceased to exist. He was, among the prominent European Socialists, the fifth that had departed since I crossed the ocean some five years ago. The first to go was Frederick Engels, the last glorious ovation in whose honor I was privileged to witness at the close of the Zurich (Switzerland) international Socialist congress, in August, 1893. Then went the heroic, never-to-be-forgotten Stepniak, a man whom you would have thought incapable of taking the life of a fly, and who did not flinch nor falter when he was called upon to destroy one of the fiercest and most bloodthirsty of the Russian tyrant's henchmen. The next to go was he whom many English-speaking generations to come will delight to honor under the name of William Morris. A year or so later we all mourned the irreparable loss of Eleanor Marx, the lady who not only glorified in being the bearer of the most revered name in the history of Socialism, but who for many years acted the part of interpreter among all the civilized nations participating in the struggle for the regeneration of the human race. And now it was Lavroff's turn to go.

Twenty-one years ago, when in the course of my peregrinations I arrived at Paris, and spent there the hungriest but nevertheless the happiest half-year of my life, I, in common with many other young fellows, sat at the feet of the Socialist Gambiell, then already an old man. Everybody felt a better, nobler, braver person for being in his company, and as we listened to his earnest, instructive and withal unpretentious talk, we felt as if the grand future of mankind were almost within our grasp.

All around the outlook was gloomy and disheartening. France was still bleeding after the wounds which the brutes who vanquished the commune had inflicted on her very heart—on Paris. Germany, where the anti-Socialist law had a short time ago come into force, was one tremendous jail. Russia was daily witnessing the slaughter of her most heroic children. Austria was fast asleep, Italy was in chains and Switzerland looked like giving up her freedom, her past and her ghost. England was of course what she has always been, but not what she ought to have been: Shelley was still dead to her, while Morris was as yet but "the idle singer of an empty day." Everything looked dismal and dreary wherever you turned, but you had only to contemplate the grand, serene, loving old face of Peter Lavroff, and there was light and faith and hope and gladness.

And now he is gone. Our French comrades have honored themselves by giving him an honorable escort to his last place of refuge, where tyranny will not torment him any more. We will follow in his footsteps until our business in life shall be over and done.

SOCIAL MORALITY

It is only by comparison with the straight that we recognize what is crooked, and a comparison of society as it is with society as it ought to be reveals clearly the crookedness, the iniquity, the immorality of our present social state. Herbert Spencer, in his "Data of Ethics," in which he seeks to find a scientific basis for morals, sets up a standard of individual, parental and social conduct which is difficult to surpass. That kind of individual conduct is good or moral, he says, which preserves the life of the individual for the longest possible period and at the same time insures the broadest life, the widest range of healthful and pleasurable activities, the fullest development of all his faculties. This is self-preservation, the first law of nature. And the second law is like unto it, being the preservation of offspring. That kind of parental conduct is good which best takes care of the young and develops, equips and prepares them in youth to follow out the individual ideal of a long, broad and complete life.

Next we come to social morality. That kind of social conduct is good or moral which enables a man to live up to the two former standards, to secure for himself and his offspring the longest and most complete life without at the same time interfering with the equal right of every other to do the same for himself and his offspring.

No one can fail to realize the beauty and the justice of this ideal of conduct, nor can any one fail to realize the absolute impossibility of its attainment under the present system.

The working classes exist under such conditions of overwork, lack of nourishment and improper sanitation, that they cannot live out one-half of their allotted three score years and ten. The average length of life among them is only 27 years, while among the professional and leisure class it is 55 years. And as for breadth of life, one has only to look into the vacant faces, the barren lives of ceaseless toil and grinding poverty of the millions in the city slums, the mines and factories, to be overwhelmed with a sense of how woefully short they fall of reaching the individual ideal.

Then how about the parental ideal? The crime that capitalism is perpetrating from day to day against the children is appalling. It is not the fault of the individual parents. They cannot do otherwise under the capitalist system, poor victims! Instead of caring for the children and fully equipping them for after life, we let 500,000 of them die in infancy, and mostly from preventable diseases—mostly from lack of proper care, of pure air and nourishing food. They work in soap and hemp factories till they become blind for a miserable 35 cents to $1.15 per day. They work in cotton bleacheries till their skin is whiter than the cloth they bleach. The statistics of the Massachusetts bureau of labor show that the average workman in this state has to depend upon his children for two-fifths of his family's income. Instead of the parents following nature's second law and providing amply for their children, the children in their tender years are forced into the factories and mills to help support their parents.

But it is our social conduct that is the most atrocious and immoral, because it is the foundation and the cause of all the rest. Bear in mind that our social ideal demands that the welfare of each individual and of his children shall be sought, without interfering with the equal right of every other person. Now, I say that our whole industrial system is based directly and fundamentally upon interference with the equal rights of others to support themselves and their families out of the natural fertility of the earth, and by means of the machinery of wealth production which are the result of the labor and inventive genius of all the generations of workers past and present.

From the individualistic beginning the race has been climbing onward and upward toward the ideal of moral social conduct, and today the capitalist system stands directly in the way of its further progress. It is a moral necessity, as well as an economic one, that this barrier to human progress should be swept away, and that an industrial system be instituted which shall enable the race to go forward to a realization of the social ideal of mutual helpfulness in attaining the longest, broadest, fullest and most complete life for every human being that is born upon the earth.

CALL TO ACTION

ORGANIZE FOR 1900

There are few communities in this country today without one to a dozen Socialists who are not affiliated with the Social Democratic Party. At the last State election in Missouri votes were cast for the candidates of the Social Democratic Party in nearly every county in the State.

In almost every community a thoroughly wide-awake and earnest Socialist, with little exertion, could in one week effect the organization of a Branch of the Social Democratic Party.

WHAT THEY CAN DO
The Declaration of Principles and Political Demands of this party will be found in this paper; read it and you will see that the party is a straight, uncompromising Socialist organization, recognized as such in the International movement for Socialism.

DEMOCRATIC ORGANIZATION
The triumph of the Socialist cause, which is the cause of the world democracy, requires organization, and without it nothing can be accomplished; this party is controlled by no individual nor by any set of individuals short of its entire membership through the referendum.

THIS YEAR'S CAMPAIGN
The year 1900 will be one of great and far-reaching importance to the people and especially to the United States; the latter have wealth-producing people of the United States; the latter have the future of any longer giving support to capitalist parties.

ORGANIZE WHERE YOU LIVE
Socialists should have as their main object in 1900 the polling of every vote possible for straight and uncompromising Socialism, and to do this the Social Democratic Party of every attached Socialist in the work of organization, where he lives, is necessary.

HOW ORGANIZED
The Social Democratic Party is now organized in more than half the States; it consists of Local Branches, State Unions and a National Council. A Local Branch may be organized with five members. It will nominate candidates for President and Vice-President next March.

SEND FOR INSTRUCTIONS
Full instructions and all necessary supplies for organizing Local Branches may be obtained from the National Secretary, Theodore Debs, 136 Washington St., Chicago, Illinois.

MAHON IS OUT FOR DEBS

SPEAKS FROM SAME PLATFORM WITH OUR PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE AT BELLEVILLE, ILL.

When the Central Labor union of Belleville, Ill., engaged Eugene V. Debs for a lecture in that city on March 13 they did not know they were going to have the pleasure of listening to a presidential candidate. The occasion turned out to be a very excellent beginning of the campaign. The opera house was literally packed with people. Over 2,000 were present. A delegation of Social Democrats from St. Louis went over on the electric line and arrived just in time to join in the street parade. The delegation carried the Social Democratic banner and a large sign bearing a picture of Debs, with the words "For President" beneath. Both of these banners were placed on the stage after the parade was over.

In spite of the suffocating atmosphere the audience listened to the orator's words with great attention. There was none of the reckless hurrah-for-my-side applause which always characterizes the meetings of old-party candidates. The audience applauded freely and enthusiastically, but intelligently. That the great mass of workmen present were thinking—thinking as they had never thought before—could readily be discerned by watching the expression of their eager faces. The number of young men present was surprising, and it is safe to assume that most of them went home with the truths of Socialism firmly impressed on their minds. For two hours the speaker held the attention of the people and preached the doctrines of the cause he loves so well.

Then occurred an incident which is well worth noting as being indicative of the camp in which the trades unions of America will be found before the coming campaign is closed. After Comrade Debs had concluded his address the chairman called upon W. D. Mahon, national president of the Amalgamated Association of Street-Railway Employees of America, who happened to be present, to address the meeting. Mr. Mahon, in a short, forcible speech, declared that he endorsed every utterance of the previous speaker. He thought that the trades unions were paving the way for a higher step, and that they would be found supporting a working-class party in the near future. He urged the workmen to think for themselves, and wound up by saying: "If you do you will vote for Eugene V. Debs." At these words there arose from the audience one long, unanimous cheer that seemed to come from the very souls of the weary toilers who were crowded into the house. It seemed, indeed, as though some magic hand had for a moment pushed ajar the gates of the co-operative commonwealth and allowed the assembled proletarians to catch a glimpse of the future in store for them.

When election day rolls around and the votes have been counted, the city of Belleville will have done her duty to the wage-working class and have paid her compliments to our candidate with a handsome vote.

Eugene V. Brewster of New York has decided to quit Bryan, become a Social Democrat and support Debs and Harriman. In an interview last Saturday he said:

"I can see no hope of ever obtaining any permanent reform through the democratic party, however radical be its platform. Both of the old parties are fast rotting away with corruption, and, even after 1896, I see the vast and beautiful organization of the democratic party controlled at almost every point by a human hyena grimly waiting for plunder. There must be a new party, and I am not sure that that party is not the one just formed by the two Socialistic factions and headed by Eugene V. Debs."

Brewster says, further, that Bryan's defeat is certain, and will be accomplished by his own party.

During our convention last week Dr. Lyman Abbott lectured in Brooklyn on "Industrial Democracy" to an audience of workmen. From the newspaper reports of his remarks we take the following:

"I assume that the common people ought to control in industry as in politics. That we don't do that now is apparent. We elect governors, but not railroad kings; we elect municipal assemblies, but not those who control factories and mines. I have nothing to say against those who do control, but I am merely pointing out the fact that we can turn out presidents and governors, but if we think a railroad owner is not working for the public good we can't turn him out peaceably. Our political system is a democracy, but our industrial system is an oligarchy. We ought to carry the same principles into industry as into politics."

"This, then, is the radical object which we reformers ought to keep in mind—Social Democracy. That means that the railroads should be controlled and owned by the common people, that the factories and mines should be theirs, that they should own the tools with which they work. It means the diffusion of wealth. It means the employment of capital by labor, instead of labor by capital. It is a radical idea, but we need radical ideas. It is not a hopeless idea, either."

SKETCHES OF CANDIDATES

HOOSIERDOM FURNISHES BOTH STANDARD BEARERS OF THE SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Eugene Victor Debs was born in Terre Haute, Ind., in the autumn of 1855, and at the age of 15 years began his work as a railway employee in the Vandalia car shops. Soon afterward he obtained a position as fireman on a freight engine, in which capacity he served some years, and soon attracted attention in the councils of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of which he had become a member. He was 22 years old when that organization made him editor of its magazine, and from that day forward he has been unable to escape for a moment the exacting cares of leadership. Quickly following this entrance to official life he was made general secretary and treasurer of the organization, and saw it grow rapidly from infancy to national proportions. In this position he was custodian of literally millions of dollars of organization funds.

In 1892 Mr. Debs founded the American Railway union, which was the first organization in the railway world to admit to membership every employee, from the section man and engine-wiper to the conductor and engineer. Its central idea was complete and universal organization. Under his guiding hand it speedily reached colossal proportions. Its first great strike was called on the Great Northern railway. The road was successfully tied up from St. Paul to the Pacific ocean and the company forced to restore the wages of all employees, amounting in the aggregate to many thousands of dollars a month.

Scarcely was the Great Northern railway case out of the way than the Pullman strike claimed attention. Thoroughly alarmed at the invincible strength of the new union built on the "universal brotherhood" plan, the General Managers' association resolved to force a general fight with the hope of crushing it in its infancy. The organization was less than one year old when the general managers began the assault. Employees were discharged simply for holding membership in the American Railway union. The Pullman trouble was brewing at the same time, and Pullman's employees, who were members of the organization, had their wages cut fully 50 per cent. The public was led to believe that Mr. Debs could have avoided the Pullman strike, and that he deliberately plunged into it. This, of course, was not true. He clearly understood the scope of the conspiracy against the life of the organization and knew the struggle could not be avoided. The Pullman matter was the most flagrant wrong at hand, and he took it up first, offered to submit the question to arbitration, and meeting with an emphatic refusal, ordered the members of the union to handle no Pullman cars. The battle was on, and within two days scarcely a car of any description was moving between the Mississippi valley and the Pacific coast. Within a short time the commerce of the nation was practically paralyzed.

So long as the general managers fought fairly and proceeded as in all other strikes they were completely out-generated. Finally realizing this they appealed to the courts and found one willing to ignore the rights of man as guaranteed by the constitution of the nation and issued an edict suspending the freedom of speech. Mr. Debs was forbidden to send messages, letters or telegrams from headquarters to the members. This meant just what it would mean if a general on the battlefield was deprived of the right to speak or write. Of course he refused to submit, and within a few days Mr. Debs and his lieutenants were behind the prison bars. Released later, when the strike was dead, there followed a long and hard-fought legal battle to test the new principles sought to be established, but the United States Supreme court dodged the real question at issue.

In 1892, when Mr. Debs resigned his positions in the Firemen's Brotherhood, he was receiving $4,000 per year. The convention of over 400 delegates by unanimous vote refused to accept his resignation, and offered him any salary he might name. When it was found he could not be induced to change his mind, the convention by acclamation voted him a gift of $2,000, with which to go to Europe and recuperate his somewhat broken health. This he declined. On January 1, 1897, Debs issued a circular to the members of the A. R. U., entitled "Present Conditions and Future Duties," in which he reviewed the political, industrial and economic conditions, and came out boldly for Socialism. When the A. R. U. met in national convention in Chicago, in June, 1897, that body was merged into the Social Democracy of America, which organization was perfected on June 21, 1897, with Mr. Debs as chairman of the national executive board, to which he devoted his means, energy and splendid talents. After the split at Chicago in 1898, Mr. Debs was made a member of the national executive board of the Social Democratic party, a position he still fills.

Job Harriman was born on January 15, 1861, in Clinton county, Indiana. His people were farmers, and he remained on the farm until he was 18 years of age. He then went to Butler university, at Irvington, where he graduated. He went into the ministry, but his views soon became changed, so that he could not conscientiously continue in the church. He then took up the practice of law.

He was brought up as a democrat, but became dissatisfied and did not vote at all after 1887 until 1890, when he became interested in Socialism. At this time he was living in San Francisco. For the next five years he was more or less active in the Socialist movement there.

In 1895 he removed to Los Angeles and immediately entered the work there, where he has been an active agitator ever since. In 1898 he was the S. L. P. candidate for governor and made an energetic campaign, polling 5,600 votes.

In the beginning of 1899 he was chosen as state organizer, and put in the whole year in propaganda work throughout the state.

DEBS' SPEECH OF ACCEPTANCE

Mr. Chairman and Comrades: A few moments ago your committee advised me of the great honor conferred upon me by this convention in making me one of the standard-bearers of the party in the great campaign upon which we are now entering. Never in all of my life was I so profoundly impressed with the conviction that there is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will. Yesterday I left this hall under the solemn belief that I could not, under any possible circumstances, accept the nomination tendered me with such enthusiastic unanimity. But with your united voices ringing in my ear, and your impassioned appeals burning and glowing in my breast, and your eyes searching the very depths of my soul, I was soon brought to realize that in your voice in behalf of Socialism there was the supreme command of Duty—that I could not disregard it and decline the nomination without proving myself wholly unworthy of the confidence which inspired it. I felt that I could not decline this nomination, tendered me under such circumstances, without being guilty of treason to the cause we all love so well; and so I come to you this afternoon, obedient to the call voiced by your committee, to say that I accept your nomination, and with it all of the responsibilities that the great trust imposes; and with my heart trembling upon my lips, I thank the comrades, one and all, for the great honor you have conferred upon me. I also thank you for having nominated as my associate and colleague so true a Socialist, so manly a man as Comrade Job Harriman, and let me assure you that we will stand together, side by side, in the true spirit of Socialism, and joining hands, will bear aloft the conquering banner of the Social Democratic party of America. The ordeal through which we passed yesterday was indeed painful and trying to us, but perhaps it was necessary to completely consecrate us to our great task. Standing in your presence this afternoon the standard-bearer of a united socialist party, so long a cherished hope and now practically a realized fact, all the skies of the future are bright, and I do not hesitate to believe that in the great campaign upon which we are now entering that we are to achieve results that will mark the real beginning of Socialism in America, as also the real end of capitalism. The line is to be sharply drawn. The issue is to be clearly understood. We are to move forward side by side, a united party, a solid indivisible phalanx. We are to move forward with steady step, our eyes upon the goal. No backward step is to be taken. We are not to be deflected from our course the breadth of a hair; and in the first battle, whatever the outcome, a great victory will have to be achieved to be followed by others, until at last Socialism is triumphant in the United States, capitalism falls never to rise again, and the working class, bruised, degraded, and plundered through all of the centuries of the past, for the first time in the history of all the ages will stand forth redeemed, and disenthralled, the coronated sovereigns of this world.

I congratulate my comrades, one and all, upon the very happy outcome of this historic convention. I were less than just to myself if I failed to make some proper acknowledgment of the invaluable services rendered us by the committee representing the Socialist Labor Party. During the trying hours of yesterday I was more than impressed with their noble bearing, with their manly conduct. They appeared before us in the spirit of Socialism. Fortunately for you and me, and for the party, they were met with the same spirit; and now, instead of being in hostile camps, with divided forces, we stand before the world in a united body that is to move forward until it wrests this government from the grasp of capitalism and restores it to the people at large. Comrades, we invoke your united aid and co-operation. We should be remiss in no single obligation that has been imposed upon us. We shall to the extent of our ability serve you and those you represent in this great cause. There is no mistake as to the ultimate outcome. Speaking for myself, I am not only hopeful, I am confident. The new crusade is now thoroughly organized, and when the message goes forth it will send joy and hope and enthusiasm to the heart of every Socialist in the land.

Allow me to say, in closing, that I am deeply sensible of the great honor that you have conferred upon me—that when I attempt to express the gratitude with which my heart is overflowing, all language is meaningless. I am proud to be a Socialist. I believe with all my heart in the conquering and emancipating power of Socialism. With me it is something more than a conviction. It throbs in my heart; it surges in my soul; it is my very life. Without it, every star that blazes on the horizon would go out forever. Without it, this earth were simply a jungle, and we wild beasts devouring each other. With it, this earth becomes transformed into a veritable paradise, and we are almost gods. Again and again I thank you. All hail to the united Socialists of America!

The St. Louis Republic of March 14, in reprinting part of Sheldon's edition of the Topeka Capital, selected half a column of Comrade Leonard D. Abbott's article on Socialism and the S. D. P. Abbott's article has been in type for The Herald for three weeks; it appears in this number.

PRESS NOTES AND COMMENTS

Memphis Commercial-Appeal: "Eugene V. Debs will lead the presidential ticket of the Social Democrats this year, and Eugene will wake the echoes. He is a plausible talker and one who is very effective with the masses."

Very true; and the united testimony of the southern press is that there is not one more popular with the masses.

Buffalo Express: "There is an element of the populists that can never be counted upon to return to the democratic fold. The most radical members of the populist organization have been tending to straightforward Socialism. They will be attracted by the programme of the Social Democrats. The latter will draw to them a not inconsiderable body of voters throughout the country."

The drawing quality of the Social Democratic party has already manifested itself in Kansas, where populism has shown its greatest vitality. One of the surprises of the campaign will be the straight Socialist vote in Kansas.

New York Tribune: "So far as the United States is concerned, we should be glad to see war abolished. But we should also like to hear Mr. Debs and his fellow Social Democrats explain how it is to be done. 'You may rezoloot till the cows come home,' but how are you going to keep other nations from making war upon you?"

Social Democrats, as the editor of the Tribune may learn if he will take the trouble to inform himself, are really quite practical people. They understand that militarism and war are necessary to capitalist exploitation. Nations are forced to make war upon each other by and in the interest of the capitalist class. Therefore Social Democrats throughout the world stand for the abolition of capitalist production and distribution of wealth, and thereby the abolition of war and military establishments.

Baltimore American: "The Social Democrats, in session at Indianapolis, salute one another as 'Comrades.' Comrades in what—pessimistic rumination?"

Oh, no; put your ear to the ground, man! We are comrades in the most optimistic movement of the century. It is a movement with optimism as its mainspring. For that reason look out for it.

FIGHT FOR A PRINCIPLE

From the beginning of the glorious campaign to be made by the united Socialists this year, let it be understood that we are in the political arena for a principle. We are neither Debsites nor Harrimanites, but Social Democrats, affirming and firmly believing in the ultimate supremacy of the collectivist principle in industry and the industrial democracy wherein the robbery of the working class ceases and justice and comradeship is established in the earth.

The men chosen as our standard bearers were chosen not because they are cunning and ambitious men, desiring public office as a stepping-stone to self-aggrandizement, but rather because both have stood unflinchingly for the great cause of the working class and the principle which unites us as a party in a class struggle against the united and legally-intrenched capitalist class, for the overthrow of industrial exploitation and the establishment of economic freedom.

The hired guerrillas of the capitalist press may be expected this year to resort to every trick known to low calumny to serve their masters, but their attacks will in no way affect the reputation and character of the men who, in this new century conflict, stand for the emancipation of the working class from the shackles of capitalism. The people of this country have been learning that the representations made of Socialists and Socialism by the capitalist press are false creations proceeding from capitalist-owned brains. Their flippant jibes and prodigious lies will have no effect on the thorough-going, earnest Social Democrat, and the thinking public generally ceased long ago to regard with seriousness any utterance of the average daily newspaper designed to prop up or defend the prevailing system of industry. The Socialist movement in this country has outgrown the power of any capitalist editor or editors to hinder or molest it. The people are fast coming to see in it, not a fad, but a fact; not a thing to be avoided, but a historic cause to be aided and fostered.

Towards Socialism the thoughts of men are changing as never before and those who are informed find amusement in the first lie started by the pressmen of capitalism, viz., "that Debs has organized a party of his own and got himself nominated for president." The vulgarity of the thing is worthy of its vulgar origin. There is no truth in it. The Social Democratic party was organized when Debs was a sick man, confined to his room, unable to organize a party and with no ambition save to serve as a member of the party and an advocate of its principles when his strength returned. This ambition he has indulged with such telling effect in the past eighteen months, lecturing to larger audiences than any man living and winning the heads and the hearts of the people for Socialism, that his name at the head of a Socialist ticket for president means the beginning of a political revolution to match the industrial revolution, and this it is that the capitalist class fears.

Hurray for Social Democracy and its chosen standard bearers, Debs and Harriman!

WORKING CLASS OPPORTUNITY

Fellow workmen: For the first time in our history we have the opportunity of voting for one of our own great leaders for president. We are going to walk up like men and do our duty next November, are we not? "Oh, well, there are arguments on the other side, you know!"

First. We are so used to voting for lawyers. We think only these paid retainers of the capitalist class are trained to guide the ship of state. If any one save a lawyer were at the helm she might ground on the rocks. Yes, the lawyers are trained—to skin us!

Second. The clergy and the other authorities (?) on morals are going to tell us that a vote for Socialism is a vote for confiscation. In the same way they defended slavery, claiming that to destroy property in human flesh and blood was confiscation.

Third. The newspapers are going to poke fun at us. They are going to make cartoons of our leader and malign his character. And we still support the capitalist press while that of our own class goes starving. We have not learned that the first step toward wisdom is to cast aside as authority the wretched, partisan daily sheets of our time.

Fourth. We have some prosperity now, and it would be such a pity to spoil it. We have jobs, it may be. We get back only one-fifth of what we produce, but we have jobs. Of course, it takes a high-power microscope to detect the difference between modern prosperity and a modern panic; but such authoritative microscopists as Mr. Dun and Mr. Bradstreet pronounce the present article prosperity. Anything so harsh as a vote for a labor leader might frighten it away. Prosperity is very shy!

Fifth. We might throw our vote away. We ought to vote for what we don't want and get it, rather than to vote for what we want and fail a time or two. We have been voting for what we don't want and getting it right along for many years, and it is hard to break off an old habit, surely!

Sixth. We have a chance of electing a man who is more friendly to our cause than the other fellow. We have not yet learned that the greatest enemies to our cause are good men who go against us; that the bad fellows can do no harm; that we want them on the other side. We have not yet found out that a good man on the wrong side is most to be feared.

Fellow toilers, in spite of all reasons, we have the opportunity of a lifetime. In these months preceding the one day when we are "voting sovereigns," we ought to be making votes for Debs and Harriman.

NOTES AND COMMENT

The Herald wishes to say to the trades unionists of the United States thus early in the campaign of 1900 that trades unionism in this country is now practically committed to the essential principle for which the Social Democratic party stands; that is, that all the means of production and distribution now owned and exploited by the capitalist class shall become the common property of society at large.

A vote for McKinley will be a vote for the capitalist class; no trades unionist can cast such a vote and be true to the doctrine of trades unionism.

A vote for Bryan (or any other man representing the confused and planless democracy) will be a vote for capitalism—for the middle-class—for an impossible reactionism; no trades unionist can give such a vote and be true to the interests of his own class.

A vote for Debs and Harriman will be a vote for representatives of the working class; every trades unionist in the land can vote the Social Democratic ticket and be true to his class, to the principles of his union and to himself.

Of course the irrepressible humorist of the party, Charlie Martin, had to get in his joke at the convention, and he did it in the following credential, which was posted in the hall:

"O Mr. Debs and all the rest of you: This is to certify that the bearer of this document is known as Jonas Harrison, and that the members of Puckerbrush alliance, located in the state and among the ideas of Mark, which we are trying to change to the ideas of Marx, have duly selected him to represent us as a fraternal delegate in the national convention of the Social Democratic party, called to meet in the capital of Hoosierdom on March 6, 1900, with instructions to root for a union of Socialist forces outside the tribe of Dan.

"Witness our hands and the seal of Puckerbrush alliance on last Saturday.

"John Strong, President.

"Jessie Bright, Secretary."

There has been much said and written in Chicago about short-measure coal. The small dealers, it appears, have sold for a bushel of coal baskets containing less than a bushel, and have done it at prices equal in some cases to $12 and $15 a ton. The people who paid these high prices were, of course, the poor. We have seen nowhere any reference to the fact that the winter has been one of unusual severity for the small dealers, whose sales have been uncommonly small and made as to the ton trade on a close margin. Neither have the mining barons, whose profits are enormous, been taken into account. That the small dealers are forced to give short weight and charge long prices only shows how increasingly difficult it is for the "honest middle trading class" to exist.

Public Ownership (Erie, Pa.) devotes nearly its entire first page to a report of "Debs for President," gives a review of the growth of Socialism and prints the executive board report complete. Editorially it says: "Job Harriman polled 5,000 votes for governor of California on the Socialist ticket in 1898. With Eugene V. Debs he would shake the state."

The die has been cast for 1900. We are to have a straight and uncompromising battle for Socialism. Let it be made of such power and effect that it may always be a source of inspiration for all future campaigns. Trades union workmen, this is the year of opportunity for you to rebuke your enemies and give your friends a splendid support.

The Arbeiter-Zeitung of St. Louis gives nearly eight columns and an editorial to a report of the Indianapolis convention. The familiar features of our candidates, Debs and Harriman, appear on the first page. A very good report for our German friends and comrades to read.

The comrades of Indianapolis, who made arrangements for the convention under the leadership of Hugo Miller, took upon themselves all expenses incident thereto. Their devotion and generosity will be remembered by us all.

Reasons of a personal nature compelled Comrade Farmer of Texas to resign from the committee of nine. He is succeeded by Comrade Lonergan of Connecticut, who received the next highest number of votes.

In issue of March 10 the Sheboygan Volksblatt gives account of the convention.

The People, New York, March 11, gives a report of the first day's proceedings.

The Arbejderen of Chicago reports the convention in its issue of March 8.

WHAT THE "CITIZEN" SAYS

In the Cleveland Citizen for March 17, Editor Max Hayes has the following references to the movement and the candidates:

"The Social Democratic party will urge that its name be accepted by the united movement rather than that a new name be selected, and thus increase the confusion. It is pointed out that no stigma is attached to the title, that it is international in scope, and that it expresses perfectly what the labor movement stands for. The writer believes that the arguments are good ones, and that, if legal difficulties do not stand in the way, the easiest and most satisfactory manner to settle that question is to adopt the name Social Democratic party."

"Eugene V. Debs needs no introduction to our readers. They all know him and love him, not because he is Debs, but the sterling manhood, the splendid ability and his confessions of faith in the noble cause of labor have been put to the test, and he has not been found wanting. From boyhood almost he has been identified with organized labor, and he rose in triumph and went down in defeat with his class, ever holding aloft the flag of the workers struggling for economic freedom. Persecuted by all the powers of capitalism, made the target of the poisoned arrows of envy and malice from ambushed guerrillas, Debs has nevertheless stood firm for the great principles of industrial liberty and social progress."

"Job Harriman is in every way fitted to be Debs' running mate. The dashing Californian, though still a young man, is one of the pioneer Socialists of the Pacific Coast. He leaped into fame when he unhorsed Congressman Maguire in a debate upon single tax and Socialism several years ago, and since then he has labored unceasingly for the upbuilding of the Socialist movement. Mr. Harriman is a Marxian student, a keen logician, and an eloquent orator, and withal warm-hearted and modest to a fault."

A Chicago Drama

A Christian woman in a Christian town of nearly two million inhabitants died last Thursday night of starvation and a lack of medical treatment. Her home was a hovel in an alley. For some years she had been a widow, and had supported herself and child, but when she fell ill this was impossible.

Not one person in all of that two million went to her relief until it was too late. A big-hearted policeman brought her food at the moment her soul was leaving her body, and when there was no longer need of it.

The scene that met his gaze as he entered the room was one that should be depicted to and impressed upon the mind of every man and woman in this town calling himself or herself a Christian.

A 7-year-old boy was kneeling by the bedside, and this is what he was saying: "Oh, please, God, don't let my mamma die. Please get her something to eat so she can live with me."

This happened in Chicago, where millionaires are counted by scores, where the Associated Charities have splendid offices in a magnificent building; where there are relief corps innumerable.

It happened in the fourth year of the reign of William McKinley, when coffers are filled with gold and when the fat land is bursting with prosperity.

How many other like cases are there in Chicago?

Who is responsible for a condition of society where a worthy Christian woman can starve to death in the midst of plenty?

Who is going to remedy it, and how?—Chicago Journal.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

Expensive expansion.

Dr. Jabez Fisher, in an excellent paper on "Dividends versus Brotherhood," read before a Fitchburg audience on March 4, gives a striking illustration of the accumulative power of the dollar.

He figures that if Joseph had invested one dollar, at 6 per cent compound interest, for the benefit of his son Jesus and His future cause, it would have amounted today to a value equal to that of a solid cube of gold measuring 4,600,000,000 miles on each side!

To those of us who have only the occasional privilege of gazing at the small rim of a five-dollar gold piece—through a broker's window—this illustration is well-nigh incomprehensible. To the average workingman gold is as unfamiliar a coin as the haiku-shells of the British Columbia Indians, the cowries of India or the whales' teeth of the Fiji islands.

But it serves to show the enormously expansive power of gold, given to it by the system of profit and interest that we permit and perpetuate. And this same expansive process is going on every day. The capital of the rich is increasing, and as the result the poverty of the poor is increasing, too.

When mammon gains, man loses. When capital gets, labor gives. When the dividends of the rich increase the comforts of the poor decrease. Every private pile of wealth is simply the accumulation of legalized pilferings.

Why are some so poor? Why are others so rich? The same question answers both. By the system of industrial profit and loss, the profit always going to one class and the loss always being borne by the other.

An honest millionaire.

In a religious weekly received yesterday casual reference is made to a certain millionaire. After speaking of his being worth four and a half millions, it stated that it "seems he earned his money honestly."

This is really a significant statement. It implies that the popular idea concerning the dishonesty of millionarism is getting strong enough to be opposed and disputed. And again it implies a doubt, in a quarter where loyalty to wealth is supreme, in the asserted fact of honesty, the man in question only "seeming" to earn his money in an honest way.

The statement made is fallacious. No man can earn a million honestly. He may inherit it. He may steal it. He may find it. But earn it he cannot.

My dictionary defines "earn" as "to gain by labor." No one is foolish enough to suppose that a millionaire, according to this, can rightly use the word.

The word "earn" comes from the Dutch "ernen," to reap, while the original root was "ar," to plough. We today use too often the former definition and forget the latter. We forget that to earn means not only the harvesting, but the plowing as well.

Money has in reality, no expansive power. Plant a dollar, and you expect to dig up a dollar and no more. It has no inherent power to increase of itself.

It is only when labor power is introduced that wealth increases. Capital is but the golden key that unlocks the legal barriers and permits labor to use its energy in the increasing of wealth.

To labor, then, all wealth belongs. In that case, how can a capitalist honestly earn his millions?

One day last year Rockefeller made $8,000,000 in one day by a manipulation of stocks. What fool says he earned it?

Labor's luck box.

A month or so ago a man named Henry Parker advertised a "lucky box" in the Boston papers. He made prodigious claims for his wonderful box, and bolstered his claim by citing case after case where great fortune had followed the purchase of a box.

These boxes were made, he said, in India, by Hindoo magicians, who gave them some mysterious power known only to that occult race. And this marvelous box was offered at the equally marvelous price of 99 cents.

Business boomed. Fools are plenty hereabouts, and most of them got a box. Orders poured in to Parker. Sacks full of mail and money orders were emptied in his office. His office was blockaded by the aspirants to fortune.

By and by the authorities, who are always so blind during a crime and so wide awake after it, put a stop to the thing. They found that the boxes were made by the gross in Lynn, and never got any nearer India than Breed's wharf.

Then the fools found out that it was a lucky box for only one person, and that person had cleared out with his ill-gotten wealth.

Fools? Not a bit more so than the great majority of American workmen. Year after year we have had offered to us, at the price of a vote, the "lucky box" of "prosperity." The competing agents, the "Republican Lucky Box company," and the Democratic ditto, have in turn offered us their wares, with extravagant claims for their magical power.

And the most of us have been deceived. In buying the box we have been sold ourselves. We have given up our votes, year after year, and have gained nothing by it.

Already these two firms are getting out their lucky boxes and painting them over and looking for fine phrases to put on the covers. And already labor fools are getting ready to be taken in by the same old trick.

The real lucky box.

There is a lucky box, however, that has the power to bestow unlimited good fortune on labor. It has the magic power to change every labor slave into a prince of fortune. And that is the ballot box.

The ballot boxes of America are simply the hollow tricks which are used to construct either a palace or a prison for labor. By it we can either vote away our rights, or else secure them. We can make our paths pleasant, or we can make them rough and hellish.

So long as the ballot box is within our reach we can make no reasonable protest against conditions. When we have set a trap and stepped into it, we can blame only ourselves. When we flavor our soup with machine oil we cannot be pitted for having to eat it.

So far we have not availed ourselves of the marvelous merit of the ballot box. We have suffered it to be a dice thrown by competing oppressors. We have permitted its use as a thing for tyrants to juggle with.

Let us begin to use it as the instrument whereby we can mold our own destinies and make our own happiness. Let us make it the avenue through which to make our strong and effective protest against injustice.

Let us straightway begin to tear down the prison and build the palace.

Merlin.

SONG OF THE NEW CENTURY

By Edwin Markham

Striving in the Purpose of the Upper Sphere,
We sweep on to the Century ahead.
But something makes the heart of man forbode,
For Labor is the Sphinx beside the road;
And we must answer its dread Question—yes,
Or perish as the tribes of yesterday.

Thunder and earthquakes crouch beyond the gate;
But fear not: man is greater than his fate.
And one will come with Answer—with a word
Wherein the feet of morning will be heard;
One who will feel the grief in every breast,
The heart-cry of humanity for rest.

So we await the Leader to appear,
Thinker and Doer and Seer.
The hero who will fill the Labor Throne,
And build the Comrade Kingdom, stone by stone—
That Kingdom that is greater than the Dream,
Breaking through ancient vision, gleam by gleam.

Something that Song alone can faintly feel,
And only Song's wild rapture can reveal.
Thrilled by the Cosmic Oneness he will rise,
Youth in his heart and morals in his eyes;
While glory fallen from the far-off goal
Will send mysterious splendor on his soul.
Him shall all toilers know to be their friend;
Him shall they follow faithful to the end.

Though every leaf were a tongue to cry, "Thou must,"
He would not say the unjust thing is just.
He would not all the flattery in his eyes
Shall shake his heart or hush his lyric lips.
His cry of justice, it will stir the stones
From Hell's black granite to the Seraph thrones.

Earth listens for the coming of his feet;
The hushed Fates lean expectant from their seat.
He will be calm and reverent and strong,
And carrying in his thought the dream of song
Will send a cry upon these weary men,
A cry to make the heart grow young again.

A cry to comrades scattered and afar:
"Be constipated, star by circling star;
Give to all mortals justice and forgive—
License must die that Liberty may live.
Let Love shine through the fabric of the state—
Love deathless, Love whose other name is Fate."

Fear not: we cannot fail—
The Vision will prevail.
Truth is the oath of God, and sure and fast,
Through death and Hell holds onward to the last.

THE WOMEN DELEGATES

There were in the convention as delegates Margaret Haile, Corinne Brown, Elizabeth H. Thomas and Mary Simons Johnson. We should be glad to give Herald readers the portrait of each of them, but that being impracticable at this time, we present that of the most active and widely known of their number, whose work for the cause of Social Democracy in Massachusetts has been second to no "man's" work, and who enjoys the confidence and esteem of comrades throughout the country. We refer, of course, to Margaret Haile.

MARGARET HAILE

Comrade Haile, as a member of the committee on constitution, did effective and valuable work for the party. Before returning East, she accepted an invitation to visit Milwaukee, where she met with a cordial reception from comrades who appreciate her great service for the cause in Massachusetts.

CAREY IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

Monday evening March 12, our town hall held the largest audience ever assembled in it to hear a political speaker. Comrade James F. Carey had hurried all the way from Erie, Pa., to fulfill a long-standing engagement. Comrade Manfred Tibbitts first addressed the people on local issues. He was followed by Comrade Carey, who spoke on Socialism in its larger aspect. It was the most interesting and enthusiastic meeting ever known here. It must be borne in mind that the branch here contains but few members, a strike in a shoe factory and labor depression generally having caused many of its most active members to leave town.

Town meeting came the day after the rally just spoken of. The democrats, who had not made a town ticket for years, nominated selectmen, just to help out the republicans, and claimed they would poll 200 straight votes for their ticket. But the result showed that most of them went over to the republicans to make a sure thing against the Social Democrats. Owing to a false report, over thirty Social Democrats in a shoe factory did not get out to vote. The result of the meeting was:

Regular democratic.....46
Social Democratic.....130
Regular republican.....289

Our people had expected to poll 170 to 180 straight votes. But those who know think that to have 130—who, under the most adverse circumstances, will face both bosses of shops and political bosses and vote the Social Democratic ticket—is a big achievement for a branch that numbers no more than ours.

I am instructed to say that all Social Democrats here—and I can say the same for all in our state—most cordially indorse the action of the comrades in laboring for a peaceful union of the two great bodies of working Socialists in America. No greater boon can come to us at this time than this fraternal union.

THE PARIS COMMUNE OF 1871

Address by E. Val. Putnam at St. Louis Commune Celebration

There is probably no event in all history that has been so shamefully misrepresented or that has been so little understood as that grand uprising of the proletariat known as "the Paris commune of 1871." To the average mind the word "commune" signifies lawlessness, rioting, pillaging and murder. It is safe to say that not more than one out of five hundred Americans today has any other notion of that important occurrence than that it was an uprising of ignorant and vicious men who slew all who came in their way and pillaged and burned every building within their reach. A parade through the streets of New York of all the murderers, highwaymen and other criminals contained in the jails and penitentiaries of America, armed with torches, clubs, knives, pistols and dynamite, would perhaps be a faint approach to the popular conception of the commune.

Time will not allow us to go much into details this evening. A scheming emperor, in order to divert the attention of the French workingmen from their own condition, sought and found an excuse for a war with Germany, in which war he was ingloriously defeated and compelled to sign a humiliating treaty. The people of Paris refused to submit to the treaty, abolished the monarchy, declared the establishment of a republic and set up what was known as "the government of national defense." This government proved itself to be a weak and vacillating body, and made no preparations for the defense of Paris, finally surrendering the city to the Germans.

The people were indignant, and the government, which was composed largely of men hating the working class, attempted to disarm the national guards, most of whom were workingmen. This led to open hostilities, and the workingmen, being victorious, compelled the leaders of the government to flee to Versailles, and on March 18, 1871, the commune was declared established, amid indescribable enthusiasm of the people.

It was a government by the working class, the despised toilers whose labor had produced all the comforts and luxuries of the world. This class of men, who had hitherto been considered incapable of doing anything but the bidding of their masters, had asserted itself and announced its intention of using the powers of government for the benefit of the masses.

The capitalistic government at Versailles was astounded. It sent its agents throughout the rural districts of France, denouncing the "incendiarism, murder and robbery of the mob in Paris," and the press of the entire civilized world was filled with horrible stories of the "mob rule."

And what are the facts? I can do no better than quote the statements of an eye-witness, Mr. Frank M. Pixley, a prominent journalist of the Pacific coast. Says Mr. Pixley:

"I was present in the city of Paris during the entire period that the commune held sway. I saw that great city of central Europe held for five weeks by the artisans and laborers, who for the first time in seventeen years had had the opportunity to bear arms. There was the Bank of France, with its hoarded wealth of coin, the house of Rothschilds, the bank of Hopes of Amsterdam; there were the great magazines and storehouses filled with costly fabrics; shops with jewels of untold value; palaces with costliest gems of art; pictures and marbles of inestimable value. There was a vast population which had for months endured privation, hunger and distress. The gendarmerie had been driven out, and there was no other government than that of the commune.

"And yet during the five weeks—weeks of menace from without and suffering within—I saw and heard of no single act of pillage and murder. During five weeks I saw no act of vandalism, I saw no plunder. I saw organization and order."

Such is the testimony of an eye-witness, corroborated by many writers and admitted to be true by many enemies of the commune. Paris under a government of workingmen was more orderly in time of war than under an emperor in time of peace, with 12,000 police for his special protection. A member of the commune said: "We hear no longer of assassination, theft and personal assault; it seems, indeed, as if the police had dragged along with it to Versailles all its conservative friends."

Now let us turn to subsequent events and see how the conduct of the self-styled "representatives of law and order" compares with that of the commune administration.

During the last week of May, 1871, the Versailles troops entered Paris, and though the workingmen, who were inexperienced in warfare, exhibited unparalleled bravery in defense of the city, the commune government was overthrown. Then followed the greatest exhibition of brutality that has ever been recorded. It is useless for me to attempt to convey any adequate idea of its horror, and I must content myself with repeating the report of Gen. Thiers, who commanded the troops opposing the commune. Here it is. Grasp its terrible meaning if you can:

"Number of insurgents arrested from May 28, 1871, to Jan. 1, 1872, 35,578; died, 967; acquitted, 3,147; condemned to prison, 10,131; handed over to the civil courts, 212; dismissed, 1,090; shot, 23,121."

May 28, please note, was the last day of the war. All these 23,000 proletarians were shot after the commune had been completely conquered.

Comrades, it is well that we study the history of the commune. It is well that we know how these thousands of martyrs died, inspired with a glimpse of the future. It is well that we know why they died. How they died is illustrated by these words of Vermorel at the burial of the commune's general, Dambrowski, three days before the end of the struggle: "I say unto you that this precious martyr's blood holds the seeds of the morning. I tell you that those who shall weep are the poor, the toilers, the slaves. I tell you that, weeping for us, they shall wake to finish what we have begun! What think ye they will find most precious—the gold of capital or the martyr's blood that stains it? Let us not weep, my brethren; we have now naught else to do but die."

Thus they died—40,000 of them—died like true martyrs, knowing that they were right, confident that you and I and others of the proletariat would not suffer their sacrifices to be in vain. Comrades, shall it be said that the cause for which they perished thirty years ago shall fail today for lack of martyrs? Circumstances do not demand of us that we die for the cause today; but are there not among us enough men who will sacrifice their time, their energies, their ambition, their all to insure its triumph—to complete the emancipation of labor? I believe that there are, and that within the lifetime of nearly all that are present the sun of the co-operative commonwealth will rise grandly, gloriously above the political horizon.

But we must not rest on prophecy or confine ourselves to expectations. In the history of the past are to be found the guiding stars for the future. We must know how the proletariat has lived and died in order to discover how it may triumph. In the history of the Paris commune we find many lessons. We learn from it that workingmen are capable of managing the affairs of government in a peaceful and orderly manner. We learn that when the proletariat is once aroused no death, however terrible, can deter it. We learn from this bloody page of history that capitalism, when opportunity is offered, will stop at nothing to perpetuate its reign. We discover in the wage-working class a feeling of humanity and fraternity, a sense of justice and a love of liberty. We perceive in the capitalist class an utter lack of mercy, a spirit of brutality and an unlimited selfishness.

Let us take warning. With the growth of its power the characteristics of the capitalist class have only been intensified. Let the proletarians of America but give unmistakable evidence of their intention to secure control of the powers of government, no matter how peacefully, and you will witness scenes of cruelty on the part of the minions of wealth beside which events of the past will pale into insignificance.

In conclusion permit me to say that the Paris commune meant more to the proletarians of America than did the American revolution. The commune was a revolution of our class, and we owe more patriotism to our class—the wage-working class of the world—than we do to any institution or government founded on geographical lines. Let us remember its history. Let us mourn for its martyrs and profit by its lessons. Let us at all times refuse to make war upon our fellow-slaves of other countries. Let us pin our faith to international Socialism and never forget that "the workingmen of all countries are our friends and the despots of all countries our enemies."

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights. In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

Adjourned.

Attitude Toward Trades Unions

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

First—Join the union of your respective trade.

Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.

Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.

Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.

Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.

Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.

Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

THE SOCIALIST MOVEMENT IN MASSACHUSETTS

Leonard B. Abbott in The Outlook

The most striking political phenomenon during recent months has been the unprecedented growth of socialism in the eastern section of Massachusetts. When, in December, 1898, John C. Chase, an avowed Socialist, was elected mayor of Haverhill as the candidate of the Social Democratic party, it was possible for men to say that he owed his victory to a political accident, for his opponents were divided, and he polled only 2,300 out of 7,000 votes. In December last, however, Republicans, Democrats, and Prohibitionists all joined hands to defeat him. They forgot their differences of opinion, and threw down the gauntlet on the basis of a straight contest between socialism and capitalism. As such the issue was frankly accepted by all concerned. No effort was spared to defeat the Socialists, and money flowed like water. The coalition candidate, a lawyer named Pingree, had not only the support of the one daily paper of the city, but also of all the machine politicians. On the other hand, the Social Democratic party, a new organization, with very slight financial resources or political experience, fought beneath the storm of prejudice that is always aroused by the word "Socialism." The money with which they conducted their campaign came from far and wide—hundreds of dollars from the Jewish Socialists of the East Side of New York, and contributions from sympathizers in almost every state of the Union. A little weekly paper, the "Haverhill Social Democrat," was started a few weeks before election as the organ of the Socialists. In spite of almost superhuman obstacles, the Social Democrats again elected their candidate, by a majority of 156, and with him three aldermen and three councilmen (out of a joint ballot of twenty-one), which gives the Socialists the same numerical strength in the city council that they had last year.

On the same night that Chase was re-elected there came news from the other side of Boston that Brockton also had elected a Socialist mayor, Charles H. Coulter, by a majority of over 1,500, together with two aldermen and a councilman, all of whom are on the Social Democratic ticket. The following week Lynn and Newburyport each cast about 800 votes for a Socialist mayor, and at the last-named place the Social Democrats elected a member of both city council and school board. Haverhill and Rockland are represented in the state house at Boston by James F. Carey and the Rev. F. O. McCartney, the only two Socialists in any state legislature in this country. We thus see the extraordinary spectacle of socialism strongly entrenched today in Massachusetts, a Republican state, and one famous for its conservatism.

The Social Democratic party was formed at Chicago in June, 1898, being thus less than two years old. It grew out of a heterogeneous organization formed by Eugene V. Debs in 1897, and from the first day of its existence has stood uncompromisingly for clear-cut socialism. It declares its object to be "the establishment of a system of co-operative production and distribution through the restoration to the people of all the means of production and distribution, to be administered by organized society in the interest of the whole people, and the complete emancipation of society from the domination of capitalism." In principles and purpose the Social Democratic party is almost identical with the Socialist Labor party, and its formation was really a protest against conditions existing in that party. The Socialist Labor party, in the twenty years of its existence, has accomplished nothing that can be compared with the victories of the Social Democratic party in Massachusetts. Eugene V. Debs—the "Ferdinand Lassalle of American Socialism," as he has well been called—is national organizer of the Social Democratic party, and to his untiring efforts has been due no small measure of its success.

The Social Democratic movement in Massachusetts is a working-class movement, and its rank and file are recruited almost wholly from native-born Americans. Winfield P. Porter, twice the party's candidate for governor, often prefaces his addresses on socialism by saying: "My grandfather fought to throw off the yoke of English slavery; my father strove to break the chains from the limbs of the negro slaves; I today am fighting against the curse of wage-slavery." In view of such a declaration, it can hardly be said that "socialism is a foreign importation"; and it is certainly very interesting to note that Massachusetts, the cradle of liberty in 1776, and the stumping-ground of the Abolitionists half a century later (Haverhill, by the way, being the birthplace of J. G. Whitier), is today the first to lead the way toward the "Co-operative Commonwealth" pictured by Socialists. Mayor Chase was born in New Hampshire, Representative Carey in Haverhill, and both of them worked in the shoe factories from earliest boyhood. Mayor Coulter is also an American, a journeyman plumber by trade. Representative McCartney, on the other hand, is a Unitarian minister. He left a prosperous church at Rockland to go into politics, and was previously assistant pastor of one of the wealthiest congregations in Boston. Haverhill, Brockton, Lynn, and Newburyport are all famous as centers of the shoemaking industry, and this fact has led the New York "Sun" to suggest that there must be some mysterious connection between shoes and socialism!

"There is something that all the money in the world is powerless to check," said one of the Haverhill Socialists, "and that is the onward march of a great moral principle." It is this very spirit in Massachusetts socialism which gives it its impregnable strength. The Social Democratic party is so fundamentally different from the other parties that the old-time politicians are totally at a loss as to its meaning. They cannot even begin to comprehend that the Socialists are working, not for political jobs and party triumph, but for principles and ideals. There is in the Social Democratic movement an almost religious enthusiasm. On the eve of victory in Haverhill, an Irish Socialist was on his deathbed. The good news was brought to him lying in pain, and his face brightened as with the light of sunshine. Almost his last words were, "And Brockton, too!" In one of the branch meetings of the party a new recruit to Socialist principles—a notorious drinker—stood on his feet to make confession of faith, and in his hand was the inevitable bottle. "Comrades," he said, "I am never going to disgrace our cause by taking another drop of that vile stuff!" He dashed the bottle to the ground, amidst applause.

Massachusetts cities have so little home rule that, even if Mayors Chase and Coulter had a majority in the city government, almost nothing could be accomplished in the direction of socialism. Both mayors realize that their chief function at present is that of agitators—apostles of a new idea. In their inaugural messages they declare triumphantly and unequivocally their belief in the fundamental principles of socialism, but state that the most that they, as individuals, can do is to move slowly forward in the direction of municipal ownership, and to use their influence wherever possible in the interests of the working class against the capitalists.

Probably Edward Bellamy's books, scattered so widely through these New England homes, have been largely responsible for the growth of the socialistic sentiment. Socialistic papers and pamphlets have been distributed here in thousands for many years, for the Socialist movement of today is clearly the logical development of an earlier and vaguer Populist movement. But more powerful than all other factors in the education of Massachusetts workmen has been the evolution of industry. The men of Haverhill and Brockton can remember the time when a shoemaker made a complete shoe upon his knee. Today the individual, working in concert with scores of others, and using complex machinery, makes a hundredth part of a shoe. A priori, one would suppose that such marvelous mechanical development would bring comfort and security to all. As a matter of fact, the Haverhill shoemakers are much worse off than their fathers. There is more poverty, more insecurity, and more unemployment. The invention of machinery and the concentration of industry have brought incalculable wealth to the capitalist class, but misery to the workers. It is to be wondered at that New England workmen now realize that the factory, already social in its nature, should also become social property, and be administered to promote the well-being of the whole community? Is it not natural that they should flock in ever-increasing numbers to the party which asserts its object to be the collective or public ownership of the means of production and distribution?

The Socialist victories at Haverhill and Brockton have aroused comment from Maine to California. The editors of our daily papers are still busy trying to explain away such a remarkable phenomenon, and both Republican and Democratic leaders in Massachusetts are discussing how many of the Socialist demands they can safely incorporate in their respective platforms. To those who are able to survey the matter from a wide standpoint, these victories simply appear as the local expression of a movement that is already world-wide, and that is surely destined sooner or later to become a great political factor in this nation.

BREWSTER OF BROOKLYN JOINS SOCIAL DEMOCRATS

The following is the letter addressed by Eugene V. Brewster to Mr. Bryan, in which he declares for Debs and abandons all half-way measures for the program of the Social Democratic party:

"My Dear Mr. Bryan: I am constrained to inform you that I can no longer consistently support the Democratic party, nor yourself for the presidency so long as you and it retain the present well known position on public questions.

"You have long been aware of the differences between us, yet you were always aware that I have done my utmost, in my humble way, to effect a union of reform forces under your leadership.

"While I have differed with you I have always maintained that you are today the one great agitator and orator in the public eye and the one man who could relieve the country from the tyranny of the present administration by defeating the next republican nominee. I even wrote an article, which appears in a recent magazine, showing by facts and figures how you could and should be elected. But in the past few months strange and unforeseen conditions have been forcing me to alter my position, until I am driven to either continue in the democratic party, hated by myself for my hypocrisy and inconsistency, else openly leave that part and enjoy the luxury of absolute freedom.

"I admit that there are thousands of others holding opinions like unto mine who will remain with you till the end, and I know that they call themselves opportunists. They base their actions upon the doctrine of 'the lesser of two evils,' or, perhaps, upon the idea that the Chicago platform is a stepping stone to future reforms. But this no longer satisfies me. A compromise of this kind only retards and delays. I have no doubt that you could and would, if president, do much good and greatly alleviate the sufferings of the masses. An opiate will temporarily relieve the pain of a broken limb, but it will never cure; some time the bones must be set. Let the patient remain too long under the opiate without repairing the real injury and it is too late.

"The trust question, to which you are devoting most of your attention, involves the very greatest and really the only problem that the American people have to solve. Regretfully, you seem to see only one side of the case, and seeing only evil on that side, you would unhesitatingly destroy the trust. You do not seem to realize, dear Mr. Bryan, that the same arguments that you apply to the trust also apply equally well to improved machinery, and yet you would not destroy that. It seems very clear to me that the machine and the trust are given to us by an all-wise Creator to lighten and lessen our toil, and that only the stupid management of them has made them a curse rather than a blessing. The question is, then, How can we retain the good qualities of the trust and the machine and eliminate their bad qualities? There can only be one answer—public ownership and control. This may mean Socialism, but there is no other way out of it. It is a natural law of evolution. It is inevitable, be it for weal or for woe.

"I have carefully studied the conditions and the many remedies offered by various parties and factions, and it seems to me that co-operation—socialism—is the only possible remedy.

"Being convinced of this, and seeing the great party leader taking a stand diametrically opposite, and believing that the party is rapidly deteriorating from its '96 character, how can I consistently support the democratic party, that seeks to destroy one of man's greatest achievements—the magnificent organization of industries called trusts?

"Again, for several years I have been writing and speaking publicly on these questions, doing what little good I can, but now, many papers and magazines will not print my articles and many organizations will not permit me to address them, because of my known friendship and admiration for you and your party, fearing that I might acquire influence which I would use to injure the cause at the polls. Again, I am not sure that I am not doing you an injury while professing allegiance to you and at the same time teaching that you are wrong. Still again the public press persists in treating me as your representative, and you are therefore often misquoted and misrepresented.

"I can see no hope of ever obtaining any permanent reform through the democratic party, however radical be its platform. Both of the old parties are fast rotting away with corruption, and even after '96 I see the vast and beautiful organization of the democratic party controlled at almost every point by a human hyena grimly waiting for plunder. There must be a new party, and I am not sure that that party is not the one just formed by the two Socialistic factions and headed by Eugene V. Debs.

"While Mr. Debs cannot possibly win this year, and while I am nomination and the action of the populists make the election of Mr. McKinley almost certain, I feel that I could not help you much, even were I to remain in the party, because you certainly cannot carry this state and my vote, and my support would therefore be worthless.

"But, on the other hand, my vote and the votes of many who feel as I do, if cast for Debs, would add much to the cause of true reform because of the moral influence of a large vote.

"Finally, I am no longer content to waste time in fighting half-way reforms and compromises, and believe that the best and the quickest results come by strict adherence to one's principles. If half the magnificent energy and divine devotion displayed in our churches, our prohibition parties, our anti-saloon leagues, our charity organizations, our anti-vice crusades, etc., were spent in a cause that strikes first at the root of all these evils, in a cause that seeks first to set right our economic conditions, how soon would we see the end of poverty, vice and plenty walking hand in hand!

"Believe me, Mr. Bryan, I have the deepest respect and admiration for you personally, as have nearly all men, but I do hope that you will some time see the situation and the only true remedy as clearly as we do who have, as we think, gone more deeply into economics. With all your brilliancy and marvelous oratorical and rhetorical powers, you could soon bring the world to your feet.

"Trusting that you will receive this in the kindly and sincere spirit in which it is given, and that you will see the necessity of my giving publicity to my position, I beg leave, my dear Mr. Bryan, to remain yours with deep respect and esteem, Eugene V. Brewster."

Composition of the Convention

As secretary of the committee on credentials at the national convention of the Social Democratic party held in Indianapolis, Ind., March 6, 7, 8 and 9, 1900, I prepared a record from which are obtained the following facts:

Seventeen states were represented by sixty-seven delegates with credentials for 2,120 votes. This was less than half of the membership in good standing, the scattered branches not being represented.

An analysis of delegates' occupations shows sixteen to be of the professional class, eleven of the business class, and forty of the wage-working class.

The oldest delegate was 65 years of age, and the youngest 22. The average age was a little less than 38.

The following callings and occupations were represented:

Artist and illustrator,	Manufacturer,
Blacksmith,	Meat cutter,
Cabinetmaker,	Merchant,
Miner,	Carrage painter,
Minister,	Office clerk,
Cigarmaker,	Pattern maker,

LEONARD D. ABBOTT SPEAKS ON THE TRUSTS

Comrade Leonard D. Abbott spoke at the home of E. V. Brewster, Brooklyn, March 15, before the Brooklyn Co-operation club. There was present an enthusiastic audience and great interest was shown in the presentation of the Social Democratic view of trusts. Mr. Abbott said, in part:

"I believe the time is not far distant when the competitive system, with all its bitterness and misery, will be succeeded by co-operative commonwealth, the motto of which will be, 'An injury to one is an injury to all.' Our 'Democracy' today is a sham. Our government is simply plutocracy. A few capitalists have in their hands power never dreamed of by the worst monarchies of Europe. Fifty men can demoralize industry. We are slaves in a slavery such as the world has never seen. There is only one remedy, co-operation, and only two ways to attain it—first, by voluntary action; second, by political action. The first has been proved a will-o'-the-wisp. The founding of little Utopias in different parts of this country has resulted in nothing but failure. Their founders have gone back upon industrial experience, and gone back upon progress. We must progress with the world. The latest evolution of industry, the trust, is the very climax of co-operation. The Standard Oil trust is the most magnificent example of co-operation. But it is for the capitalists. Yet don't cry it.

My only objection to the trust is that it does not take us all in. It seems to me as sensible a thing to say, 'Go throw back the waters of the Mississippi on its source,' as 'Go destroy the trust.' It seems to me as ridiculous a thing to plead for a return to the stage coach as to plead for a return to the small store and the individual capitalist. Why, the trust is the greatest product of individual intellect. We want a trust for all, owned by all. People are fond of saying there are no classes in America. What about your 'Four Hundred'? What about your 'East Side'? There are three classes—the capitalist, the middle class, and the laboring man, and each so well defined that it may be said each has its separate party. The first is represented by McKinley, the second by Bryan. But the tendency today is to crush out the middle class, and for one of the middle class that go up into the plutocracy, ninety and nine go down. It is a dying party. The last party which is now but coming into existence is the party that shall yet control the destinies of America—the Socialist party, and Debs is its standard-bearer. Massachusetts, which led in the revolt against English tyranny and led in the emancipation of the slaves, is now leading the new great movement, and what has been done there in Haverhill may be and will be done elsewhere in America." (Applause.)

NATIONAL CAMPAIGN FUND

The spirit of consecration and hard work which lies at the very heart of every successful movement, is permeating the Social Democratic party for the mighty campaign of 1900. We are in the field with candidates whose fitness to lead a great working class movement to the polls everybody concedes. The party is based upon the solid rock of uncompromising Socialism. No fusion is anywhere thought of; no compromise with the forces of middle-class reform or reactionary politics is possible. We are moving straight along the middle of the people's highway to the Co-operative Commonwealth.

Looking over the field from the vantage point of the editor's chair, we can see along the line an organization stimulated by a splendid hope and courage. Everywhere is the answering recognition to the call of duty. This much is settled already, whatever besides may remain unsettled: There is to be union among Socialists this year for a political strike at the ballot box. And this is enough to inspire every Socialist to renewed and active service in the cause.

Now let us ask you what in your opinion our cause needs most just at this time? Is it not organization? If yes, then what form should organization take? Remember the record of the branches where the party has entered the political field in the past. Is it at all probable that a more effective form of organization can be devised for the campaign? Through the local branches we have made a record of progress that has never been equaled. With the branch organization and its possibilities as a center of agitation and education, the membership is now familiar. It has been tried and not found wanting. Let us adhere to it where it is established and plant it where it is unknown.

Now everyone will admit that the basis of all successful organization is an idea. You can only organize and persist and accomplish things if your organization stands for a principle—an idea. Next to the idea comes literature. First, you must have an idea; then reach the people through literature—the Socialist newspaper and book—and organization follows as a matter of course.

How many of you have yet done any figuring on the expenses of this campaign we are about to undertake? Do you realize that it will be necessary for everyone of us to tackle this matter of the national campaign fund? The Herald sees that there is not a day to be lost in exchanging ideas and formulating plans. We want the co-operation of every Socialist publisher in the country. We are going to ask each of them to give this important question the greatest prominence in their columns. We must reach a million men and women in the country who are willing to contribute to the national campaign fund according to ability, and we here and now urge our comrades of the Socialist press to call upon their readers for subscriptions to a national fund to be used for campaign purposes—that is, for supporting speakers and organizers in the field, printing and furnishing literature, etc.—the same to be expended under the supervision of a national campaign committee.

The sooner this work is begun the more satisfactory will be the results reached next November.

Suppose in attempting to reach a million individual subscribers to the national campaign fund we begin among ourselves and all do our duty within the organization? All right. How much money can we raise, beginning May 1 and ending November 1? The answer to that question must necessarily depend upon the readiness with which every Social Democrat responds with his individual subscription. If every one, beginning May 1 and continuing to November 1, gives 50 cents a month, the national committee would have a fund of $15,000 at least—and that is the least the committee should have to make the effective campaign which everybody contemplates from Debs and Harrison to "Jonas Harrison" of Puckerbrush. The editor of The Herald is even quite sure that $25,000 is none too much to properly finance the campaign ahead of us. More than that, the editor is willing without consultation to venture the assertion that the practical way to raise an adequate campaign fund of $25,000 is for each member of the Social Democratic party to pledge himself for 50 cents per month, starting May 1. If the members of the party will hustle and get in their pledges to the national secretary-treasurer for 50 cents each for seven months, the moral and psychological influence of such a superb beginning will have the effect of securing pledges for $10,000 more within sixty days from May 1. Let the membership show their faith by their works, and the non-affiliated Socialists of the country will come to their assistance in this fight against the class and the system that pauperizes labor and debases humanity.

It should be remembered, too, that we will have three funds: National campaign fund, to be used, as stated above; voluntary monthly fund, to defray expenses at headquarters, enlarge and improve the paper, and build up the national organization; the propaganda fund for organizers, lecturers and to circulate papers, tracts, etc.

In this connection we desire to say that Comrade Eugene V. Debs has fully and unalterably made up his mind under no circumstances to take one dollar of any fund raised or proposed to be raised on his personal account. He appreciates most thoroughly the motive of those comrades at Indianapolis who proposed to relieve him of the old obligations connected with the struggle of 1894, but he writes: "Under no circumstances will I take one dollar. I am going to fill my lecture engagements, and this will put me out of debt. I don't want the money raised, and if it is raised I shall refuse it." It is above all else the wish of Comrade Debs that the national committee, when chosen, shall have at its disposal a campaign fund equal to the demands and responsibilities which will be made and devolve upon it.

There will be found among our membership many who can contribute more than 50 cents per month and any in excess of that sum will make good the inability of a few to give their full quota. Now, let the month of April be a season of preparation for the campaign, so that the national campaign committee, which will be organized by May 1, shall come to its great task knowing that it will be able to accomplish substantial results because it has the united and enthusiastic support of the members of the organization. With that support it can make an appeal to others, not organically associated but in full sympathy with us, that will be heard and receive hearty response.

The order of the day and the month for April, then, is individual pledges of Socialists to the national campaign fund.

CONTRIBUTIONS RECEIVED.

AMONG THE PHILISTINES

St. Paul Dispatch: "There is much popular misapprehension as to the character, antecedents and ultimate purposes of the so-called Social Democracy which has just nominated Eugene V. Debs for president of the United States. But the misapprehension is vanishing rapidly wherever the 'ultimate purposes' are understood.

New York Sun: "According to the Hon. John C. Chase, Socialist and mayor of Haverhill, Mass., 'the condition of the American people is worse today than at any other time in the world's history,' and the workingman is not so free as the southern slaves were. In the interests of science we should like to have a peep at the inside of Mr. Chase's head, and to know what his usual temperature is."

The Sun editor would be surprised to know how many prominent men in the country not ordinarily credited with having wheels in their heads fully agree with the mayor of Haverhill—that is, he would be surprised were he capable of learning anything about the condition and interests of the common people.

Baltimore Herald: "After a somewhat protracted period of obscurity, Eugene V. Debs, leader of the disastrous Chicago railroad strike and oracle of radical and reactionary elements, steps once more into the light of publicity. He has been nominated for president by the national convention of the Social Democratic party, and will be heard from at frequent intervals between now and next November."

"Reactionary elements" is very good, coming from a mouthpiece of that sophistical and idealess party whose political mausoleum is to be built at Lincoln, Neb.

Chicago Journal: "As a matter of fact, Mr. Debs is quite a mild-mannered man, who holds some extreme opinions upon public questions and who believes that he has discovered the correct solution of most of them. His attempt in 1894 to settle the labor question by a general strike ended in failure."

Yes, and not the least interesting feature of the Journal during the past twelve months has been the editorial endorsement of many of these "extreme opinions" and "correct solutions." The Journal has had views upon "public questions." What is to become of them now? Are they to go out of view?

Minneapolis Times: "At their national convention in Indianapolis the Social Democrats nominated Eugene V.

Debs for president and Job Harrison for vice president. Mr. Debs has demonstrated his ability as an organizer and leader, and his nomination by the united Social Democrat and Socialist Labor forces is by no means illogical. He is one of the ablest and certainly one of the most enthusiastic advocates of the principles laid down in the platform of the combined Socialist parties."

Next fall the Times editor will have an opportunity to say that Debs has demonstrated his ability as a vote-getter. We quite agree with his present view that the nomination was a logical one for Socialists to make, and the idea of November will bring the capitalist penmen something really good to write about.

Providence Journal: "If what has generally been told about the man (Debs) is not wholly incorrect, he is much too well-informed and shrewd to think for a moment that he and his party can secure enough votes to cut any noticeable figure in the returns next November."

We are a people with a very unique variety of discontent, coupled with a very ures will be required to officially record our numbers next November. We think about 1,000,000 will be a good strong conviction that about seven fig-starter, whether it will be a "noticeable" matter for the Journal or not.

TO SOCIALIST PUBLISHERS

Elsewhere in this number The Herald outlines a plan for raising the national campaign fund to be used by the national campaign committee. It is there suggested that all publishers of Socialist newspapers in the country co-operate with The Herald in raising the fund. This they can do by opening their columns to subscriptions, acknowledging the same every week and remitting to National Secretary Debs, who will be custodian of the fund until the national committee is organized and a treasurer elected.

The Herald invites the earnest co-operation of its contemporaries in this highly important work. The national committee should be in a position to finance that part of the work allotted to it as soon as organized. None are in a position to render the movement at this time more effective service than the editors and publishers. Let us hear from them through their columns.

OUR THREE FUNDS

On the first page this week attention is called to a matter which should receive the earliest attention possible of the local branches throughout the country. Reference is made to the national campaign fund. For some months, as Herald readers know, a list of contributors to the voluntary monthly fund has been printed, also every week a report of small contributions to the propaganda fund. Both will be continued. The first is used in defraying expenses of headquarters and ultimately, whenever the national board feel warranted in so doing, in enlarging and improving the paper. Each contributor to this fund gives $1 or more per month for one year. The propaganda fund is used for organizers and to circulate sample papers, tracts, etc.

Now that the campaign is near and the national committee will need funds for the specific work incident thereto, it becomes necessary for every member of the organization to interest himself in devising the best method for raising money. The Herald, as a suggestion that seems practical and appeals direct first to the membership, outlines a plan in the first-page article. We trust that no time will be lost in giving most thorough attention to this matter. It is of primary importance and if the plan suggested meets with approval, it should be put into operation at once.

WOMEN AND SOCIAL DEMOCRACY

The supercilious editors of capitalist newspapers, with the usual flippancy that marks their discussion of all public questions, are treating as a joke the declaration of the Social Democratic platform in favor of the emancipation of women. This sort of thing suits us exactly. Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad or foolish. We are proud to stand before the country as the only party committed unequivocally to the cause of womankind. Before the campaign is over this attitude of the party will be understood by influential women in every section of the country and the puny efforts of the penny-a-liners will be silenced.

The Herald commends to the women of the United States the example of Miss H. Augusta Howard, of Columbus, Ga., who sends in the first contribution of $5 to the national campaign fund. Miss Howard is a well-known leader among women conspicuous in the south in the cause of human freedom. Her example is one altogether worthy of being followed, and with full confidence that it will be, The Herald opens its columns to subscriptions to the national campaign fund from women, with Miss Howard at the head of the list.

Open Letter to Dr. Harper

Dear Doctor: I noticed by the daily papers that you have lately experienced a sweaty time raising a large bundle of money for Chicago University. This surprised me, because we have been paying 2 cents a gallon more for coal oil than previously, and I supposed we would hear that it was in your interest. John D. must have temporarily forgotten you in the hustle and confusion incidental to raising the late large dividend for the stockholders in that beneficent institution, the Standard Oil graft.

I am too busy to see John, so when you next call him up just tell him I will bet him a cookie that eight years hence he will not be able to persuade the workmen to vote against Socialist candidates by promising to spend $50,000 improving his villa.

The "dog-day" season must begin earlier this year, for I notice that you have muzzled your professors so that they cannot talk about Standard Oil educational news. Keep up your lick!

Your class-conscious friend,

Chicago. JACK POTTS.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Many of the capitalist newspapers of the country seem to take special delight in pointing out that the Social Democratic party is in favor of the right of suffrage regardless of sex. The Philistines are doing us a real service and one that we fully appreciate. It is true that the Social Democratic party is the only one in the country committed unequivocally to the emancipation of women, and before the campaign is over the apologists for everything that is vile and unjust in the existing order of things will throw up their hands in astonishment at the interest of the women of the land in what it pleases them to call the "Debsonian" party.

The Rochester (N. Y.) Post-Express considers the platform of the Social Democratic party "the most extraordinary declaration of political principles ever put before the American people." And so it is. We are no ordinary people. If you want something very ordinary—and useless—go to the party supported by the Post-Express. The American people are coming to see that an extraordinary economic condition—growing out of a capitalistic revolution in industry—requires an extraordinary declaration. We propose to supply what increasing numbers of people want.

Social Democracy demands that production and distribution shall become a function of society, the state to be used as an instrument of administration of industry. What is known as democracy (with its anti-trust nonsense) is the negation of progress. A true democracy is impossible where the means of life are controlled by a class. Something more than the right to vote is necessary to a democracy; the right to live, for example. Social Democracy means the right to life, liberty and the enjoyment of the fruits of one's labor. Compare that with Bryan democracy.

Mr. Elbert Hubbard, editor of The Philistine, in a lecture at Providence recently, told his audience that there are forty-seven kinds of Socialism, more or less. An eastern newspaper, taking this as a text, makes the ridiculous statement that "it might be thought that Mr. Bryan is enough of a Socialist to suit the most exacting." Many kinds of Socialism there may be, according to the mental confusion anywhere prevailing; but there will this year be only one party with a definite Socialist program. That will be the Social Democratic party.

Social Democrats oppose neither the law of gravity nor the movements of the planets in their appointed courses—because it isn't worth while. For the same reason, not being worth while, they do not oppose the formation of trusts. They seek to make the trusts serve the general good of society. The realized program of Social Democracy means the general good.

Speaking last week in New York on the social reform movement in the west, W. D. P. Bliss made it clear that he no longer believes the step-at-a-time Bryan democracy has any future and that Bryan will be defeated. But Mr. Bliss did not make quite clear the point as to what may be expected from men, like himself, who have contended so strongly for the step-at-a-time policy.

The Indianapolis News says that the successes of the Social Democratic party have not been so much conquests of principle as office-seeking ventures, and in the same article admits that its principal successes have been achieved against combinations of both the old parties to defeat Socialism.

The Nashville Banner (Rep.) thinks the Social Democracy will draw away a radical element that voted for Bryan in 1896. The Banner is right for, once, But the S. D. will also draw away thousands of working men who were coerced into voting for McKinley in 1896. Stick a pin there.

Comrade Chas. H. Vail, author of "Principles of Scientific Socialism," writes us as follows: "Have received The Herald—double number. It is a splendid number. You are to be congratulated. I am more than pleased with the work of the convention. We shall make great progress in the next year."

The New York Mail and Express naively informs its readers that "there is a Social Democrat party and a Social Democratic party in this country." The simplicity of many of our great metropolitan editors is equaled only by their ignorance.

The Nebraska platform as the last word of the Bryan brand of statesmanship is a lame and impotent conclusion. More than ever before the country is coming to understand that Mr. Bryan does not understand the economic questions of the day.

The Haverhill Gazette thinks the constitution will be revised about the time Mr. Debs is elected president on a Socialist ticket. We are inclined to agree with it. We'll revise a whole lot of things besides the constitution when we elect a president.

True, the Social Democratic party demands revision of our antiquated Federal constitution. But the McKinley party, to suit the convenience of its capitalist masters, favors its gradual obliteration.

The old parties may not be exactly shaking in their shoes, but many who represent the old parties are already howling so vigorously that one naturally thinks they have been in the cucumber patch.

BOOK NOTICES

Socialism: Utopian and Scientific. By Frederick Engels. Translated by Edward Aveling. Charles H. Kerr & Co., Chicago; price, 10 cents.

Two distinct characteristics recommend this particular edition of the notable work by Engels: First, it is not abridged, but is an exact reproduction of the English edition in every respect; second, it is not mutilated in translation, but conveys faithfully the virile thought and comprehensive ideas of the author. It is undoubtedly the best reproduction of one of Engels' masterpieces yet issued from the American press. The work itself is given a special interest by the author's brilliant introduction. To understand the historical conditions which have been productive of the science of Socialism, every workingman should read one or more of the works of those writers who have contributed to the intellectual exposition of that science, and among them all, few, if any, are clearer or more profoundly interesting than Engels. The work has been widely read in Europe, and, being one of the classics in radical and searching authorship, we hope it will find a million readers this year in the United States.

Vote Will be a Surprise

The nomination by the Social Democratic Party of Eugene V. Debs of Indiana and Job Harriman of California as candidates for President and Vice-President, marks a stage of distinct advance in the great reform movement now going on in this country. Very few men in the United States are better known than Mr. Debs, and among labor organizations of all kinds, and the common people generally, no man is more fully trusted for sincere devotion to their just interests, nor more thoroughly esteemed and loved than he.

They believe, and not without good reason, that neither Rockefeller nor Mark Hanna, nor both combined, with all their millions, could buy Eugene V. Debs away from the cause of justice, which to him is the cause of the laboring world today. Mr. Harriman, whose home is in Los Angeles, is also widely and favorably known. These candidates, standing for the principles they stand for, will of a certainty be sustained at the next election by a large vote, and it is quite likely to be a surprisingly large vote.—Civic and Social Problems.

Machine-Made Bread

That tedious process which every housewife, as well as every baker, dreads—kneading bread—is now done by a machine.

It has been evolved from the fertile brain of Peter Bryce of Indianapolis. This apparently simple combination of cogs and wheels, pans and linked chains, can do the work of eight expert bakers, and do better work. The object of its construction, primarily, is to knead and shape the dough into loaves, and the lightning rapidity with which the sticky, shapeless mass is transformed into smooth, round loaves is marvelous.

Sixty loaves a minute—12,000 loaves a day—is its record, and its inventor claims that the end is not yet.

Misshapen lumps of dough are placed in pans fastened on an endless linked chain, which dumps their contents into the maw of the contrivance. They are quickly sucked between rapidly moving rollers, becoming smaller and smaller until, nearly perfect, they are thrown, one at a time, into a canvas cradle, which deftly rolls them and in turn dumps them into pans, whence they are taken to the oven to be baked.

Only two of these machines are in existence—one is in Indianapolis and the other is in Chicago—but it is expected that a small machine for household use will soon be made.

Subscribers will find their expiration number on wrapper. Prompt renewal is requested.

MERLIN'S MIXTURE

The Right to Marry

"No, workingman has a right to marry," is the remarkable statement made this week by George Morley, president of the Morley Bros. Saddlery Company of Chicago. More remarkable still is the report that many other employers of labor warmly indorsed Morley's views.

In the course of an interview with a delegation of harness makers, President Morley is said to have questioned the right of toilers to wed and bring up children amid the conditions prevailing in the industrial world of today.

This statement shows the high-water mark of injustice. It shows how the tidal wave of industrial oppression is undermining the very foundations of the American home, and now threatens to overturn it entirely.

After all, it is not so remarkable. It is but the open expression of one capitalist of what all other capitalists are silently seeking to accomplish. The fancy of this capitalist is simply the fact of capitalism. The capitalistic system daily denies, in ways more potent than speech, the right of labor to home and happiness.

Without considering the question as to whether laboring men have a right to marry, certain it is that only a very brave man or a very foolish one would dare to do so, as conditions are today.

The Right to Mar

This is one side. There is another. Even if it be true that laboring men have no right to marry "under these industrial conditions," is it not true that capitalists have no right to so change industrial conditions in their greed that marriage becomes a suicidal crime? If labor should not marry, capital should not marry.

Our working class is being sacrificed on the altars of mammon in order that the rich might propitiate the god of fortune. We are being robbed of our hovels that the rich may have yet larger palaces.

Do these harness makers in Morley's employ not see that they are creating harness for their own backs? And wearing it, does Morley's remark not remind them that a horse has no "right to turn its head stablewards until its master directs?"

Have not they—have not all of us—learned by this time that the wage system is wage slavery, that a private employer is a slave's master, that so long as we sell ourselves to capitalists for our wage and their profit we must submit to whatever restrictions they may choose to put upon us?

For years every old-party workingman voter has been a harness maker on election day. And on the three hundred and sixty-four days following he has vainly kicked at the traces and impatiently gnashed his bit.

Appeal to Your Reason

Emerson said: "Fear, craft and avarice cannot rear a state." But these forces can overthrow a nation. Under the present competition plan of running a state,

"Trade and the streets ensnare us,
Our bodies are weak and worn;
We plot and corrupt each other,
And we despoil the unborn."

"Things refuse to be mismanaged long."
The Socialist thinks they have been mismanaged long enough and therefore refuses to vote for old-party candidates who
"Being for seeming bravely barter
And die to Fame a 'blessed martyr'."

"The farmer imagines power and place are fine things. But the President has paid dear for his White House. It has commonly cost him all his peace and the best of his manly attributes. To preserve for a short time so conspicuous an appearance before the world he is content to eat dust before the real masters who stand erect behind the throne." If Emerson were now living he could not write a better description of national affairs. No thinker can deny that ours is a government for, of and by trusts and monopolies. "Nature hates monopolies and exceptions. The waves of the sea do not more speedily seek a level from their loftiest tossing than the varieties of conditions tend to equalize themselves. There is always some leveling circumstance that puts down the overbearing, the strong, the rich, the fortunate, substantially on the same ground with all others." Therefore the socialist is perfectly in line with the cosmic law when he comes with the slogan of "Equal opportunities for all, special privileges for none."

Reader, are you a Christian, and do you want His will done "on earth as it is in heaven?" Are you a Theosophist desirous of making "good karma?" Then why not for the first time cast a vote for real law and order? Could you lose anything? What have you gained thus far by voting otherwise? Do you know the fundamental principle of Socialism? It is simple: Co-operation! Get some easy Socialist literature and study it without prejudice. Do not allow

Let every workingman next November be a harness-breaker instead, and then labor will not only have the right, but the might to marry.

Harper's Harplings

The industrial conditions of today prevent more than the working class from marriage and parentage. Every class, except the exclusively rich, is being bound in bachelor bondage.

President Harper, of the University of Chicago, in a recent baccalaureate sermon, painted a pessimistic picture of the life that awaits the young men of today. He spoke of one profession after another, and showed how that in choosing any of them young men faced almost insurmountable obstacles.

Such a sermon sounds strangely coming from the head of an institution of which Rockefeller is proprietor and boss. The university is professedly preparing young men for a successful career in life, while the power that sustains the institution is in reality preparing industrial conditions so as to make a successful career impossible.

Capitalism is like a huge giant, that mercifully saves men by its charitable hands, and afterwards crushes them to death beneath its industrial feet.

What a cursed mockery is this! Institutions are founded for the education of youth. The higher aspiration for nobler things are awakened and developed. And then, as the young man, full of hope and ambition and enthusiasm, stands on the threshold of business life, he finds before him the pit of failure that the grasping hands of capitalism have dug for him! And into it, with blasted hopes and smothered ambitions, he falls!

Have you a vote? Have you a heart? Have you a boy?

Socialism and the Home

An old and threadbare charge against socialism has been that it would destroy and obliterate the home. Probably every fool in the universe has voiced this insane objection.

Out of the mouths of Morley and Harper comes the refutation of the charge. The one claims that workingmen have no right to marry and have a home, while the other shows that even professional men could not support a home, if they had it.

If these conditions continue as they are, it is doubtful if there will be any homes for socialism to destroy when it is inaugurated. The home is now being steadily and surely destroyed by a system which deprives the home provider of the opportunity to work, and thereby maintain the home.

Too many of us know, by sad experience, how hollow is the name of home. We have gone to the hovels that custom calls homes, after a day's weary march up street and stair, seeking a chance to sell our labor for a fraction of its value. With that heavy heart and foot we have approached the door, and greeted the wife's dumb inquiry with a silence more blasting than a curse!

And so long as we are refused work or allowed to work only for the profit of a private employer, we may expect to find our home a hell and our happiness a myth.

MERLIN.

unwise talk or actions of some Socialist to divert you; there are likely to be such, for there are many foolish persons in the ranks of the old parties, and as the Social Democracy is recruiting constantly from the "orthodox" people, they may possibly join us. But at least credit them with knowing a good thing when they see it!

The present wrongs are so great, the prospect of future greater iniquity is so portentous, that I wish the signs of the times might be written on the sky in letters of fire, so men could not sleep o' nights. It is a time for serious thought by all who believe in God, or, not believing thus, who yet recognize justice.

Breaks the Record

The "Appeal to Reason," Girard, Kansas, U. S. A., as it is now known all over the world among socialists and non-socialists as well, broke the record for a week recently.

In addition to the usual average of 2,200 new subscribers, 821 names came in from Painters and Decorators of America Local Union No. 147, Chicago; 425 from Union No. 194, and 1,003 from that well known socialist, W. R. McBride of Melbourne, Australia, who ordered the Appeal sent to every editor in Australasia. The extra postage makes every copy cost 50 cents.

The Appeal is working for half a million subscribers during the coming 12 months. It is enjoying a veritable boom in all parts of America, as this weekly increase of over 4,400 attests. "The little paper out in Kansas" is going a pace that means Socialism is taking deep hold upon the people.

No Let-Up to It

At Amesbury, Mass., on March 5, Comrade Jason Spofford was re-elected selectman. Last year he received 522 votes and this he received 881, a gain of 359 votes. Last year he defeated his opponent by 17 votes, and received the smallest vote of the three who were elected; while this year he was highest on the list.

He was defeated last year for the office of overseer of the poor by five votes, while this year he was elected to that office, in addition to being elected selectman.

Dr. John Quincy Adams, the S. D. P. candidate last year for member of the board of health, was defeated by 43 votes, but this year he was elected by a plurality of 273 votes.

At Georgetown, Mass., on March 5, one of the largest votes ever cast in the town was polled, the total number being 591. Notwithstanding this our candidate for selectman received 132 votes, being defeated by only 37 votes.

The S. D. P. candidates for selectmen last year received 90, 35 and 32 votes each. The Social Democrats claim a victory, having elected George E. Dawkins as overseer of the poor by a plurality of 11 votes.

At Merrimack, Mass., on March 5, Everett M. Heath was elected as a Social Democratic constable by a plurality of 23 votes. The constable whom he defeated was chief of police the past year by appointment of the selectmen.

The two old parties united into a "citizens' party" in an effort to defeat the Amesbury Social Democrats, but didn't meet much success.

Mayor Chase at Home

"The convention of the Social Democratic party just closed in Indianapolis has been very successful, and probably it will be the historic convention of the Socialist movement in this country," said Mayor Chase this morning. "It marks the real beginning of the movement in America, and Socialism now marches forward with giant strides. The union of the Social Democratic party and the Socialist Labor party was practically formed, which means that a united front will be presented in the coming campaign. Strong and powerful candidates, who will arouse enthusiasm and support throughout the country, have been nominated, and the working classes will rally for their support. Debs' well-known record in the labor movement will make him an ideal candidate. Harriman is known to be strong throughout the west and will add great strength to the ticket. I believe that with the united movement we have and with two such strong candidates the party will poll 1,000,000 votes."

—Haverhill Gazette.

Social Democratic Convention

The Social Democratic party has just concluded its first annual convention at Indianapolis, Ind. The convention was called to order on March 6th, at Reichwein's hall, in that city. Delegates to the number of sixty-seven, representing seventeen different states, were present. The space at our disposal forbids us giving a detailed account of the proceedings, which can be found in the Social Democratic Herald of March 17th, which appeared on that date as an eight-page newspaper, as a special convention number. The convention was in every sense a complete success, and the spirit of earnestness and socialist unity prevailing amongst the delegates left nothing to be desired. The most important part of the proceedings were the nomination of Debs and Harriman for president and vice-president, and the appointing of a committee of nine to meet a similar committee of the S. L. P. in order to find if possible a basis of amalgamation of both parties. It will be apparent to all that the "one thing needful" at present is unity of all socialist forces for the coming presidential conflict, and taking into consideration the fact that the necessity of such union has strongly impressed itself upon the vast majority of members of both parties, we are justified in believing that there are no insuperable obstacles to such union.—Workers' Call, Chicago.

Boston Comrades, Attention

The joint committees appointed by the S. D. P. and S. L. P. of Boston, respectively, voted to hold a joint meeting of the members of both parties, Sunday, April 1, at 3 p. m. at Phoenix hall, 724 Washington street, to discuss the features of the United Socialist party.

Delegates to the Indianapolis convention will report; there will also be given a report of the meeting of the conference committees appointed at the Rochester and Indianapolis conventions.

A banquet is arranged after the close of the meeting.

All members of both parties are invited and urged to attend.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

David Rousseau of New York is one of the recent valuable acquisitions to the party.

F. G. Strickland addressed meetings of the organized bricklayers and piano-makers of Chicago last week.

Seymour Stedman and Frederic Heath left Chicago for New York last Friday to attend the conference committee meetings.

The Brooklyn Co-operation club is a recently organized body of active workers whose heart is with the Social Democratic party.

There is remarkable enthusiasm shown everywhere among the branches east and west. Branch 45, Boston, has secured a large hall for permanent headquarters and is full of ginger.

For the heinous offense of speaking at a mass-meeting in favor of municipal ownership of the gas plant at Manitowoc, Wis., Comrade Fred M. Althen, organizer of the local branch, was discharged from his work.

The Indianapolis comrades manifested their devotion to the cause by defraying the entire expenses connected with the convention, amounting to $52. They also arranged for a "smoker" which was much enjoyed by all the comrades who were able to attend.

A large and successful meeting in the interest of the candidacy of Theo. Williams for alderman of the Thirteenth ward on the Socialist ticket, was held last Sunday afternoon at Chicago avenue and Robey street, with Thos. J. Morgan as speaker. There was a good attendance of Social Democrats.

At a joint meeting of the Jewish branches controlling the paper Vorwärts, at New York, Comrade Wm. Sanger, treasurer of the state committee, introduced a resolution calling upon the managing board to assist the state committee financially to the extent of 10 per cent of the profits on all benefits which that paper may have in the future. The resolution was carried and Comrade Sanger already acknowledges receipt of $25.

The Kentucky delegates to the convention have succeeded in imparting the good feeling and enthusiasm of that occasion to the comrades and sympathizers in that state. New members have been enrolled in the Louisville branch. The attitude of the party on trades unionism meets with general approval, and the most friendly relations exist between the S. D. P. and organized labor in Louisville, where a notable increase of strength will be seen.

To Our Socialist Boy Friends

Boys, you may have heard of the formation of an organization in the city of Haverhill called the "Boy's Social Democratic Club."

This club in the last two months has grown from its eight charter members to thirty-five. Many of these came into the club for the purpose of having a good time and playing different games in our rooms. But now they are changed. Instead of having fun they are working like beavers for the cause of Socialism, and can also put up a good argument in favor of it. In fact they have already had a good many talks with the republican boys, and have always come out on top. They are willing to debate with any of the boys of the two old parties. This is one of the results of the club.

The object of the club is to distribute Socialist literature throughout the city in preparation for the next campaign.

Boys, you should follow the example set by us, and form clubs in your respective cities, as you all know that in a short time we will be voters and have to bear the brunt of the battle.

We think our way is the only way we can do it, and beat the enemies of the laboring class.

If any of the boys would like information on the subject of clubs, please write to "The Boys' Social Democratic Club," No. 25 Washington street, Haverhill, Mass. We close with Three Cheers for Debs and Harriman. I. G. F. O'S.

Public Opinion Has Changed

The Moline Evening News of March 20 has the following reference to E. V. Debs and his recent lecture at that place: "The splendid audience at the Wagner Monday night and the rapt attention paid to Mr. Debs was a splendid tribute to that much-maligned gentleman. We do not know whether Mr. Debs was misquoted at the time of the agitation which resulted in his being thrown into Woodstock jail; probably he was. It would not be strange if he were, for most radical reformers are misjudged and misquoted, especially in troublous times. Unquestionably either Mr. Debs or public opinion has changed since then, and we more than half suspect it may not be Mr. Debs who has changed. Only a few years ago the word Socialism suggested to most ears the startling buzz of a rattlesnake in the grass at one's feet. Monday night, in Moline, a great audience—including many ministers of the gospel and even the mayor of Moline—applauded vigorously when Mr. Debs eloquently advocated government ownership of railroads and other public utilities. But that is Socialism—nothing else."

New York Mail and Express: "The platform upon which it is proposed to run Debs is distinctly worthy of the candidate and will doubtless nerve him to sublime deeds. It is to resolve in favor of a 'co-operative commonwealth,' meaning by that the 'collective ownership' of all means of production and distribution."

It is this happy union of platform and candidate, with the amalgamation of the forces that believe in both, that worries 'em. Evidently we have made an excellent beginning. The Philistines are very unhappy.

PRINCIPLES AND PERSONS

ANOTHER SERMON

If our parsons are going to quit sermonizing and take to politics, some of us will have to quit politics and take to sermonizing, just to preserve the balance of power. I don't threaten to do it myself, because I am not at all certain that I have had a "call"; but as my first attempt has already brought forth some good fruit, I shall try at least one more.

In that first sermon I pointed out the danger of making too much of personalities and not enough of principles. My meaning would have been better conveyed had I used the word "persons" instead of "personalities." As a matter of fact, my belief is that we can scarcely exaggerate the importance of personality, the influence of individual character, in a movement like ours, but it is indeed very easy to attach too much importance to persons engaged in it. We must not so belittle this great race movement in which we are each taking our own small part, as to imagine that its success depends upon or is brought about by any particular individual or set of individuals. If the earth had opened her jaws on the forenoon of March 9, 1900, and swallowed Reidewein's hall, Indianapolis, entire, with all the assembled wisdom and eloquence of the Social Democratic party therein, the co-operative commonwealth would yet arrive on time. So little does nature, in her grand, eternal process of evolution, care for the individual. The economic forces would carry the nation forward on their swift current until it met the inevitable necessity for Socialism. The principles of justice, love, equality, liberty and brotherhood exist, always have existed, and always will exist, and are ever clamoring for expression, even as the full-fledged idea in the brain clamors for expression in speech. They cannot be silenced. They cannot be put down. They will be heard. They will always find means of making themselves manifest more and more clearly, until they are recognized, adopted and at last enthroned in the hearts of men and in the life of the race.

And yet these economic and moral forces must work through individuals, as the grand harmonies in the soul of the master musician must remain forever silent and unknown without the musical instrument upon which to express them. Are not persons therefore all-important? Yes, persons, individuals are important, are absolutely necessary—as instruments. But this world is full of persons. The power behind evolution will not lack interpreters, will not want for mediums through which to act. The power that makes for progress, that has carried the race ever onward and upward through all the dim ages of the past, towards that far-off divine event toward which the whole creation moves, does not find you, nor me, my comrade, indispensable to its purpose, however able we may be.

"You are needed in your place, For the growing of the race, But the growing does not all depend on you."

So, though no individual is essential to the movement—it could get along without any one of us—yet the personality, the character of those who do take part in it, is vitally important.

Though the fundamental principles in which we believe are the same the world over, their expression or presentation will differ according to the character of the one who expresses them, as the rays of the sun, falling through a stained-glass window, take on the varied colors of the glass through which they fall. According to the breadth, height and depth of a man's own nature will be his conception of the movement. The egotist, even in a movement which takes in the whole race, will see himself only. The man whose nature has become warped and embittered, sees only class-hatred and destruction. The bigot will persecute and attack those who differ from him, as bitterly as ever did any religious bigot in the dark ages.

The fact that a man has grasped the theory of surplus value does not involve the possession by him of all those qualities with which we are wont to endow the future citizens of the co-operative commonwealth. The recognition of the class struggle does not necessarily make a man honest, honorable, moral and brave, although it ought to. In fact, Socialists are pretty much as other men are. After seven years in the Socialist movement, (alas for my early ideals!) I have come slowly and painfully to the conclusion that the glorious ideal commonwealth to which we look forward is not to come down, like the Holy City, from God out of heaven, but has to be built, by our own grimy hands, out of common, every-day, ordinary clay—very common, ordinary clay indeed! "Even as you and I."

And yet, if we are not better than the unregenerate capitalist world around us, we ought to be. The ideal state of society which we keep before our eyes, ought to creep into and ennoble our own lives. Our desire for economic justice to all men ought to make us just to each other. Our struggle for economic equality ought to preclude strife within our own ranks for position or power.

The fact that we are a small body, only 5,000 among seventy hostile or indifferent millions, banded together to accomplish a seemingly impossible task, ought to give us enough to do to fight the enemy and seek by every means to keep our own forces intact. The effort to bring about a state of society in which each individual shall find his own highest good in the good of the whole ought to bring home to us the futility of seeking greatness by rising above the heads of our fellow-workers, and that we as individuals can only be great as the rest of our kind become great. Our ideal of human brotherhood should make us strive to be worthy of being brothers to the noblest souls God ever planned.

In short, we ought to try to be Socialists now, without waiting for the dawning of that far-off brighter day. We should try to live the principles we profess. Let some of the love, the justice, the equality, the brotherhood we talk about, creep down from our lips into our hearts, and thence out into our lives. Thus the movement will have its effect in ennobling and elevating our characters, and we in turn will give a loftier and purer tone to the general movement. Heaven knows it has unpopularity enough of its own to bear and to overcome, without having to overcome, in addition, the unpopularity of its exponents. A man who is known in his community for truth, honor and integrity, will get a hearing for any cause he may espouse; but if his fellow-citizens have no respect for him, they cannot be blamed if they accord scant courtesy to the cause he represents, however worthy it may be.

If we love the cause, let us be worthy of it. If we believe in Socialism, let us be Socialists now, not merely by giving intellectual assent to its doctrines, but by incorporating as many of its principles as we possibly can into our relations with each other, and into the working of our organization. Margaret Hailo. Boston.

HERE'S A STICKER, FOR YOU

The following from the Washington (D. C.) Times (gold democrat) is immensely significant. It is one of the first signs that the democrats are "getting onto" the real meaning of Debs' candidacy. And if they are beginning so early, what will become of 'em after a while when we get going good and strong?

"If Debs runs over the million mark it is safe to assert that fully three-fourths of them will come from the elements that would support Bryan were Debs out of the field." A million votes lured from the Bryan column will, it is thought, mean the defeat of the Nebraskan by a larger popular majority than was cast against him in '96. Debs' support will come mainly from New York, New Jersey, Illinois and Indiana—states which the Bryan managers at this juncture are quite hopeful of carrying. Without at least one of them—New York—it is conceded that the democrats will stand a very poor show. Though New York was carried by McKinley in the last campaign by the unprecedented plurality of more than two hundred thousand, yet the issue which then gave that state to the republicans is now removed from politics and the signs at present seem plainly to indicate a strong democratic revival in the Empire state. However, the Debs candidacy will so confuse the issues in the minds of a large element of New York voters that unless something is done to sidetrack him it is feared the real democratic growth will not be strong enough to carry the democratic ticket through. What is true of New York in this particular is true of the other states named. Especially can this be stated of Illinois, which has in Chicago an element of Debsites almost as numerous as New York city possesses. The question, then, of interest to democrats is as to how to eliminate Debs from the problem. He cannot be influenced by argument. No reward of office can be offered him, as was offered to Powderly by Hanna in the last campaign for his support of McKinley. Debs' record as a wild agitator precludes consideration of his name for any place of importance in the public service. If, therefore, the Hannaites are wise—and they have been called nearly everything else but fools—they will see to it that Debs stays on the track, even if it costs them more money than they had to spend in Illinois in '96."

THE TWO CLASSES

Our society is divided into two distinct classes, rich and poor, workers and parasites. The rich, privileged by fortune, are mounted upon the backs of the poor whom they crush, and yet compel to carry them, saying that they have but one desire, to improve their condition by every possible means, and this while resting on their backs.

To best serve their ends, the rich establish governments to hide from the poor the means of freeing themselves, besides using armed forces to maintain the existing order of things. To reconcile the poor to their misery and slavery, the rich and strong establish laws founded upon religious superstitions, appeals to patriotism, etc., all based upon violence.

All laws, even those palmed off as divine laws, were made by men, and as men are not infallible, no matter with what external authority they may clothe themselves, they cannot become infallible by the fact that they organize themselves into an assembly to which they give the name of senate or other analogy.

If the workers have no land, if they are deprived of their most natural right, that of obtaining from the soil the sustenance of themselves and families, it is not because the workers wish it to be so, but because a certain class have organized things to suit themselves. And this unnatural order of things is maintained by the army. If the immense accumulations of wealth obtained from labor are treated not as belonging to all the people, but to a privileged few, it is because a few men have the right of making laws to which the rest must submit, and have their lives and labors spoliated. This does not exist because the people desire it, but because the government and ruling classes desire it for their profit and impose it by violence.—From Count Tolstoi.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

Adjournd.

Attitude Toward Trades Unions

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

First—Join the union of your respective trade.

Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.

Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.

Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.

Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.

Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.

Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

MANIFESTO

The National Executive Board to the Members of the Social Democratic Party

Comrades: Certain facts having come to the knowledge of your national committee concerning the New York conference through the reports to the board on the part of three of their members representing our party, and through a perusal of the press of the Socialist Labor party, we deem it our duty at this time in behalf of the cause of Socialism to issue to you a statement regarding the actions of the New York conference and to give to you a review of the facts relating to the union of the two Socialist forces.

Before taking up such a review, however, it should be stated that the official paper of the party, The Herald, was for many months prior to the convention open to discussion of the subject of union. During that time not less than twenty-three communications were published, thirteen being in favor of union, three qualifiedly favorable and seven opposed. It should also be stated here, since attempts have been made to create the impression that the national officers of the organization were opposed to union, that said officers went to Indianapolis favorable to an honorable union, with perhaps a single exception.

The committee of eighteen in New York failed of performing its true work in two salient and vital points, viz.:

First—As regards name, involving the violation of pledges given to you. Comrades at Indianapolis by members of the committee of the Socialist Labor party, Messrs. Harriman, Hillquit, Hayes and Benham;

Second—As regards the referendum vote, involving the question of whether there should be a majority vote of each party voting separately or of both parties voting as one.

Now, we desire to discuss with you, first, the question of the name. It has been recognized all through this discussion of unity that our stand for the name Social Democratic party has not been based upon a blind allegiance to a symbol. We have stood by the name Social Democratic because of the history which it symbolizes, the spirit of our movement and the methods which have been used in building up the party, which have given it a standing among the political movements of our time; and further, because of its international significance and the splendid achievements accomplished under it during the twenty months of our existence as a party.

The Compact Made

It cannot be denied that the overwhelming majority of the members of the Social Democratic party was and is in favor of retaining the present name. This was clearly manifest in the Indianapolis convention. The convention, it must be remembered, was essentially a mass convention, over 2,100 individual credentials having been handed in. The only thing which apparently stood in the way of the definite perfecting of union at Indianapolis was this very question of name. The difficulties in the way in this respect were apparently removed by a solemn compact entered into by Messrs. Harriman, Hillquit and Hayes, and members of our party at a conference held in the Occidental hotel, Indianapolis, on the evening of Thursday, March 9.

As regards Mr. G. B. Benham's attitude concerning name, comrades present at the conference of March 9 will agree that he pledged himself to unequivocally and aggressively support the name Social Democratic on the condition that Harriman and Hayes were accepted by our party as candidates. Mr. Benham distinguished himself at New York by presenting a labored argument against the name.

Mr. Job Harriman also stated plainly to Comrade Stedman that he would support the name. Stedman announced on the floor of the convention that he changed his vote from the majority to the minority report because Harriman and Hayes had given him their promise to support the name.

We incorporate herein two statements regarding this compact by Comrades F. G. R. Gordon and A. S. Edwards:

Edwards' Statement and Affidavit

"On the evening of March 8 at the New Occidental hotel, Indianapolis, a meeting was held for the purpose, if possible, of arriving at an agreement. There were present as representatives of the Socialist Labor party Morris Hillquit, Job Harriman and G. B. Benham, and F. G. R. Gordon, Wm. Mailly, C. R. Martin, A. S. Edwards, J. C. Chase, J. F. Carey, V. L. Berger. Gordon stated that since E. V. Debs declined to accept the nomination, it had been deemed advisable to hold a meeting of a few members of the S. D. P. and the S. L. P. delegates to see if an agreement honorable to both parties could not be made. He said the delegates to the convention were willing to accept Harriman and Hayes as the candidates, and that was done he thought the delegates of the S. L. P. should be asked to give some assurance that the name Social Democratic would be accepted.

"Morris Hillquit was the first to respond. He said, in substance, that if the convention on the following day nominated Harriman and Hayes there would be no difficulty about the name; that he would give his personal pledge (which he then and there did) that so far as he was concerned the name Social Democratic would be the only one submitted by the joint conference committee; further, he said, that he would give those present the moral assurance that the name Social Democratic would be accepted by the committee of nine representing the S. L. P.

"The next to speak was G. B. Benham. He said that he agreed fully with Mr. Hillquit, that the name was an acceptable one and that such an arrangement as was proposed would be satisfactory and settle the question of name. He gave his personal pledge.

"Job Harriman followed with the explicit and unqualified statement that he was in full accord with Hillquit, gave his personal pledge and added that he would write to the sections of the S. L. P. urging acceptance of the name Social Democratic party.

"Then Victor L. Berger said, in substance: 'If Debs can be induced to accept and the ticket nominated is Debs and Harriman, will you then stand by the name and will your pledges be good? I have some personal influence with Debs and am willing to make another effort. I do not know that I can succeed, but I will try, and if he does accept will you recommend only the name Social Democratic party?'

"To this Hillquit was first to reply. This he did in precise terms, declaring, as on the first proposition, that he would stand for the one name, Social Democratic party.

"Benham declined to commit himself as he had done on the Harriman-Hayes proposition.

"Harriman expressly declared that he accepted the proposition and would stand by the agreement on the name if the ticket were Debs and Harriman.

"Hayes being absent, the question was asked whether he would approve and accept the action of the meeting. Both Hillquit and Harriman stated that Hayes' indorsement and pledge could be relied upon and any agreement made there would be sanctioned by him.

"To the foregoing I wish to add that no other conditions or provisions whatever were suggested or agreed upon; that the members of the S. D. P. on their part accepted the conclusion arrived at in good faith, and that it was the distinct understanding when the meeting adjourned that if the convention nominated Debs and Harriman no other name than that of Social Democratic party would be submitted by the joint conference.

Gordon's Statement and Affidavit

"I believe it to be in the interest of truth and justice that a statement be made in reference to the peace conference held on Thursday, March 8, at the Occidental Hotel. The convention had adjourned in confusion and considerable bad feeling. Comrade Mailly requested me to talk to certain comrades who were 'pretty hot under the collar.' On the way to the hotel I suggested to Comrades Hillquit and Mailly that we get a half-dozen of the warring comrades into a room and see if we could not effect some kind of peace that would be honorable to all. This was agreed to, and I lost no time in bringing it about. I sought Victor L. Berger who had been especially anxious to retain the name and spirit of the Social Democratic Party and asked him to attend. He at first flatly refused, stating he was afraid of trickery, but, finally consented after much urging upon the part of Comrade Mailly and myself and also upon an invitation of Comrade Carey. Comrade Berger had been invited to attend a conference of the oldest friends of Comrade E. V. Debs for the purpose of prevailing upon Debs to accept the nomination, but upon the urgent demands and appeals of Comrades Mailly, Carey and Gordon he consented to attend the peace conference instead. I made the proposition at the peace conference that in case Debs would not accept the nomination the S. D. P. nominate Harriman and Hayes for the standard bearers of the united party and that the S. L. P. on their part pledge themselves to accept and work for the name Social Democratic Party as the official name of the united party. Comrades Hillquit and Harriman both agreed to this. Comrade Harriman pledging himself to write to all S. L. P. sections, appealing to them to vote for the name Social Democratic party.

"Comrade Berger then put this question: 'How would it be about the name then in case Debs will run, do you still agree in that case to the name Social Democratic Party?' After some discussion, the point was made by Comrade Mailly, that Debs was the choice of all, that we, the S. D. P. were to accept Harriman and the S. L. P. on their part accept the name of the S. D. P. This was agreed to by both Harriman and Hillquit. Comrade Benham did not agree to this.

"The peace conference adjourned to meet at 11:30 p. m. In the meantime the other conference had succeeded in gaining Debs' consent to accept the nomination; he (Debs) giving his consent at almost the very minute that the peace conference adjourned. Things having been settled to the satisfaction of all, the 11:30 conference was not called simply because Debs' acceptance had settled everything.

Mr. Morris Hillquit in his first address to the convention on Wednesday, March 7, declared that the Rochester convention had purposely refrained from adopting a name in order that they might be free to adopt any name that might be agreed upon.

Friday afternoon, at a meeting of the joint committee, in support of the plan to hold the conference at New York, and in support of his wish to have the conference put off two weeks in order that he might win over his people to the acceptance of the name, Mr. Hillquit again indirectly but nevertheless clearly reavowed his allegiance to the name.

Mr. Max Hayes, on the floor of the convention Thursday afternoon, announced his personal choice of the name Social Democratic and in strong terms pledged himself and his paper, the Cleveland Citizen, to the name.

The Compact Broken

We now come to the painful part of our statement—a record of broken promises. However hard or repugnant it may be, we hereby make the charge that in the New York conference the compact described above was ruthlessly violated by Hillquit, Harriman and Hayes, all of whom opposed the name Social Democratic party.

For one whole day the name was discussed and they stated when charged with a violation of their pledges that they did not feel bound to keep their word because Eugene V. Debs had accepted the nomination before the pledges were given. The personal pledge of Harriman to Stedman the former evaded by stating that he did make the promise but "with concessions." This latter statement Stedman positively denied. No other conditions were asked for or agreed upon save those contained in the sworn statements of Comrades Gordon and Edwards given above. Harriman in committee never mentioned that qualification until charged with a breach of faith. We call your special attention to the fact, as stated in Comrade Edwards' affidavit, that while the agreement at Indianapolis was that only one name would be submitted to the referendum of the parties, the entire committee representing the S. L. P. (excepting Hayes who did not vote) went direct and solidly against the name and voted for the submission of two names.

It must be noted also that while Mr. Max Hayes, as heretofore described, had pledged himself to work for the name, nevertheless he evaded the responsibility by absenting himself from the conference while the question of name was under discussion. He promised Comrade Leonard D. Abbott in New York that he would attend a session and speak in favor of the name. This he failed to do.

A most significant fact connected with this New York conference is that on motion of Sieverman (S. L. P.), seconded by Stone (S. L. P.) the joint committee prohibited any minority report except by permission of a majority of either committee. Sieverman said in this connection that they (the minority) can get their report to the members in the best way they know how, but any action by a minority should be no part of these proceedings.

It was said by the members of the committee of the S. L. P. in the New York conference that inasmuch as Comrade Berger was not instrumental in gaining Comrade Debs' acceptance of the nomination they were absolved from their pledges. It is also charged that Comrade Berger knew of Debs' acceptance at the time he was treating with them in the "peace conference." Comrade Debs has affirmed to us that when Comrade Berger left him to attend what Gordon calls the "peace conference" he could not have known at that time of his acceptance, for the good and sufficient reason that he (Debs) had not decided to accept.

Convention Instructions Disregarded

We come now to our second point regarding the referendum vote. One of the most important considerations in deciding on the name by the two parties was the character of the referendum.

Your convention decided that the referendum vote should be taken by each party voting separately.

Notwithstanding these definite instructions, the joint committee by a majority vote deliberately violated the specific directions of your convention, which it must be remembered was the sovereign power creating the committee which swept aside the wishes of the convention. They did this by deciding to submit a contrary proposition to the parties, as follows: "In case the party name voted for by you fails to obtain the concurrent majority of both parties, shall the name receiving the majority of the total vote of both parties be adopted?"

It must not be overlooked that our party has an enrolled and paid-up membership in charge of a national secretary. On the contrary, the S. L. P. does not know its membership and has studiously evaded giving any definite information concerning it. With these facts confronting us, it will be seen that their vote would depend upon the returns made by the secretaries of local sections. Under such conditions, while we do not claim that the returns would be fictitious, yet we contend that said returns might be so in the case of the S. L. P. Hence a majority of both parties, voting as one, might be a fictitious majority so far as the S. L. P. is concerned.

It will be noticed that Comrade E. V. Debs' name is not affixed to this statement, although he is a member of the national executive board. His attitude, however, upon the information herein contained, is in entire accord with the rest of the board. He was present at our conference and heard this read. The purpose of the board to preserve the Social Democratic party has his unqualified approval. From the fact that he is a candidate and has received a telegram in behalf of the majority of the committee asking him to suspend judgment until he sees the majority report, his name is withheld.

We submit to you, comrades, that union with a knowledge of the foregoing facts can not be honorably consummated.

Is Union Possible?

It may be asked why has the national executive taken immediate action and before reading the official majority report? In reply we say that promptness on our part will alone save disintegration and disastrous disaffection. Prompt action is demanded by the exigencies of the case and because the spirit of revolt is already thundering at our doors.

Comrades, the Social Democratic movement has been built upon the altar of sacrifice. Toil and hardship, poverty and privation, have been the lot of its pioneers. Shall months and years of arduous service to establish a revolutionary working class party in this country come to naught? United in spirit, agreed as to methods, harmoniously we have gone forth to the achievement of victories. Shall these results, this normal growth, be turned to defeat and dissolution? Political unity formed upon diplomacy, tainted with bad faith and double-dealing, can never stand. The enduring Socialist movement must be founded upon unsullied honor and integrity. It must be a movement, not a sect. Union in which all the essential elements of unity are lacking is impossible. A united Socialist party can not be built upon a basis of broken pledges.

You, comrades, are the arbiters. This momentous question must be by you decided. Loyalty to the cause of Socialism in this crisis calls for fidelity and unflinching support of the Social Democratic party.

Referendum

In view of the facts above stated the national executive board submits the following to the members for a referendum vote:

"Is union between the Social Democratic party and the Socialist Labor party faction desirable?"

VOTE YES OR NO.

Jesse Cox,
Victor L. Berger,
Frederic Heath,
Seymour Stedman.

Chicago, Ill., April 2, 1900.

COMRADES, TAKE NOTICE

Members are requested to at once take up the Referendum submitted by the Executive Board, canvass the whole question and return their votes through Branch Secretaries to the National Secretary not later than May 7.

ELECTION NEWS

Hurrah for International Socialism and the Social Democratic Party

Socialism Goes with the Name and Both are Acceptable to the American People

The first Social Democratic ticket at Battle Creek, Mich., at the election last Monday, proved an eye-opener, the candidate for mayor receiving 600 votes. For a beginning this is a noteworthy result. It means a big vote in the fall for the Social Democratic party. Let the cheer go round—Hurrah for International Socialism!

The vote cast for Mayor, Recorder, Treasurer and Justice shows a remarkable solidarity and indicates the beginning of a powerful movement in Battle Creek. It was a vote for a principle and the party:

Higgins (Mayor)598
Rogers (Recorder)583
Cronk (Treasurer)524
Krebs (Justice)554

Milwaukee polled 2,600 votes for the Social Democratic party—a good gain over that of a year ago.

Sheboygan comrades elected an alderman to the city council.

THE TRUTH PENETRATING

Deseret Evening News: The nomination at Indianapolis by the Social Democratic party of Eugene V. Debs for the presidency of the United States has called attention to that party and its principles.

It is generally understood that Socialism aims at the complete reconstruction of society, by a more equal distribution of the products of labor through the public ownership of land and capital, and the collective management of industries. But it is not commonly understood that the supposition that Socialism would do away with private property is an error. Recent writers on this subject seem to be anxious to correct the impression. They say that under the new system all property for the production of more wealth would be common, while all non-productive property would remain private. True, it would be impossible for any one to accumulate vast sums at the rate now existing. There would be no millionaires, but there would be no poverty either, the Socialists say. Each worker would retain the right of keeping and enjoying the full value of his labor. That would be his private property, and he would have plenty of it to enjoy.

It need hardly be said that Eugene V. Debs has not the slightest chance of general recognition at the polls. Yet, it is true that many of the ideas advocated by Socialists are penetrating modern society.

ECONOMIC CHANGES AND SOME OF THE CAUSES

The title of David A. Wells' ablest contribution to economic literature is "Recent Economic Changes." It is a work of great value as a record of some of the causes which have produced the economic changes of the past thirty years. Read by a Socialist, it serves to confirm his convictions. Put into the hands of a non-Socialist investigator, it will undermine his confidence in a continuance of the capitalistic system. From this work are compiled the following:

1. The most noteworthy peculiarity of the great commercial and industrial depression which first manifested itself in 1873 has been its universality. War or peace, free trade or protection, stable currency or unstable, old countries or new—whatever local conditions have been, none of the nations have escaped the calamity.

2. The maximum of economic disturbance has been experienced in those countries in which the employment of machinery, the efficiency of labor, the cost and the standard of living, and the extent of popular education are the greatest.

3. The depression and disturbance of industry, which commenced in 1873, is regarded by many writers on the subject as having terminated in 1878-79; but a full consideration of the larger evidence leads to the conclusion that there has been no termination, but only an occasional "interruption," due to extraordinary causes, varying locally, and by no means universal.

4. State commissions for the purpose of determining the cause for the phenomena under consideration, instituted by Great Britain, the United States, France, Italy, and the Dominion of Canada, have reported voluminously on the subject. Opinions and conclusions have been widely and curiously different. The potential causes assigned were "over-production," "scarcity and appreciation of gold," "demonetization of silver," "restrictions of the free course of commerce," "excessive competition," "excessive war expenditures," "failure of crops," "strikes and interruption of production," "concentration of capital in few hands," "excessive expenditures for alcoholic beverages," "general improvidence of the working classes," and finally a Dutch committee, in 1886, found an important cause in "the low price of German vinegar."

5. After consideration of the causes assigned, the author is forced to the conclusion that all the reports greatly magnify the influence of purely local causes, and that all must be regarded as secondary and not primary agencies.

6. As to "over-production" the author says: "No term has been used more loosely in the discussion of this subject of trade depression than that of 'over-production.' The idea that there can be such a thing as a general production of useful or desirable commodities in excess of what is wanted is an absurdity."

7. Seeking for primary and universal cause, the author finds it in new conditions of production and distribution. The average saving in time and labor in the world's work of production and distribution has, in some departments, amounted to 70 or 80 per cent; in not a few to more than 80 per cent.

8. The gain in the power of production in some of the leading industries of the United States, during the fifteen or twenty years preceding 1886, as measured by the muscular labor formerly employed to effect a given result has been as follows: In the manufacture of agricultural implements, from 50 to 70 per cent; in the manufacture of shoes, 80 per cent; in the manufacture of carriages, 65 per cent; in the manufacture of machines and machinery, 40 per cent; in silk manufacture, 50 per cent, and so on.

9. In the year 1869 an event occurred which was probably productive of serious economic changes—industrial, commercial and financial. That was the opening of the Suez Canal. The immediate results were stupendous. The old transportation was done away with. An amount of tonnage, estimated as high as two million tons, was virtually destroyed. The voyage from London to Calcutta was reduced from six and eight months to less than thirty days by steam. Within a decade thereafter improved steamers came into use fitted with triple-expansion engines, which effected a saving of nearly 50 per cent in the consumption of fuel.

10. During the ten years from 1870 to 1880, inclusive, the British mercantile marine increased its movement, in the matter of foreign entries and clearances alone, to the extent of 22,000,000 tons; and yet the number of men who were employed in doing so much more work had decreased in 1880, as compared with 1870, to the extent of about 3,000. This was done by the introduction of steam hoisting machines and grain elevators upon the wharves and docks and the employment of steam-power upon the vessels for steering, raising the sails and anchors, pumping and discharging the cargo; or, in other words, the ability, through the increased use of steam and improved machinery, to carry larger cargoes in a shorter time, with no increase—or, rather, an actual decrease—of the number of men employed in sailing or managing the vessels.

11. In 1870, the number of hands (exclusive of captains) employed to every one thousand tons' capacity, entered or cleared of the British steam-mercantile marine, is reported to have been 47, but in 1885 it was only 27.7, or seventy per cent more manual labor was required in 1870 than in 1885 to do the same work.

12. The power capable of being exerted by the steam engines of the world in existence and working in the year 1887 has been estimated by the Bureau of Statistics at Berlin as equivalent to that of 200,000,000 horses, representing approximately 1,000,000,000 men; or at least three times the working population of the earth, whose total number of inhabitants is probably about 1,460,000,000. And yet it is certain that four-fifths of the steam engines working in the world have been constructed since 1865.

13. Noting the revolution in the carrying trade on land; the author says the power to excavate earth, or to excavate and blast rock, is from five to ten times as great as it was when operations for the construction of the Suez Canal were commenced in 1859-60. The machinery sent to the Isthmus of Panama, for the excavation of the canal at that point, was completed by engineers as capable of performing the labor of half a million men.

14. The displacement of hand labor in some of the cotton mills of the United States, from 1880 to 1890, by improved machinery, was from 33 to 50 per cent, and the average work of one operative, working one year, would, in 1890, supply the annual wants of 1,600 fully clothed Chinese, or 3,000 partially clothed East Indians.

15. In 1840 an operative in the cotton mills of Rhode Island, working 13 to 14 hours a day, turned off 9,600 yards of standard sheeting in a year; in 1886 the operative in the same mill (with machinery) made about 30,000 yards, working ten hours a day. In 1840 the wages were $176 a year; nearly half a century later, in 1886, the wages were $285 a year.

16. In one large and long established shoe factory the proprietors testify that it would require 500 persons, working by hand processes, to make as many women's boots and shoes as a hundred persons now (1886) make with the aid of machinery—a displacement of 80 per cent.

17. In 1845 the boot and shoe makers of Massachusetts made an average production, under the then existing conditions of manufacturing, of 1.52 pairs of boots for each working day. In 1885 each employee in the state made on an average 4.2 pairs daily, while at the present time (1888) in Lynn and Haverhill the daily average of each person is seven pairs per day, "showing an increase in the power of production in forty years of 400 per cent," said Mr. F. W. Norcross, November, 1888, before the Boston Boot and Shoe Club.

18. Among what may be termed the minor industries, in the manufacture of jewelry, one skilled workman, paid at the rate of $2.50 to $3.00 per day, and working according to ante-machine methods in use a few years ago, could make up three dozen pairs of glove buttons per day. Now, one boy, paid $5 per week, and working with modern machinery, can make up 9,000 pairs in a day.

19. In Adam Smith's day it was considered a wonderful achievement for ten men to make 48,000 pins in a day, but now three men can make 7,500,000 pins of a vastly superior character in the same time.

The author concludes that in the increased control which mankind has acquired over the forces of nature, and in the increased utilization of such control—"mainly through machinery"—for the work of production and distribution, is to be found "a cause sufficient to account for most if not all the economic disturbance which, since 1873, has been certainly universal in its influence over the domain of civilization; abnormal to the extent of justifying the claim of having been unprecedented in character, and which BIDS FAIR IN A GREATER OR LESS DEGREE TO INDEFINITELY CONTINUE."

With the writer's conclusion all Social Democrats will agree.

NOTICE

The columns of this paper will be open for a full discussion of the matters submitted by the Executive Board during the period ending with the issue for May 5. It is hoped that every Branch of the Social Democratic Party will give this important matter prompt and earnest attention, so that the vote may be announced in The Herald May 12. To Messrs. Hilquit, Harriman, Hayes and Benham is extended the privilege of making any reply they may choose during the same period.

NOTES AND COMMENT

A small merchant on West Madison street, Chicago, displays a large sign across the front of his store, reading as follows:

"Do you know who pays for all the big advertisements?"

Well, we ought to know. We have been paying for them long enough. But is that any argument for dealing with the small merchant who displays this sign? A dozen more signs should be placed on the same building. Here are a few suggestions:

Do you know who pays for all the delivery wagons owned by small merchants on this street?

Do you know who pays for all the store buildings, bookkeepers, fixtures and duplicate stocks of goods?

Do you know who pays for all the small advertisements and hand bills?

Do you know whether this butcher is a store-owner, or only a wage-agent for Armour, Swift, Libby and company?

Gabriel d'Annunzio, the Italian poet and novelist, has joined the Socialist movement. His reason for so doing is that, "as an intellectual man he proceeds toward life." Whereupon the Haverhill Gazette says:

"The fact that so many of the brainy men of the old world have similar inclinations should serve to convince American publicists that Socialism is not wholly composed of glittering generalities and half truths. Beneath it all is a widespread discontent with existing social conditions which must be frankly met and overcome by dealing with the people in a spirit of candor. Political quackery is about played out, as it should be."

A merchant of Chicago refused lately to advertise in a journal which he acknowledged was the best thing for his line of goods he had seen because "they've got us; those big stores will have us all in five years, and this street, now lined with store fronts, will be a fine residence boulevard lined with trees, half hiding the stone front homes on either side. No, sir; it's no use me advertising." Had he a vision of the future state?

With the fusion populists in Kansas and elsewhere wildly declaring that Bryan is a "good enough Socialist for them," and the democratic followers of Bryan vociferously denying the populist claims and declaring that Bryan is not Socialistic at all, the anything-for-office-reformers are in a real bad way. Genuine Socialists, looking on the unseemly spectacle, will know what course to pursue. Socialists will vote for Debs.

Comrade E. V. Debs received a message of hearty congratulations from H. D. Harrell, of Bevington, Iowa. Mr. Harrell is the old engineer our comrade used to fire for in the days when he stood before the open door of a blazing furnace. It is twenty-five years ago and more, but the fire of friendship kindled then has never gone out, the old love remains.

Comrades, do not think for a moment that any one to whom you have intrusted the welfare of your organization in a trying period desires to perpetuate himself in office. No such desire exists, and at the proper time, when we have weathered this little storm, as we shall, the future of the party and its officers will be wholly in your hands.

"The flopping from Bryan to Debs," says the Washington Post, "is becoming a rather serious matter. It may be necessary to coax Debs off the track." Imagine that old, decrepit, hag of a party led by Bryan coaxing a really progressive movement to halt or its candidate to leave the track! Let us all laugh!

Socialists will not wait for 1904 or 1908 to vote for Socialism. All over the country they see that their opportunity comes this year, that it is presented by the Social Democratic party and the candidacy of Eugene V. Debs.

Loyalty at the present juncture to the cause of Socialism demands fidelity to the spirit and purpose of the Social Democratic party.

Act well your part in the present, that the progress of Socialism may not be retarded or impaired.

How long would a "United" party based upon broken promises be united?

THE UNION CONFERENCE

The Committees of Nine, on union, elected by the S. D. P. and the S. L. P. conventions, respectively, met at the Labor Lyceum, New York, on Sunday morning, March 25, 1900.

There were present, of the S. L. P. Committee: Harriman and Benham, California; Hilquit, Stone and Sieverman, New York; Hayes, Ohio; White, Connecticut; Fenner, Massachusetts, and Barnes, Pennsylvania.

Of the S. D. P. Committee there were present: Heath, Wisconsin; Stedman, Illinois; Chase, Carey and Haile, Massachusetts; Lonergan, Connecticut; Hoehn, Missouri, and Butscher, New York. Berger of Wisconsin was absent.

Harriman was elected chairman and Chase vice-chairman of the conference. N. I. Stone was elected secretary of the S. L. P. Committee and Margaret Haile of the S. D. P. Committee, to act jointly as secretary of the conference.

A Press Committee was elected, consisting of Benham and Heath, to be subject to the orders of the conference.

It was voted to take up the following questions in their order: (1) Party name; (2) Constitution; (3) Press; (4) Candidates; (5) Platform.

It was voted that unless a party division is called for by one or more members, the committee vote as one body.

It was voted to discuss all of the points in the order already adopted, before a vote is taken—each proposition to come up as a separate vote, after all had been discussed.

A motion, by Hilquit, that all minority reports should be avoided where there is a division on party lines, and in all other cases only one recommendation under each head should be submitted, was lost. The S. D. P. Committee decided that while they hoped for unanimous reports, they recognized the right of every member of their committee to present a minority report if he saw fit.

Adjourned at 1 o'clock to meet at 2. The afternoon session opened on the question of party name. Discussion continued until 7 p. m., every member of the S. L. P. Committee arguing against the name S. D. P. and favoring the name United Socialist Party, with the exception of Max Hayes, who was not present during this discussion; while the Social Democrats urged the adoption of the name S. D. P. Neither side seemed able to convince the other, and the session adjourned, to take up the question in separate committee during the evening, with the hope of arriving at some basis of action to be submitted next morning.

The Monday morning session opened with a report by Chase on behalf of the Social Democrats, that the latter had decided to recommend that two names should be submitted to general vote—the name S. D. P. as the choice of the S. D. P. Committee, and one other name to be selected by the S. L. P. Committee. The latter thereupon recommended the submission of the name "United Socialist Party" as their choice.

The location of the seat of the National Executive Board was next taken up. Several nominations were made, in joint session, viz., New York, Chicago, New Haven, Cleveland, Springfield, Mass., and Boston. After party consultation, the S. D. P. delegates reported that they would recommend the submission of three names: Chicago, New York and Springfield. The S. L. P. delegates thereupon reported their willingness to submit only Springfield, provided the S. D. P. would agree to do the same. The latter, after again withdrawing for consultation, reported that five of their number were in favor of agreeing to this proposition, but that two would submit a minority report in favor of Chicago. The minority were Seymour Stedman and Margaret Haile. It was moved by Sieverman and seconded by Stone that no minority reports be permitted except by permission of a majority of either committee.

It was therefore resolved that Springfield, Mass., be recommended as the seat of the National Executive Board until the next national convention. On this point a minority report will be submitted recommending Chicago.

On the question of the composition and manner of electing the National Executive Board, a motion was made by the S. L. P. to have a provisional N. E. C. consisting of ten members, five from each party, two to be selected from New York, two from Massachusetts and one from Connecticut, respectively, by each party.

Stedman moved a substitute, providing for a National Council to be composed of one member elected by each state, which should meet in council at least once a year and consider the interests and the needs of the movement in every part of the country; and should nominate candidates for a National Executive Committee of nine members, who should be elected by referendum. Members of the National Council to be subject to recall by the membership of their respective states, and members of the N. E. C. to be subject to recall by the membership at large.

A roll call showed eight S. L. P.'s in favor of the former (the Eastern) plan, and two Social Democrats. Hoehn, Butscher, Lonergan, Stedman and Haile favored the National Council plan. It was decided to bring in a minority report on this point also.

Adjourned to 7:30 p. m.

Tuesday morning's session opened with nomination of candidates for provisional National Executive Board. Five candidates are to be elected by each party, and it was decided that each committee should nominate ten names, in order to give the party membership a choice. The S. D. P. nominees were: From New York—Butscher, Phillips, Gordon and Guier.

From Massachusetts—Chase, McCarty, Jones of Springfield and Haile.

From Connecticut—W. P. Lonergan of Rockville and Geo. Sweetland of Bristol.

The S. L. P. nominees were: From New York—Sieverman of Rochester, Slobodin, Hilquit and Stone of New York.

From Massachusetts—Fenner of Worcester, Wrenn of Springfield, Oliver and Kaplan of Boston.

From Connecticut—White and Bartels of New Haven.

As to a permanent National Executive Board, it was moved by the S. L. P. that until the 1st of February, 1901, the affairs of the united parties should be conducted by the provisional committee, and that from and after that date the same committee should be continued as the permanent N. E. C.—any state so desiring, to have the right to send an additional member at its own expense.

At this point Seymour Stedman renewed his motion for a N. E. C. to be nominated by a National Council consisting of one member from each state, and elected by referendum. This time his motion carried, and that point was removed from the minority report.

The vote on this question, by roll call, showed S. D. P.—6 to 1 in favor, and S. L. P. 5 to 3.

As a method of providing for their successors, it was voted that during the month of January in each year the members in the respective states shall elect their respective members of the National Council.

On motion of Chase, the matter of Presidential Candidates was taken up, and promptly disposed of, Eugene V. Debs for President and Job Harriman for Vice-President being the unanimous choice.

The platform question was settled, without discussion, by the unanimous adoption of the S. L. P. declaration of principles, with the addition of the S. D. P. demands.

It was decided to recommend that the two parties unite upon Eugene Dietzgen, the nominee of the S. D. P., for delegate to the International Convention at Paris in 1900.

The constitution was next taken up, and the best points in each constitution adopted as far as practicable. But the time was so limited and the points of difference so numerous that the result could not be expected to be entirely satisfactory. Much more is this true of the important and difficult question of party press.

Benham offered a motion that "each member of the party shall designate which paper of a list to be furnished by the N. E. C. such member desires, and that each paper so ordered shall be paid for at the rate of 10 cents per quarter by the N. E. C.; this plan to take effect upon the consummation of union."

Harriman moved an amendment that on account of the different basis upon which the S. D. Herald was maintained, that paper be sent to the members of the party on the 12-cents-per-quarter arrangement for the first six months, and that the scheme proposed by Comrade Benham be thereafter applied. At this point the conference adjourned for supper, and when it reconvened the latter amendment was withdrawn. There were amendments and substitutes galore and a lot of unintelligible discussion. Carey had a plan for utilizing both the People and the S. D. Herald as official papers, one to be devoted more particularly to party news, discussions, etc., and the other to general propaganda work; but it met with no favor. The plan that was finally agreed to was a modification of a substitute offered by Hilquit, that the S. D. Herald may be sent to all the present members of the S. D. P. and to such new members of the united parties as may select it, for six months after the consummation of the union, the N. E. C. to pay for the same to the amount of $60 per week. At the expiration of the six months all the papers are to be put on the same basis; each member to select which one he pleases, and to have it paid for by the N. E. C. out of his dues to that body, at the rate of 10 cents per quarter.

It was voted that the members of both parties in Chicago should elect a National Campaign Committee to serve during the coming national campaign.

The question of party name, the conference decided to submit in the following shape:

- (1) Are you in favor of the name Social Democratic Party?
 - (2) Are you in favor of the name United Socialist Party?
- (Vote for one only.)

The Socialist Club of Springfield, Mo., sixty strong, has decided to affiliate with the Social Democratic Party. We have the movement, comrades, and a name that in no way impedes it. On with the work of organization! Three cheers for Springfield and the Social Democratic Party.

(3) In case the party name voted for by you fails to obtain the concurrent majority of both parties, shall the name receive the majority of the total vote of both parties be adopted?

(Vote yes or no.)

On the question of referendum it was voted that a committee of two, consisting of one from each party, be elected to receive the votes of the various sections and branches from the secretaries of both parties, who shall first count and note the number of votes, and to publish a detailed account of the votes cast by each section and branch in the S. D. Herald and The People. The votes of those only who are in good standing on April 1st and present at the meeting to be counted. Butcher and Stone were elected such committee.

The two secretaries, N. I. Stone and Margaret Haile, together with Wm. Butcher, of Brooklyn, were instructed to put the proceedings of the conference into shape and prepare them for referendum vote, to be submitted not later than April 15th; all votes to be in the hands of the respective national secretaries by May 30th.

At 11:20 p. m., Tuesday, I left the hall, in order to catch the midnight train for Boston, leaving Comrades Hoehn, Butcher and Carey, together with the entire S. L. P. Committee, to arrange a few remaining details of the constitution.

Comrade Social Democrats: (My pen lingers over the name as I write it. It has grown to mean more to me, within the past six weeks, than it ever did before.)

In submitting the above report I want to say that in the seven years of my work in the Socialist movement I have served on innumerable committees, of more or less importance, and never in all my experience have I had to make a report of results which were so unsatisfactory to me. A work of such magnitude and complexity as the unification of two distinct and self-conscious organizations should never have been crowded into the short space of three days. It was utterly impossible to do justice to each important issue. Some trivial matters received more than their just share of time and attention, while other very important matters had to be rushed through without proper consideration. I refer more particularly now to the question of the party press. Though it was one of the most difficult and knottiest of all the problems before us, it was left to the last evening, coming up under the head of constitution. During the latter and most decisive part of the discussion only five Social Democrats were present, viz., Stedman, Hoehn, Carey, Butcher and myself. The others had gone home. The full committee of the S. L. P. was present to the last minute. The decision was arrived at at about 11 o'clock, and I had to take my train at 12 for Boston. Comrade Stedman had also to leave at 12 for Washington. We had been hard at work for three exciting days, under the most intense nervous strain, and were tired out, mentally and physically. Nevertheless, "the remnant that survived" put up the best fight it could, firmly believing that a national organ which goes into the hands of every member of the party is necessary for the solidarity of the party, and as well as to guarantee to the party a mouthpiece under all possible exigencies. We favored the plan proposed by Comrade Carey of retaining both The People and The Herald, the one to be devoted more particularly to party matters, and the other making a specialty of general propaganda, or of scientific Socialism put in popular form. But that plan was not considered for a moment by our S. L. P. conferees. When we finally submitted to the plan adopted, I, for one, did so with the strongest kind of a conviction that it would not be acceptable to our membership, and probably not to the majority of the S. L. P. either. I believe I know the intelligence and good sense of our Social Democrats sufficiently well to predict that the plan submitted will be voted down, and that another and more generally satisfactory, and more workable, plan will have to be devised. I am frank to confess that I think we made an awful botch of the Party Press question, and we deserve to be forced to get to work and formulate a better one.

Again, in regard to the location of the national headquarters at Springfield, Mass., I was not at all in accord with other members of our committee. In the first place, I do not believe in submitting only one name, and saying to our members, "You must choose Springfield, or nothing." I want that the members shall at least have a chance to say whether they wish to have the headquarters removed from Chicago. This line of action on other matters forced me to say, at the conference, that I believed our constituents had some rights which even this joint committee was bound to respect, and one of the S. L. P. members took issue with me and scouted the idea, saying that our constituents had not entered into the consideration before, and it was rather late in the day to bring them up now; all of which may have been the case with them, but certainly was not with some of our committee. I had never heard any Social Democrat express any dissatisfaction with Chicago as the party's headquarters, nor with the way the affairs of the national party have been conducted. On the contrary, I had heard nothing but commendation and satisfaction with the wonderful progress of our party in its short existence of eighteen months, and the energy and ability of our national officers who have succeeded, with precious little help from the East, in getting organized in thirty-two different states already; and I could see no reason why any committee, joint or otherwise, should take it upon itself to say, without giving the members any choice in the matter, "The national headquarters of this movement must be removed from Chicago. They must be established in Springfield. You have no other choice."

And this is the reason, Comrades, why I, for one, desired to put in a minority report recommending Chicago, so that you might at least have a voice in the location of our national headquarters.

As to the reasons why the headquarters of a great national movement should be located somewhere near the center of the field which it is to cover, I shall have something to say another time. Harmony in the report of the conference committee is desirable—but we gave the two parties a choice in the matter of name. Why should you not also have a choice as to the location of the national headquarters?

Margaret Haile.

Boston, Mass.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS DANCE

"First annual reception, ball and card party, Branch 4 of the Thirteenth ward, Social Democratic Party of America, Central Park hall, Thursday, March 29, 1900. Music by Stewart's orchestra." These are the words that appeared on the program, and they convey the main points of the affair, except that Comrade James Wright of said Branch 4, was the originator and manager of the entertainment throughout, and to him all credit is due.

Notwithstanding the announcement that this was a Socialist's party, sixty-two business men placed their advertisements in the program, which latter also contained the party platform, dictionary definitions of Socialism, and mention of some Socialistic literature. One of the best dances in Chicago was engaged, and one gentleman present said he never saw a better gathering of people in the city. Many had procured tickets who could not attend, on account of the snowstorm that visited us that day and evening, while the financial side of the affair was not what it would have been had the great union strikes been settled.

However, when the grand march started up with seventy-five couples on the floor, among them republicans and democrats, the Socialists of the Thirteenth ward knew that they were present at a "function" long to be remembered. Nearly every gentleman bought his lady some roses at the door before tackling his neighbor on some point in economics, and all voted the party a great success.

Eighteen card tables were in use in an adjoining room for prizes in euche. Gorgeous gold-laced badges for committeemen were provided—Comrade Wright never does things half way. Long after midnight an intermission was allowed, during which the young folks had cream and refreshments at the restaurant below, and the older folks went home. The writer does not know just when the home waltz was danced, but by the time he reached home he was undecided whether to turn in or sit up for breakfast.

Great surprise was expressed by all at the large number of persons present, the good management, the number of inquiries about Socialism, and the demand for programs. In fact, those programs are now old, but still find a ready market among those who were prevented from attending this first annual party of Branch 4, Illinois.

TREMENDOUS DEMONSTRATION BY MINERS OF KANSAS

The meetings addressed by our candidate for president, Eugene V. Debs, in the mining districts of Kansas were unprecedented in numbers and enthusiasm. Everywhere there was a great outpouring of the people; at Pittsburg, Weir City and Scammon the occasion amounted to a tremendous popular demonstration. The capitalists were sweating and the old party politicians terror-stricken. The big papers instructed their correspondents to send in "no report of the Debs meetings," thus showing that so far as the capitalist press is concerned there is to be a conspiracy of silence. As a result, although the demonstrations are unprecedented and the greatest ever known in that section of the country, the purveyors of news are not chirping a syllable. There were parades, torchlight processions and brass bands at each point. Nowhere could half the people get into the biggest halls provided. They surged in the streets by hundreds trying to get near enough to catch even the applause.

At Weir City Comrade Clemens of Topeka, who has joined the party and is being roundly abused for it by the fusion press, joined Debs and delivered a stirring address.

At Pittsburg Comrade Debs was met by Comrade Wayland and the staff of the Appeal to Reason. The occasion had called together a number of active Social Democrats and a small convention was held with Wayland, Clemens, Lipscomb, Holcomb and others present. All agreed that Kansas would this fall give the old parties a red-hot chase for second if not first place.

Two meetings were held at Weir, afternoon and evening, and the workers were wild with enthusiasm. This is the district in which 2,000 miners are on strike and where Judge Williams imprisoned Reese for contempt. Williams was denounced and defied and the listening thousands cheered to the echo.

These demonstrations, it is universally admitted, will not only win the strike, but will bring the whole mass of the miners into the union and the Social Democratic party.

The old party managers are cracking their whips, but the miners of Kansas can't be stopped; they are rushing in our direction. The Cornflower state is being shaken from center to circumference. The glow of the social revolution is spreading everywhere.

TO KING MCKINLEY, THANKS

By Eugene V. Brewster

There seems to be several stages of economic progression in the minds of men. The child mind first sees real worthiness and hope in only one party—the republican party. It sees in that party the best, the worthiest and the most prosperous. Next, in the natural evolution of the mind it sees that the democratic party is more progressive and is not controlled so much by the money power. It sees a few bright and shining stars like Bryan, Altgeld, Williams and Lentz and it begins to see that there is not in it so much of the capitalistic and plundering class. Then next, it sees the beauties of the single-tax and Henry Georgeism and promptly concludes that it is a panacea. In the next stage of progression it sees the wondrous beauty of co-operation and collectivism and it flies to Socialism as a sure, safe and final harbor of economic rest. Then, however, it begins to read of Proudhon and Steven Pearl Andrews; it reads of Spencer's "Coming Slavery"; it begins to see that we never had any real competition and that there could be no monopoly if the ground were freed and if there were no special privileges; so then it concludes that the only proper remedy for all our ills is absolute individualism or philosophic anarchism. But this too soon proves insufficient and incompetent and the mind again returns to Socialism and there it remains. This

About the Party Name

Editor of The Herald: As the members of the S. D. P. and S. L. P. will have to pass a final and decisive vote upon all proceedings of the unity committee, it will be well for all our party papers to open their columns freely and widely for a thorough discussion of the principal points involved.

I would like the comrades of both parties to carefully consider two points, which in my mind are the most important ones—namely, the name and the press.

As to the name, the unity committee offers you a selection between the Social Democratic party and United Socialist party. Which shall it be?

Dropping aside all the petty jealousies and prejudices and having in view the good and welfare of the Socialist movement, let us consider coolly and calmly which of those two names shall have the preference. "United Socialist party" indicates the unification of forces, and for this very reason I am opposed to this name. A name that bears in itself a historical fact is entirely unsuitable for a name of a party that expects to live long.

Suppose in a year or two there should be a split in the United Socialist party. Who can assure me that this is impossible? Where, then, will this name come in? Or will you allow it to stand unchanged as a laughing stock for our enemies? And besides, United Socialist party indicates not only the union of forces, but also reminds one of the previous disunion, disharmony among Socialists. To approach strangers with the view to convert them to our cause, with a name that indicates our previous hatred, disunion, disharmony would be, if not suicidal, at least a very bad policy.

Now, let us see what are the objections to the name "Social Democratic party." As far as seen from Benham's report, they are as follows:

(1) The name is meaningless from the Socialist standpoint.

(2) The name is misleading and loses its significance when translated into English.

(3) The Socialist conventions in the United States in 1877 and 1884, although composed almost entirely of Germans, had discarded the name.

(4) The prospect of its being contested by the democratic party in any or all states.

(5) Does not indicate the unification of forces.

(6) A new name would gather new material and dissolve all prejudice that might exist.

Let us take up the objections one by one.

(1) To say the name "Social Democratic" is meaningless from the Socialist standpoint is the least that could be expected from a Socialist editor, as Comrade Benham is. Why, this name is used nearly all over Europe by millions of Socialist voters. This name has a history of nearly thirty years' of unceasing struggle for our ideals by our brave German comrades, many of whom have lost their lives in this struggle. Hundreds of years of prison life of our best comrades have made the name "Social Democrat" sufficiently meaningful to be dreaded and feared by the capitalist and ruling class, and to be respected by the exploited working man's class. This is the very reason why this name became an international name. It is a name any Socialist may be proud of.

(2) When I want to translate something into English, I consult in doubtful cases an authority. Webster, in his dictionary, tells me that "social" means pertaining to society; relating to men living in society; or to the public as an aggregate body, as social interests, social pleasures, social benefits, social happiness, social duties. Can Benham's second objection stand in view of this definition?

(3) Because the German Socialists in 1877 and 1884, in their despair of not seeing any progress of the movement among the English-speaking element, thought it best to drop the name "Social Democratic" and adopt instead "Socialist Labor," is absolutely no reason why we should do the same. And more, that history has proven the fallacy of it. The dropping of the name did not help much the growth of the party, while the enormous success of the young Social Democratic party has proven beyond doubt that its name does not stand in its way. By the way, I will correct Mr. Benham, that in 1877 the convention dropped the name of the "Workingmen's party," not of the "Social Democratic," and under this last name the Socialists in Chicago proceeded to elect in 1879 four candidates to the city council and three men to the Illinois legislature.

(4) This objection can be applied to the name "United Socialist party," where, instead of the democrats, the contesting party would be the De Leonites.

(5) This objection was discussed by me already in my argument against the name "United Socialist party."

(6) The name "Social Democratic party," thanks to its wonderful achievements, has been freely advertised all over the country, and is, therefore, more than any other name capable of gathering new material.

Then again, a new name would dissolve all prejudices that might exist (Stone.) It looks to me as if this is the only real—not imaginary—objection which is behind the rest of the objections. But in the name of common sense, if there are still some prejudices against the Social Democratic party, then a union of forces must be out of place. But I hope there are none, and if a union of forces shall be, it shall be under the time-honored, international name, the "Social Democratic party."

As to the press, I will consider it at another time. M. J. Konikow, M. D. Boston.

"Horseshoe Joe" Bobs Up

The Boers never could have made a stand against Great Britain if their generals had been at outs with and distrusted each other. At the time of our own revolution the same was true. Yet some narrow-minded politicians in the Socialist parties would have us (force us?) to follow the leadership of men who can not, and ought not, to be trusted. Would-be statesmen whose promises are carried out in the same way that United States senators usually carry out those they make before election.

To give our members no choice as to the location of headquarters, but simply say they must be moved from the present central location to a small borough on the coast, and further try to clinch the matter by a motion that no member or members of the committee shall be allowed to make a minority report, is cowardly as well as tricky.

After making such a good propaganda under the international name of Social Democratic party it would be very unfortunate for Socialism in this country to make another change of name. With the name "United" Socialist party we would waste our lives away explaining to every new recruit that we were once "disunited," which would suggest itself to all who heard the name.

The name Social Democratic party will stand. Horseshoe Joe.

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS WILL VOTE FOR DEBS

The New York correspondent of the Columbus (Ohio) Citizen writes interestingly on the political outlook as follows:

"Supremely confident that nothing can defeat him, and with six kinds of serpents coddled in his bosom, the Nebraska goeth up against trouble.

"The terror-stricken millionaires decided, as I said, in 1896 that they would never again be caught napping. Every dollar now spent effectively in regaining their old place is worth one hundred spent to fight a radical.

"But if by any chance their plans do fail, will Mr. Bryan be as strong as four years ago? Emphatically no. If McKinley had the practically unanimous support of the millionaires Bryan had as unanimous a support from the so-called revolutionary elements. But this year it is different.

"The populists declare they will not support him. But we won't say anything about them, for they are only a name. Either they have gone back to their old parties or become Socialists, anyway.

"Bryan's real opposition will come from Eugene V. Debs, who enthusiastically supported him in 1896. Mr. Debs is the most loved labor leader in this country. His personal following is in the hundreds of thousands. He has never been a candidate for office since years ago he served as a democratic member of the Indiana legislature. It was Debs who nominated the late Senator Voorhees, 'The Sycamore of the Wabash,' for the United States senate.

"That there is a growing Socialistic sentiment in this country every student of the situation knows. The movement has captured two Massachusetts cities and found a sort of expression in Jones' candidacy for governor of your state. But until this time Socialism in the United States has been controlled by the foreign element. Debs was nominated by a convention of American Socialists. His vast personal following has almost unanimously supported Bryan as the best man. That they will vote for Debs by the thousand and possibly the hundreds of thousands is certain.

"It means McKinley's re-election. But as Mr. Brewster, who led the 'dollar dinner' forces and who has deserted Bryan for Debs, says, the people no longer are content to choose the 'lesser of two evils' or to take 'a step in advance.' They are now advocating revolution. Bryan wants to 'smash the trusts.' Debs says the trusts are a natural growth and that the remedy lies in state ownership.

"It would seem that in some quarters some of Mr. Bryan's friends are beginning to smell the treason that is in their camp. Governor Stone of Missouri only Saturday sounded the note of warning. But it is too late I fear, Mr. Bryan. Disgusted by your lack of what Dr. Parkhurst calls 'crisis virtue' in your dealing with Croker and his thieves, your friends have begun to leave you. Had you remained defiant and met defeat they would have fought to the last like the 'Old Guard.' But defeated, as you are almost certain to be, either in the convention or in the campaign that follows, they will remember you as the man whose ambition blocked his progress and caused his fall. "Bryan is not our Rienz. Who is that man? There are thousands who think his name is Eugene V. Debs."

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS AND BRYAN

St. Louis Globe-Democrat: Some of the democratic papers are beginning to intimate that the Socialist ticket is going to take a good many votes away from Bryan this year. The Socialists have just nominated Debs for president in a convention held in Indianapolis. Debs belongs to a so-called doubtful state, as he is attributed to Indiana.

The Bryanite papers' fears of Debs are not quite so ill founded as they may appear superficially to be. Almost every cranky and folly for which Debs stands is advocated by Bryan or by some of the leaders of his sect. Nearly every one of the imbecilities which Debs will urge during the canvass will probably have a place in the platform of the Bryanite party. Thus all the votes which Debs will poll will be taken from the elements which otherwise would rally around the democratic candidate. This is probably what the Bryanite papers had in mind when they intimated that the Socialist ticket would injure their own chances in some degree. In this way the ticket recently put up at Indianapolis will hit the ticket to be nominated a few weeks hence at Kansas City.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

Adjourned.

Attitude Toward Trades Unions

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

First—Join the union of your respective trade.

Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.

Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.

Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.

Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.

Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.

Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

Hurrah for a Movement that Moves

Liberal, Missouri

Branch No. 15, Social Democratic party, Liberal, Mo., put out a full city ticket to be voted at election April 3. Our convention was called and the opposition had their cappers on hand to run our convention, but when the chairman called for "roll call" and announced that all those whose names were read would have a vote and that vote would be by public ballot, the cappers were completely knocked out. When they failed in this a "mass convention" was called and one of their cappers who was handy with chalk wrote on the sidewalks, "Fusion convention tonight."

We have always had a most rock-ribbed democracy in this state, and an equally pronounced republican party. This town was founded by infidels, with the result that a rival town just across the railroad was laid out by Christians, and these two elements have been at daggers' points for fifteen years. But when a foe so dangerous as a "Socialist organization" came upon the ground, infidel and Christian, prohibitionist and whiskey men, democrats and republicans joined hearts and hands to fight us. One big hardware dealer went so far as to pull our ticket down from the polling place and stamp and spit on it. Another, a banker, tore our tickets down. The banker is an uncompromising (?) democrat; the other a republican. The branch may have these two parties arrested for a violation of the state law. However, there is a spirit among our boys that says: "Forgive them; they know not what they do."

Clark Brayden, a Christian preacher, debated here twenty days with one of the opposite faith and failed to convince them, but one of our comrades spoke thirty minutes on the street corner and every faith and creed went straightway to mass convention. We now feel that we can soon make all supporters of capitalism join heart and hand in this country.

We elected one alderman, Comrade George Mellor. The following is the vote:

Mayor—Jones (Fus.), 69; Lipscomb (S. D.), 39.
Marshal—Cramer (Fus.), 76; Blake (S. D.), 27.
Collector—Linglefelt (Fus.), 56; Wheeler (S. D.), 50.

Aldermen—First ward, P. Thompson (S. D.), 19; J. Betz (expelled S. D.), 33. Second ward, George Mellor (S. D.), 28; Lapp (Fus.), 19.

It will be seen that the fusion party put in nomination John Betz, a member of our branch. The branch gave him the option of refusing the fusion nomination or retiring from the branch and he retired. He was a new member and does not fully comprehend the class struggle or the tactics necessary to defeat the capitalist class. When he does, we feel that he will be with us.

Dr. D. F. Eskew has been nominated for congress in the Fourteenth congressional district and a full county ticket will be in the field. Poplar Bluff seeks the state convention. L.

Saginaw, Michigan

Social Democrats at Saginaw, Mich., have good reason to be satisfied with the result of their first local campaign. An average vote of over 800 cast for the three principal candidates on the ticket is a beginning that they may well be proud of. It is another demonstration, the force and significance of which considered as a whole, cannot be ignored, that the name of the party, with its principles and tactics, are becoming more acceptable every day to the American people. One of the really laughable incidents connected with the Saginaw campaign was the contention of the leading democratic paper there that the democratic party will give Socialists what they want; yet in the same paper the things that Socialists want are ridiculed. The democratic party is a hypocritical aggregation of place-hunters that no honest man can trust. Following is the vote:

Mayor—Cooney (S. D.), 621.
Treasurer—Jones (S. D.), 636.
Police Justice—Clark (S. D.), 802.

Pacific, Wisconsin

The steadfast little band of Social Democrats at Pacific, Wis., which has stood firm for the principles of the party for nearly two years, was rewarded at the town election April 3 with a gain in the vote over last year of 500 per cent. The comrades emphatically declined an endorsement of their candidates, proffered by the republicans (mark it!), and went into the election alone, with the result stated. Two years ago Comrade H. J. Dunham, who is a farmer, was the only Socialist in the town of Pacific, and was then known as a "crank" and a "fool"; today he is recognized as the father of the Social Democratic party in his county and has congenial company around him.

Pana, Illinois

The comrades at Pana, Ill., with the co-operation of the members of the Social Labor party section, have reaffirmed the national platform, adopted a ringing municipal platform in favor of municipal electric plant, abolition of the contract system, eight hours' day, improved streets, the union label and union coal, and a free public library, and nominated Comrade John A. Bruell for alderman in the Fourth ward. The Herald hopes that Comrade Bruell will receive the support of every wage-worker in his ward at the election on the 17th inst. He deserves it, and if elected, as we expect he will be, they will have a faithful and fearless champion of their class in the council.

Battle Creek, Michigan

The Social Democratic party, as a result of the election reported last week, secures second place on the official ballot at the next election. This is in line with the record. Social Democrats, stand pat!

Plattsmouth, Nebraska

At Plattsmouth, Neb., there was a Social Democratic city ticket and the comrades succeeded in electing Frank Newman as councilman from the Fourth ward. This is the first success of the party in Bryan's home state and augurs well for the movement in the west. The Social Democratic party is a movement, not a sect. Comrades, keep your heads level and speed the work of organization everywhere.

Burlington, Iowa

The head of the Social Democratic party ticket at Burlington, Iowa, polled more than 3 per cent of the vote, giving the party official standing in municipal elections.

THE MAJORITY REPORT

To the Members of the S. D. P. and S. L. P.

Comrades:

The respective national conventions of our parties, having instructed us to devise a basis for the union of our parties, we herewith submit for your approval the result of our deliberations.

In doing this we are well aware of the fact that the treaties submitted by us are not perfect in all respects and that many provisions of the same could be improved upon. But we beg the comrades to bear in mind how difficult it is to satisfy every member of both parties on all details in preparing a plan of organization and action involving so many propositions as the one before you.

The provisions, moreover, are but temporary in nature, and our parties, once united, will have ample opportunity to modify the same at the next national convention or in the manner provided by the proposed constitution, if a modification should at any time seem advisable.

The desire uppermost in the minds of your committees during their joint deliberations was to devise a plan in its principal features satisfactory to both parties and one by which we could, once formally united, start on the great work of propaganda and organization involved in the approaching national campaign, without further loss of time.

With this end in view we have proposed a provisional party administration to be elected while the vote is being taken on this treaty, and to be constituted as soon as the result of the vote is ascertained.

The only point on which two propositions have been submitted to the voters, is that of the party name. We have no recommendations to make on the subject, but leave this important matter entirely in the hands of the membership for such decision as they may think best.

The committee has submitted to you the question as to whether you will abide by the decision of the majority of both parties on a joint count with respect to the name, if such procedure becomes necessary. An affirmative vote on this question will secure union, a negative vote may become fatal to union. With these few explanations we leave the matter to the wisdom and good sense of the comrades. They will successfully accomplish the great work to which we have contributed to the best of our abilities.

Respectfully submitted for the conference on unity,

Wm. Butscher,
N. I. Stone.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN—THE ISSUE CLEARLY STATED

When the Indianapolis convention adjourned at three o'clock in the afternoon of March 9 and the comrades bade each other good-bye, probably not one of their number returned home with any other opinion or belief than that the work begun at Rochester, continued at Indianapolis and delegated to the joint committee of eighteen to be consummated at New York, would result in the unification of the Social Democratic party with the Socialist Labor party faction represented by Messrs. Harriman, Hillquit and Hayes. It was the hope of all, and that hope was backed by a resolution to do all that could be done to give it fruition. As hope enlarged, courage was exalted and every delegate who remained to witness the closing scene of the convention when comrades mingled their voices in a parting song, felt that a step of vast importance had been taken from which there was no going back. If the delegates from Rochester, fully empowered as we must believe them to have been to negotiate with us, had gone into the conference at New York and said: "Comrades, in order to effect union we agreed to accept the name Social Democratic, in case certain men were nominated at Indianapolis," the honorable thing would have been done and the way to a perfect union might have been clear at this time. Instead of that the delegates went to New York opposed to the name, although the condition on which they agreed to accept it and urge it upon the other members of their committee had been complied with, one of their number who was willing at Indianapolis to accept the name as a proper one (in case Harriman and Hayes were nominated!) repudiating it at New York as unsuited to the movement in this country!

It will be a difficult undertaking for any one, however skilled in sophistical and distorted statement, to convince any honest Social Democrat of the ingenuousness of an argument against a name for the Debs and Harriman ticket which was wholly acceptable for a ticket composed of Harriman and Hayes. Comrades will not overlook this in making up their conclusion upon the matter now before them for their votes. Either the man who said the name would be all right with the Harriman-Hayes ticket dissimulated, or his declaration to pledge himself to the name with Debs and Harriman for candidates was the inception of a trick which the committee, of which he was a member, developed and took the full benefit of at New York. Over and over again the member of the Rochester committee who finds himself in the unenviable position of resorting to dissimulation and trickery, declared that Debs and Harriman would be the ideal ticket; he eulogized Debs but would commit himself to the name, not with Debs as a candidate, but only on condition that our convention nominated Harriman and Hayes. It may now well be doubted whether in the event of the convention doing what he wished it to do, he would have done otherwise than just what he did in the New York conference. If this plain and truthful statement of the case as to that single member of their committee is the sort of tactics that the rank and file of the Socialist Labor party endorse, then union has at no time been desirable.

It is suggested that the members of the Rochester committee exceeded their powers at Indianapolis. If that is true none know it better than the members of that committee themselves. Attention is called to the fact that two of that committee were nominees of the Rochester convention for president and vice-president: Are we to believe that these men came to our convention on a mission of unity, deliberately in behalf of unity pledged themselves upon a question of importance, that is the name, and then with perfect unanimity violated their pledges at New York? If yes, then the logic of the case compels us to one conclusion: We were tricked. If the visiting delegates exceeded their powers they were conscious of it at the time, knew the pledges could not be kept, never had any serious intention of "writing to the S. L. P. sections to urge the acceptance of the name," and instead of being at Indianapolis for union they were there to wreck the Social Democratic Party.

It may be argued that the pressure brought to bear upon the S. L. P. committee in New York was too great for them to withstand. If that is the case, then the rank and file of both parties, and especially of the Socialist Labor Party, are confronted by this situation, that an honorable understanding arrived at in Indianapolis was utterly disregarded at New York and that to New York influence is attributable the failure of the movement for union. Members of the S. L. P. delegation at Indianapolis, before the agreement had been made, assured us that within twenty-four hours afterwards they could have all their committee of nine at Indianapolis; they said they would wire their comrades and the joint committee could complete its work within a week after adjournment. Instead of that the joint meeting was fixed at New York, mainly because of arguments advanced by Morris Hillquit, with the result that what the rank and file, at least outside of New York, honestly desired, has now been indefinitely postponed.

Calm and dispassionate review of all the circumstances must satisfy every reasonable man that a perfectly fair and honorable agreement, made, so far as Social Democrats were concerned in it, to effect a genuine union of Socialist forces, was cast aside and disregarded with the contempt which characterizes old party politicians. If the delegates of the S. L. P. had no intention of keeping their pledges, the pledges should never have been given. There was no sort of coercion used to force these pledges from them; they accepted the proposition with their eyes wide open, understood what they were doing, conceded that it was the way to union, professed great satisfaction with the outcome, and yet, in spite of the clearest understanding, not one of them even referred to it at the New York conference until the matter was brought up by one of our committee and then the claim was set up that if the pledges had been given it was "with conditions" other than that of candidates, and this claim is groundless and untrue.

If the members of the S. L. P. committee understood what they were doing, they deliberately blocked negotiations for union and upon them rests responsibility for the failure. What their real object was members may decide for themselves.

Comrades of the Social Democratic Party will act cautiously at this time and not be misled by specious argument in favor of a union which, if accomplished, will not unite. The danger now is in being misled by superficially fair and deceptive argument. The situation calls for careful consideration of the facts in the case, and plausible or hysterical appeal for union despite the facts.

Comrades, stand pat for the Social Democratic Party and for Socialism!

OUR LETTER BOX

Rep. MacCartney on "No Union"

Editor The Herald: I have perused the manifesto of the national executive board and wish to say that the position taken by the board is perfectly sound, the issuance of the manifesto was a step absolutely necessary. There can now be no doubt, in view of the undisputed facts in the case, that the leaders of the Social Labor party faction have broken faith, and, as I review the entire history of the case from the Rochester convention up to the present time, I can come to but one conclusion—viz., that the object of these leaders from the very first has been to either capture or disrupt the Social Democratic party. The results of the peace conference on Thursday evening were widely scattered among the delegates immediately, and it was in view of the understanding on the part of the delegates that the Social Labor party committee had pledged themselves to the name Social Democratic and had consented to the submission of that name only for the referendum vote, that the convention unanimously on Friday morning nominated Mr. Job Harriman for vice president on motion of Comrade Victor Berger. We "delivered the goods" in the nomination of Harriman, but at the New York conference the Social Labor party committee refused to deliver in return.

The proposition of the Social Labor party delegation in regard to the type of referendum vote was this: A majority of both parties voting as one. This proposition, the Indianapolis convention in specific and unmistakable terms refused to consider; nay, it went further, and instructed its committee of nine that the only vote was to be a vote of each party voting separately. The well-understood inference of this definite instruction was that concurrence on the name could alone effect union. It will be remembered that the last clause of the majority report accepted by the convention was that all questions, "save only the name," where there was non-concurrence, could be resubmitted to a referendum. That shows clearly the attitude of the convention. The name was to be submitted to concurrent vote, each party voting separately; and that but once.

But behold, the New York conference, the creature so far as our committee of nine was concerned, delicately disregarded instructions and swept aside these limitations as to the method of voting. First, this conference says there shall be a separate referendum vote; then, going outside its instructions, it asks this question of the members of the party: "In case the party name voted by you fails to obtain the concurrent majority of both parties, shall the name receiving the majority of the total vote of both parties be adopted?"

Do you not see, comrades, that in this last referendum the committee has definitely disobeyed the express instructions of the very power which created it—that is, the Indianapolis convention. Moreover, by this maneuver, the separate referendum vote might as well not be taken, for the ultimate vote is a majority of both parties voting as one, which, as I have said, the convention absolutely rejected.

Pledges have been broken by the Social Labor party leaders, instructions have been violated by the Social Democratic party committee of nine, and unless the party unitedly supports the national executive it will either be swallowed in a dishonorable union or disrupted and scattered.

F. O. MacCartney.

"Where Are We At?"

Dear Comrades of the Social Democratic Party of America: A word with you, please.

The mountain has labored; have you seen the mouse? The lion and the lamb lay down together. Where is the lamb now? It is no fault of the lion if he is not inside the belly of his voracious majesty.

But "the best laid plans of mice and men gang aft agley."

Have you read the manifesto of our comrades, the executive committee of Social Democratic party of America (write this name the biggest capital letters in the case)?

Have you read the report of the conference by our true and faithful, Comrade Margaret Haile, in the Herald of April 7?

I know you have, and, like myself, you are "hot."

Tricked, queered and buncoed, but the steersmen didn't succeed in landing their game.

I need not repeat the details of the conspiracy by which it was sought, by chicanery, double-dealing, duplicity and deceit, to annihilate, destroy and wipe out of existence, our beloved party, with its splendid working organization, through which we have achieved such marvelous and unprecedented success and victories, and leave to us as a reward for all our labor, of the privations and sacrifices of our brave comrades who had served us at the head of our organization, leave to us for all our toil in the past only a memory.

You are familiar with the details; you know how every promise made to us at our convention at Indianapolis by the visiting committee of the Social Labor party has been outrageously and shamefully violated—the pledge to allow us to retain our name—Social Democratic. The agreement that the referendum vote should be taken by each organization separately, the tacit understanding that we should be treated fairly and justly in the adjustment of our interests in the consolidation.

All, all have been flagrantly violated, and now our executive committee submits to us a referendum vote the plain question: Do we desire a union with this people who have so basely deceived us and have shown a disposition to boss and control everything in sight? I say everything in sight—viz., the name, the location of headquarters, the party organ and the location from which are drawn the executive board (from three eastern states). They want all and leave us holding the bag, without even one snipe.

Our committee asks, do we desire such a union?

I am persuaded that, with me, you will, with one unanimous voice, vote no! a thousand times no! For those who have deceived us once cannot be trusted again.

Let us stand by our organization; its brief but glorious history cannot be obliterated. Let us buckle on our armor and force the fight against capitalism. Add conquest to conquest, and never give up the struggle until we succeed in writing the loved name of Social Democracy on the dome of the capitol at Washington.

Comrades, I need not appeal to you. I need not urge you, for I know you will do your duty, because I know the kind of stuff a Social Democrat is made of.

All hail! the Social Democratic party of America!

As to union with the S. L. P., "the stuff is off!" And now in closing, a word of cheer for you dear faithful comrade, Margaret Haile. Dry up your tears; don't weep any more, cast off those habiliments of mourning, but be joyful with great joy, for your beloved is not dead, although mangled and bleeding from the stabs of pretended friends. The loved name "SOCIAL DEMOCRAT" still lives, and will survive and push the fight for real freedom in defiance of attacks from open or covert foes. Now let us vote! Indianapolis, Ind. J. R. Backus.

A Committeeman's Opinion

Editor of the Herald: Two names are to be submitted for a referendum vote. The question then arises which is the more appropriate of the two, the Social Democratic Party or the United Socialist Party. In arguing for the former will say that the name is now extensively known throughout the country on account of our vigorous agitation, our successes in Massachusetts and elsewhere, our tolerant spirit and our friendliness toward the trade union movement. Many thousands of workmen have learned to know the S. D. P. as the friend of the working class. Further, that name is dear to five thousand comrades in the movement who, if deprived of it, may to a degree lose their enthusiasm and refrain from doing their best for the cause.

In addition the name Social Democratic exemplifies exactly what the Socialists are striving for, and plainly demonstrates that our ultimate aim is a Social Democracy.

Therefore, if a name is to be chosen according to what it defines, no better one than Social Democratic can be found if you hunt through all the dictionaries in the land. On the other hand, we have the name United Socialist party. What does it represent? A united Socialist movement? Oh, no! for there are the De Leonites, the Jones non-partisan, the Socialist Party of Oklahoma, the municipal Socialists, the Christian Socialists and many other kinds and creeds who are not with us and have their own hobbies about ushering in the Co-operative Commonwealth. The name would be erroneous as long as all men and women who believe in Socialism are not in one organization.

Further, won't we look pretty abbreviated as the U. S. Party? People will think we are an adjunct of Uncle Sam or some other old uncle and a lot of explanation will have to be done to satisfy the inquisitive.

Now, comrades, the question narrows itself down to this: Two names have been submitted; one is a recognized factor with a history, the other is erroneous in the first place, and secondly is entirely unknown and must begin to build up a reputation. Also two names having been submitted no one can say you were forced to accept; but of your own free will you decided to adopt the best one, which I am convinced is the S. D. P.

Furthermore, if that name is adopted I am confident the union will be cemented closer and better than if the other one prevails and our union will be as perfect and harmonious as can possibly be expected.

It is to be hoped that all comrades will look at this question of name from the broadest possible view and vote for S. D. P. so as to accomplish the greatest good for the Socialist movement.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Wm. Butscher.

Hayes Explains

Editor The Herald: A thunderclap from a clear sky could not have surprised me more than did the issue of the Herald of this date. I am not only astonished, but pained and chagrined at the "manifesto" promulgated by the Social Democratic party executive board. Your board accuses me, among others, in so many words, of double dealing and trickery. I plead not guilty, and as a Socialist and an American citizen I demand the right to be heard in my own defense, as well as in defense of my colleagues and comrades, feeling confident that the fair-minded and tolerant members of your party will judge impartially and render a verdict in accordance with the facts.

This is no time for hysteria and wild insinuations!

The "manifesto" says: "Mr. Max Hayes, on the floor of the convention, Thursday afternoon, announced his personal choice of the name Social Democratic, and in strong terms pledged himself and his paper, the Cleveland Citizen, to the name."

Correct. Again, in reporting action of New York conference: "It must be noted also that while Mr. Max Hayes, as heretofore described, had pledged himself to work for the name, nevertheless he evaded the responsibility by absenting himself from the conference while the question of name was under discussion. He promised Comrade Leonard D. Abbott in New York that he would attend a session and speak in favor of the name. This he failed to do."

This implies trickery, cowardice and a breaking of pledges on my part. It is a jumble of half-truths. When I returned to Cleveland and reported the action of the Indianapolis convention at a large meeting of local Socialists, as Social Democratic party comrades will testify, I declared in favor of accepting the Social Democratic name. Several Social Labor party comrades announced that they would vote for another name, which, according to Socialist ethics as I understand them, they had a right to do. In the Citizen of March 17 the following was printed in a leading editorial on the question of amalgamation: "The Social Democratic party will urge that its name be accepted by the united movement rather than that a new name be selected, and thus increase the confusion. It is pointed out that no stigma is attached to the title, that it is international in scope, and that it expresses perfectly what the labor movement stands for. The writer believes that the arguments are good ones, and that, if legal difficulties do not stand in the way, the easiest and most satisfactory manner to settle that question is to adopt the name Social Democratic party. We are not fetish-worshippers. A principle under any name is still the principle."

As regards the various meetings and conferences, I did not dodge anything. When the so-called "peace conference" took place in the Indianapolis hotel I was addressing a Social Democratic mass meeting in the criminal court room. When the name question was being discussed in New York I attended the weekly meeting of the Central Federated union and addressed that body, having been pressed by a number of Socialist delegates to do so, and Monday morning I addressed the striking cigarmakers. Questioned by Comrade Abbott, Saturday evening, whether I favored the Social Democratic party name, I replied that I did. I do yet, and will vote for it.

But I did not believe, and do not believe now, in making of the name a greater issue than of principles, platform, ticket, tactics, unification and everything else combined, as a few of our hysterical and excited friends are attempting to do. While our committees were wrangling over this insignificant question—like a lot of school boys would over the momentous question whether a red marble is as pretty as a yellow one and would roll as well and as far—I was, to the best of my ability, attempting to make a few more converts to our common cause.

It is gross unfairness to charge our people with duplicity, and to harbor all sorts of senseless suspicion. I believe that Comrades Harriman, Hillquit and the others, who have sacrificed so nobly and have worked so hard in overthrowing bossism, are deserving of great credit for what they have done. The membership of our party demands that two names be submitted to a general vote, and it looks to a man up a tree as though your executive board is not in favor of one of the fundamental doctrines of Socialism—i. e., majority rule. If the name should fail to receive the concurrent majority of both parties, what then? Continue to vote all summer? Or should the majority lay down to the minority? Who said De Leonism! Again, we are accused of being but a "few hundred kangaroos." Well, what are you afraid of then?

Many other absurd charges and insinuations appear in the "manifesto" that I have neither the time nor inclination to reply to. I am sure that the Social Democratic party membership will not allow itself to be influenced by a display of I-won't-play-in-your-yard spirit. I don't believe that Comrades Carey, Chase, Hoehn, Butcher and Lonergan will claim that they were tricked and treated unfairly; in fact, all expressed the greatest pleasure at the happy termination of negotiations in New York, and I believe even Comrades Stedman and Haile were satisfied as a whole.

There are some people in this world who are bound to have their own way in even the most minute particulars. They will rule or ruin, being incapable of real leadership, a welding together of homogeneous elements. Such a man is Daniel De Leon. There are others. Nevertheless, hurrah for Socialism in our time! Max Hayes.

BERLIN'S MIXTURE

Wolfish men. There had been a large fire in Boston. Flames had swept through a large building and left it a charred wreck. Workmen were at work in the ruins, clearing out the debris. Every few minutes they would hurl pieces of charred wood out of the windows down into the street.

Down below were crouched groups of ragged men and haggard women and aged children. They crowded round the barricading ropes. They watched with strained eyes for the falling of debris. They sprang, like infuriated wolves, upon it when it fell. They fought like devils for a bit of board. They risked life in the attempt to secure a handful of fuel. They rushed off, hideously triumphant, to their lairs, with their pitiful prizes. They were veritable human wolves!

And this in the last year of human evolution! This in civilized America! What an awful picture is this! Human beings, with the capabilities, the desires, the aspirations of divine manhood, forced to fight like wolves for charred rubbish!

A curse upon us, comrades, if we use not every energy to overpower the dehumanizing influence of greed, that degrades manhood to the depth of wolfishness.

Civilized wolves. In a March magazine was an interesting illustrated article on the "civilized wolf." It described a certain farm where wolves were bred and raised, and showed the influence of training and environment upon wolfish nature.

The illustrations admirably showed the marvelous effect. The beasts that to us have ever been the incarnation of fury and ferocity were as docile as dogs and as gentle as kittens. Their savage natures had been subdued, and they gathered affectionately about their human teachers.

If such a result can be effected with wolf nature, what may not be accomplished with human nature? If a savage brute, with wolfish instincts and wolfish desires, can be subdued into gentleness, is there not hope for those human unfortunates who are gentle by instinct and savage only by environment?

The aim of Socialism is not to change human nature. It proposes simply to give a chance to assert its true self. It aims to remove the present environmental influences of injustice and oppression, and allow man to become manly, instead of forcing him to become a wolf.

All that oppressed manhood wants is a fair chance. Socialism will give that chance. Won't you help to give them Socialism?

The profane plumber. One very cold day the waterpipes in my kitchen froze. By and by the plumber came with his tools to repair the damage. We retired to the dining room and left him in sole possession.

After a while there came subdued murmurs from the kitchen. It was like the muttering of a volcano. Presently the eruption of profanity broke forth, and the sulphuric fumes penetrated the room where we were.

A pious person in the room waxed wroth at the sound. How dared the plumber use such language? Why couldn't he do a simple job without scorching the air with his lurid oaths? and sympathized.

I went out to see and scold. I saw the plumber was in a little two-foot-square cubby-hole under the sink, using, or trying to use, a large wrench. He struggled, he skinned his knuckles, he sweat, he swore—and plenty of it. I returned. Said I to the pious person, after describing the scene: "When you have crawled into that hole and used that wrench, you may talk about profanity. Not till then." He declined to experiment.

And the pious persons who denounce the sins of labor had better get into labor's environment before they make any criticism. Let every parson be a plumber for six months, and then he will deal more leniently with the art of cursing.

A votary of voteless vice. Talking of pious people reminds me of another class who are ignorantly blocking the way of labor's advance toward justice.

In a certain graveyard in Wayland, Mass., there is a tombstone with a peculiar epitaph thereon. It reads thus: "Here lies the body of Dr. M—, who never cast a vote in his life. 'Oh such is the kingdom of heaven.'"

There is a large and increasing class who, in their shortsighted ignorance, think that any contact with politics and politicians is contaminating. They believe that they imperil their souls' eternal interest if they tamper with things political and temporal.

A man in Topsham, Mass., lately boasted that he had not cast a vote for over fifty years. The fellow actually boasted in the fact of his heroic abstinence from the smirching sins of politics.

The man was a fool and a rascal. He was a fool in not making any attempt to better the conditions in which he was forced to live. He was a knave in not reaching out his political hand to rescue the victims who by the industrial conditions were forced to die.

A vote is a man's most sacred possession. He who scorns it is a true traitor to himself and his fellows. He who uses it aright is a true savior of his race.

The real and the ideal. Dr. J. W. Winkley, in a recent address in Boston on mental healing thus voiced the modern need:

"In order to develop the highest degree of harmony in life we need an ideal world, and ideal men and women in it. We need an ideal social and industrial order, an ideal home, an ideal state and an ideal church. We need an ideal brotherhood, and a pure democracy organized to make 'liberty, equality, fraternity' a reality among men. The watchword of such a democracy would be 'fellowship'; its motto, 'service to men'; its aim and object, the attainment of the ideal; its principle, that of unity.

Fine words. Very fine words. But I doubt, after my experience with such idealists, if a single one of those who applauded those sentiments with gloved fingers had the remotest idea of putting these things into practice.

An ideal is useless, unless it inspires and impels us to realize it. It is one thing to rhapsodize, but it is another thing to realize. An ideal in the clouds is well enough, but a reality in common life is worth all the ideals in cloudland.

Winkley speaks truly when he says, 'Its principle is unity.' And I speak more truly when I say, 'Its principle is political unity.' Only when men band themselves together to make an ideal a reality by means of their votes will any progress be made. When this is done, nothing can prevent our onward march.

It may be retarded by obstacles, the road may be made more difficult, but eventually we shall make the real and the ideal meet in common life on common ground.

Merlin.

MUSINGS

Most people, including many school children, know by this time that in this great and godly empire city a naughty, naughty actress put on the stage a shockingly wicked play, and that a holy wave of virtuous indignation swept both the actress and the play off the stage. Everybody is, no doubt, also aware that two righteous, pure and moral newspapers, so righteous, so pure, and so moral, by the way, that only a couple of years ago hundreds of libraries, clubs and reading rooms felt impelled to exclude them from circulation, were instrumental in getting the actress aforesaid arraigned before a magistrate, handed over to a grand jury and indicted.

Now we have the trial of the "vile and filthy" play, and the same two news sheets vie with each other in publishing—for the fourth time—all the shocking "evidence," all the suggestive horrors; in giving the nastiest possible flavors to every innocent-looking detail connected with the very thing that was supposed to be undermining the good work of the pulpit, the Sunday school and that dear old soul, Mrs. Grundy. It is safe to say that these modern Tartuffes, these daily Pecksniffians, these Comstocks and Steads are doing more mischief than all the sinners from Boccaccio to Guy de Maupassant put together.

After the above was written the jury in the case acquitted all the defendants, but has failed to stigmatize in proper terms the conduct of the sensation mongers who should have been in the stocks if justice and capitalism were not mutually excluding terms.

To observe the workings of this crime-begotten, sorrow-laden, corrupt and corrupting system, and to think that sensible, civilized, feeling and reasoning human beings tolerate it, is enough to drive a sane man crazy, and the most hopeful, the most optimistic as desperate as the inmates of a house on fire, with every outlet cut off. Here are people ever on the lookout for some great national calamity, for mine-explosions, claiming victims by the hundred, for life-devouring conflagrations, for war, and famine, and pestilence; who spread like vultures over the carcasses of the slain, and live on death like hyenas; who gloat over theft and adultery as if the breaking of the ten commandments were a natural part of their assets; who would stop the blood circulation in the rest of mankind if it could raise the circulation of their sheets.

Talk about Nero fiddling while Rome was ablaze! That worthy had at least no sordid mercenary motives. Besides, he was an emperor, as mad as Peter (No. 3) of Russia, as ambitious as the first Napoleon, and as depraved as that holy person Alexander Borgia. The modern dealers in horrors and disasters have all their senses, very little ambition, and wield not a scepter, but a pen—and even that by proxy—while turning blood and tears, crime and misery into dollars and cents.

And yet they are only the creatures of this social system which is about as social and systematic as are death and chaos respectively. Oh, for one of Carey's smiles! I am in a terribly gloomy mood. M. Winchevsky.

THE INDIANAPOLIS COMPACT

Edwards' Statement and Affidavit

"On the evening of March 8 at the New Occidental hotel, Indianapolis, a meeting was held for the purpose, if possible, of arriving at an agreement. There were present as representatives of the Socialist Labor party Morris Hillquit, Job Harriman and G. B. Benham, and F. G. R. Gordon, Wm. Mailly, C. R. Martin, A. S. Edwards, J. C. Chase, J. F. Carey, V. L. Berger. Gordon stated that since E. V. Debs declined to accept the nomination, it had been deemed advisable to hold a meeting of a few members of the S. D. P. and the S. L. P. delegates to see if an agreement honorable to both parties could not be made. He said the delegates to the convention were willing to accept Harriman and Hayes as the candidates, and if that was done he thought the delegates of the S. L. P. should be asked to give some assurance that the name Social Democratic would be accepted.

"Morris Hillquit was the first to respond. He said, in substance, that if the convention on the following day nominated Harriman and Hayes there would be no difficulty about the name; that he would give his personal pledge (which he then and there did) that so far as he was concerned the name Social Democratic would be the only one submitted by the joint conference committee; further, he said, that he would give those present the moral assurance that the name Social Democratic would be accepted by the committee of nine representing the S. L. P.

"The next to speak was G. B. Benham. He said that he agreed fully with Mr. Hillquit, that the name was an acceptable one and that such an arrangement as was proposed would be satisfactory and settle the question of name. He gave his personal pledge.

"Job Harriman followed with the explicit and unqualified statement that he was in full accord with Hillquit, gave his personal pledge and added that he would write to the sections of the S. L. P. urging acceptance of the name Social Democratic party.

"Then Victor L. Berger said, in substance: 'If Debs can be induced to accept and the ticket nominated is, Debs and Harriman, will you then stand by the name and will your pledges be good? I have some personal influence with Debs and am willing to make another effort. I do not know that I can succeed, but I will try, and if he does accept will you recommend only the name Social Democratic party?'

"To this Hillquit was first to reply. This he did in precise terms, declaring, as on the first proposition, that he would stand for the one name, Social Democratic party.

"Benham declined to commit himself as he had done on the Harriman-Hayes proposition.

"Harriman expressly declared that he accepted the proposition and would stand by the agreement on the name if the ticket were Debs and Harriman.

"Hayes being absent, the question was asked whether he would approve and accept the action of the meeting. Both Hillquit and Harriman stated that Hayes' indorsement and pledge could be relied upon and any agreement made there would be sanctioned by him.

"To the foregoing I wish to add that no other conditions or provisions whatever were suggested or agreed upon; that the members of the S. D. P. on their part accepted the conclusion arrived at in good faith, and that it was the distinct understanding when the meeting adjourned that if the convention nominated Debs and Harriman no other name than that of Social Democratic party would be submitted by the joint conference.

"A. S. Edwards."

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this third day of April, A. D. 1900.

Chas. H. Soelke, Notary Public.

Gordon's Statement and Affidavit

"I believe it to be in the interest of truth and justice that a statement be made in reference to the peace conference held on Thursday, March 8, at the Occidental Hotel. The convention had adjourned in confusion and considerable bad feeling. Comrade Mailly requested me to talk to certain comrades who were 'pretty hot under the collar.' On the way to the hotel I suggested to Comrades Hillquit and Mailly that we get a half-dozen of the warring comrades into a room and see if we could not effect some kind of peace that would be honorable to all. This was agreed to, and I lost no time in bringing it about. I sought Victor L. Berger who had been especially anxious to retain the name and spirit of the Social Democratic Party and asked him to attend. He at first flatly refused, stating he was afraid of trickery, but finally consented after much urging upon the part of Comrade Mailly and myself and also upon an invitation of Comrade Carey.

Comrade Berger had been invited to attend a conference of the oldest friends of Comrade E. V. Debs for the purpose of prevailing upon Debs to accept the nomination, but upon the urgent demands and appeals of Comrades Mailly, Carey and Gordon he consented to attend the peace conference instead. I made the proposition at the peace conference that in case Debs would not accept the nomination the S. D. P. nominate Harriman and Hays for the standard bearers of the united party and that the S. L. P. on their part pledge themselves to accept and work for the name Social Democratic Party as the official name of the united party. Comrades Hillquit and Harriman both agreed to this, Comrade Harriman pledging himself to write to all S. L. P. sections, appealing to them to vote for the name Social Democratic Party.

"Comrade Berger then put this question: 'How would it be about the name then in case Debs will run, do you still agree in that case to the name Social Democratic Party?' After some discussion, the point was made by Comrade Mailly, that Debs was the choice of all, that we, the S. D. P. were to accept Harriman and the S. L. P., on their part accept the name of the S. D. P. This was agreed to by both Harriman and Hillquit. Comrade Benham did not agree to this.

"The peace conference adjourned to meet at 11:30 p. m. In the meantime the other conference had succeeded in gaining Debs' consent to accept the nomination; he (Debs) giving his consent at almost the very minute that the peace conference adjourned. Things having been settled to the satisfaction of all, the 11:30 conference was not called simply because Debs' acceptance had settled everything.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That the Socialist policy and tactics toward the trade union movement as agreed upon at the National Conventions in Rochester and Indianapolis is hereby reaffirmed and adopted as the policy of the United Party.

QUESTION 2.

Are you in favor of the following platform? Vote yes or no.

PLATFORM.

The party of the United States, in convention assembled, reaffirms its allegiance to the revolutionary principles of International Socialism and declares the supreme political issue in America to-day, to be the contest between the working class and the capitalist class for the possession of the power of government. The party affirms its steadfast purpose to use those powers, once achieved, to destroy wage slavery, abolish the institution of private property in the means of production, and establish the co-operative commonwealth.

In the United States, as in all other civilized countries, the natural order of economic development has separated society into two antagonistic classes—the capitalists, a comparatively small class, the possessors of all the modern means of production and distribution (land, mines, machinery and means of transportation and communication), and the large and ever increasing class of wage workers possessing no means of production.

This economic supremacy has secured to the dominant class the full control of the government, the pulpit, the schools and the public press, thereby making it the arbiter of the fate of the working class, while it is reducing it to a condition of dependence, economically exploited and oppressed, intellectually and physically crippled and degraded and its political equality rendered a bitter mockery; and the contest between these two classes grows ever sharper. Hand in hand with the growth of monopolies goes the annihilation of small industries and the middle class depending upon them; ever larger grows the multitude of destitute wage workers and of the unemployed, and ever fiercer the struggle between the class of the exploiter and the exploited, the capitalists and the wage workers.

The evil effects of capitalist production are intensified by the recurring industrial crises continually rendering the existence of the greater part of the population more precarious and uncertain, which amply proves that the modern means of production have outgrown the existing social order based on production for profit.

Human energy and natural resources are wasted for individual gain.

Ignorance is fostered that wage slavery may be perpetuated. Science and invention are perverted to the exploitation of men, women and children.

The lives and liberties of the working class are recklessly sacrificed for profit. Wars are fomented between nations; indiscriminate slaughter is encouraged; the destruction of whole races is sanctioned in order that the capitalist class may extend its commercial dominion abroad and enhance its supremacy at home.

The introduction of a new and higher order of society is the historic mission of the working class. All other classes despite their apparent or actual conflicts are interested in the upholding of the system of private ownership of the means of production. We therefore charge that in this country the Democratic, Republican and all other parties which do not stand for the complete overthrow of the capitalist system of production are alike the tools of the capitalist class.

The working class can not, however, act as a class in its struggle against the collective power of the capitalist class except by constituting itself into a political party, distinct and opposed to all parties formed by the propertied classes.

We, therefore, call upon the wage workers of the United States, without distinction of color, race or sex, and upon all citizens in sympathy with the historic mission of the working class to organize under the banner of the Socialist Labor Party, as a party truly representing the interests of the toiling masses and uncompromisingly waging war upon the exploiting class, until the system of wage slavery shall be abolished and the Co-operative Commonwealth shall be established.

Pending the accomplishment of this our ultimate purpose, we pledge every effort of the Socialist Labor Party for the immediate improvement of the condition of labor, and also for the securing of its progressive demands.

"Working men of all countries, unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains, and a world to gain!"

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First. Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second. The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third. The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation and communication; all water works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth. The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth. The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth. The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh. Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth. National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth. Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh. The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth. Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery, by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man. As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

ATTITUDE TOWARD TRADE UNIONS

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

First—Join the union of your respective trade.

Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.

Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.

Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.

Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.

Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.

Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

THE ISSUES OF UNITY

Eugene V. Debs Clearly States His Position. Exhaustive Enunciation of His Views

OPINIONS OF MEMBERS AND OTHERS

Comrades:—A crisis is upon us. The very life of our party is threatened. Shall it emerge from the ordeal in glory or perish in ignominy? If we be men, fit and worthy to have custody of a party to which the working class are turning with a last hope, the issue is not in doubt for a single instant.

Shall the S. D. P. and the S. L. P. unite upon the basis agreed to and recommended by the majority of the New York conference?

I have read the report of the conference, the manifesto of the executive board of the S. D. P., the replies thereto by Comrades Harriman, Hillquit, Hayes and Benham, the current issues of the press of both parties, as also a vast number of personal communications relative to the unity proceedings, and after a careful survey of the entire situation and the maturest deliberation of which I am capable, I have arrived at a conclusion, and I now propose to meet the responsibilities that rest upon me in my triple capacity as member, official and candidate, by declaring my position in clear and unequivocal terms and facing without fear all its consequences, be they what they may.

As I write I see the blanched faces, the appealing eyes of the working class, to whom alone, and my own conscience, I am finally accountable for my acts. Rather than betray them and turn their hope into despair, I would destroy myself, and if in what I now have to say I write a word not dictated by my conscience and approved by my best judgment, I hope the hand that pens it may be palsied at its task.

Dismissing all personal prejudice and all partisan predilection and viewing the matter solely from the standpoint of a socialist to whom the cause is dearer far than his own life, I take my stand against union of the parties on the basis proposed by the New York conference, and until our party has been rescued from the maelstrom which threatens to engulf it, against union on any terms. I say this with the fullest realization of what it means to break with comrades loved and true, yet sustained by the conviction that duty demands it, that time will triumphantly vindicate the action and that the odium of to-day will be the honor of the future.

Let I be misunderstood let me write it in plain words. I am opposed to union because I favor unity. In the present strained situation there can be unity without union, but there can be none with it; and as certain as it is effected, if such should be the verdict of the ballot, the Social Democratic party will be disrupted and there will be no unity in the united party.

In arriving at my conclusions I have been guided largely by my intuitions, but I shall try to make the reasons which actuated me as clear as I can to my comrades of both parties.

It will be remembered that a short time previous to the convention I wrote an article for the Herald saying that in my opinion the time for union had not yet arrived, which article provoked considerable criticism. For months I had been doing all I consistently could to harmonize the two parties and to pave the way to unification. There were many obstacles in the way. For years the official organ of the S. L. P. had drilled it into their members that the S. D. P. consisted of a lot of freaks, frauds and fakirs without a redeeming feature. They were fairly saturated with the virus of hate and contempt. Hundreds of them, members of the anti-De Leon party, and I speak advisedly, still rankle with that feeling which, to even the superficial observer, is but ill concealed. It is this sort of training in the school of intolerance, fanaticism and hate which have given the party a spirit irreconcilably in conflict with that of the Social Democratic party which by its high-minded toleration has appealed so successfully to the American people in behalf of socialism that its complete supremacy as the socialist party was only a question of months, while at every step of its progress its members were derided as "half-baked socialists" by the very men who now, we are assured, insist upon union. The spirit is still there, whatever may be said to the contrary, and it is this that, in my opinion, prevented the S. L. P. representatives from even temporarily accepting our name, even though they had to change their own, even though some of them assured us it would be done and even though our identity be totally obliterated on the eve of a national campaign.

It is this spirit with which I have to deal and it is this that largely forms the basis of my opposition to union.

I shall not attempt to follow the unity proceedings through their tortuous windings. I care nothing about quibbles and hair-splitting technicalities. There are those who are schooled in artifice, in word jugglery, in the legerdemain of smooth and cunning phrase which can be made to mean anything or nothing, and they are proud of it. I am not an adept in such practice and have no desire to be.

When the representatives of the S. L. P. appeared at our convention and assured us that they wanted unity I unqualifiedly accepted their word and persuaded myself that my misgivings had been exaggerated; nor shall I now charge them with violating their pledges, although it seems clear to me in the light of subsequent proceedings that in their zeal to effect union they exceeded the scope of their authority and went counter to the wishes of their party.

Comrade Harriman will doubtless recall the conversation he and I had as we together walked to the convention hall to attend the closing session at which I accepted the nomination. Without any reservation whatever he assured me that the name Social Democratic party was entirely acceptable to him and that he was confident that his party felt as he did, and that there would be no opposition upon that point. He also added that on the eve of a campaign was no time to make a change, and that whatever change might seem desirable could be made after the national election by the united party.

Now I admit that the name in itself amounts to little and should not stand in the way of union one instant, but it is what the name stands for, the spirit, the morale, the party identity, that amounts to everything and (let us not be deceived) it is this that inspired the labored arguments in opposition to the name, so that while the name itself is of no consequence it covers the central, controlling issue between the two parties and in rejecting it, the S. L. P. representatives, inadvertently perhaps, struck the proposed union a fatal blow, and as I now view it, fortunately so for the cause of socialism.

To what extent did this conflict of party spirit actually dominate the conference?

Referring to the name, the attitude of the S. L. P. amounted to this: "We are going to change our name, but will not have yours." In the matter of headquarters each party said in effect: "I can't have it and therefore you shan't," and made a selection ridiculously unsuitable for a national party.

Without going further it is perfectly obvious that in all of this the S. L. P. shrewdly yielded little or nothing, while our party surrendered practically everything, and the adoption of the majority report would simply mean the swallowing up of the Social Democratic party and its domination by an element composed largely of men who had despised and ridiculed it and who would to-day scorn the suggestion of union did they not see the handwriting on the wall; and this perfectly plain and evident fact many of our own comrades who are clamoring for unconditional union seem utterly unable to see.

If unity was possible when the conference met, it was no longer possible when it closed. It is admitted that they had a complicated situation to deal with and if they did the best they could they were simply unequal to the task, and so far as failure is chargeable to the conference I have no more fault to find with the S. L. P. representatives than with our own. From first to last there was sparring for party advantage instead of an honest, controlling desire for unification, and this in itself, conspicuous in every important feature of the negotiations, proves beyond cavil the conflict of party spirit.

Some of our own comrades will deny this, for while they are members of the S. D. P. they have the spirit of the S. L. P., just as there are members of the latter who are in accord with the spirit of our party.

The National Executive Board has been severely censured for issuing its manifesto in advance of the majority report. My name is not attached to it, but I am equally responsible with my four associates for what it contains. If it is "criminal" and "malicious," as charged, I claim my full share of the odium, not from any sense of self-sacrifice, but because I endorse, if not the specific grounds, the action, and am prepared to answer for my share of it.

The purport of the report had gone out. It had struck the party with the effect of a lightning stroke and revolt threatened instantaneously. Prompt action was required in the emergency and the board took it and will stand by it until time vindicates their fealty and turns denunciation into praise. Had they not acted as they did the party would ere this be deserted of hundreds of loyal comrades, the very ones who worked and sacrificed, and put up the money, too, to make the national party what it is to-day. I am not now discussing the justice of revolt. They do occur and unless the executive board had taken prompt action the S. D. P. would have been disrupted, and even though part of it had united with the S. L. P. we would no more have a united Socialist party than we had before.

I have said that the spirit of the two parties, as a whole, is totally dissimilar and it is this fact rather than the incidents to it, that is responsible for the failure of the union. The S. L. P. was trained in the bitter school of bigotry and intolerance. It must preserve an air frigidly scientific. Emotion and sentiment must be banished. Hard and stern are the party methods and it must be confined strictly to the working class. Tolerance is a crime. Members must suspicion each other and rows must occur at such intervals as to prevent the party from getting beyond the bounds of a mere faction. It has taken years to cultivate and intensify this spirit that has dwarfed socialism in America, and it cannot be overcome in a day nor by resolutions passed in a conference.

Diametrically opposite to this is the spirit of the S. D. P. It has from the beginning been tolerant and hospitable.

It pursued the even tenor of its way through showers of abuse. Its dignified policy, its spirit of toleration appealed to the people, while its comrades loved and trusted each other and worked with inexpressible zeal for its success.

I cheerfully admit that in some places the spirit of the parties has so modified as to make union entirely feasible. But this is not true of the parties at large. Take Chicago, for example. We are told the S. L. P. have 600 comrades there. Not one of them all told have ever been at our headquarters, even since the unity negotiations have been in progress. At heart they have no use for our comrades and hold them in contempt, and it should also be said that our comrades have no use for them. This is the fact, and there is no use trying to conceal it. Taken as a whole, they will not work together, and all the resolutions that can be passed will not unite them in their present spirit toward each other. To put them into one party at this time means simply disruption and disaster. Better far to keep them in separate parties until the logic of events has ripened them for union.

In discussing the spirit of the S. L. P. I am struck by the exhibition of it which appears in Comrade Benham's letter, which I wish every one of our comrades to read with care, especially the paragraphs in which he charges our executive board, in innuendo so direct that specific averment could add nothing to its force, with being in the pay of capitalism. I confess to being greatly surprised in the source in which that spirit had found expression. Comrade Benham's letter must furnish its own comment so far as I am concerned. After reading what he has to say, and the manner in which he says it, I am satisfied that he and I are not ready to belong to the same socialist party.

It seems hardly possible that this is the same comrade who in the convention made the touching plea to me to accept the nomination for president, inviting me to his California home to have my health and vigor restored by the balmy breezes of the tropics; and yet was it not that same evening at the "peace conference" that he took the ground that if I were given the nomination he would insist upon our party giving up its name? Just why my nomination should be at the expense of my party's name I will leave others to explain.

It has been charged that Victor Berger knew that I would accept the nomination before he went into the "peace conference." This is not true. Up to the time the convention adjourned I had steadfastly refused the nomination. I left the hall with my brother alone, and after a long struggle with myself concluded to accept the nomination. I did not know a conference was held and did not see Berger until after it adjourned. He could not have known that I would accept the nomination for I had not at that time communicated the fact to any one.

For the reasons herein imperfectly stated I am opposed to union at this time, and I shall vote against it and also against the report of the majority and use my best efforts to defeat both.

I propose to stand by the Social Democratic party until conditions favor a united party; and my judgment is that this consummation will not be deferred long after the national election. In the meantime I stand ready to work in harmony with the S. L. P., and so far as I am concerned, we shall go into the national campaign with a united front.

I shall not resign the nomination at this time unless the party desires it. I did not want the nomination at the convention, but I shall not desert when the party needs me. Nor can I be neutral, as some of my best loved comrades insist, without feeling myself guilty of cowardice. The effect upon myself personally is of no consequence, and I am not concerned upon that point. It has been intimated that the reason I did not want the nomination this year was because I wished to nurse my chances till the party became strong enough to elect. All I have to say is that the presidency and all other offices are alike to me and I do not think there is a man living who has a stronger aversion than I to public office; and that I am a candidate at all is simply because of an overwhelming sense of party duty.

And now I respectfully propose the following line of action: First, let us decide against union at this time and reject the majority report.

Second, elect a national executive board of nine members by referendum vote. Upon this board women should be represented by their own sex.

Third, elect a national secretary and treasurer and editor of the official organ.

Fourth, elect a national campaign committee.

This program can be carried out in short order and then we will be ready to co-operate with the S. L. P. in moving on the enemy with a united front. If they are willing to unite on candidates, that can be readily arranged, and if not we will go into the campaign with our own. We will lose no time in attacking the common enemy. Wherever it is possible let the two parties unite on candidates and otherwise co-operate, and where this cannot be done there need at least be no friction. Separately organized, the parties can move forward on parallel lines and accomplish the substantial objects of unity; while these must certainly be defeated by an enforced union of elements that are fundamentally dissimilar and inharmonious.

Such co-operation as is herein indicated would be in the nature of a preparatory stage for final union and would inevitably lead to such a result.

And now a closing word to our comrades. How far you may agree or disagree with me I do not know. I have given you as accurately as I could a transcript of my head and heart. I have written without malice toward any one and with the cause of socialism the guiding influence in reaching my decisions. You are to decide this important question and I have no wish to control your action. Having faith in your judgment and your loyalty I have no fear of the verdict you will render.

I hope that each of you will carefully read all the testimony presented by both sides before you cast your vote. Read the N. Y. People, the Cleveland Citizen, and other S. L. P. papers as well as the Social Democratic Herald, and then vote as your conscience may dictate, and the party we love and which has been such a shining success will emerge from the fire unscathed, and tempered by the heat and passion of conflict will be better than ever fitted to enter upon the glorious future that awaits it.

Yours fraternally,
Eugene V. Debs.

Benham's Vow

Editor The Herald: Your paper of April 7 contains a "manifesto" in which four of the S. D. P. national executive committee arraign all the S. L. P. delegates (from the Rochester convention to the Indianapolis convention) as men who in the conference committee broke pledges made in Indianapolis. The manifesto also distinctly avows that the S. D. P. delegates to the conference were false to the interests of the S. D. P.

The manifesto is biased, illogical and untrue; it bears evidence in almost every line that all information that was furnished as its base came not from the majority of the S. D. P. committee, or from any one who wished to make known facts, but from a minority, who went to the conference with cut-and-dried plans (perhaps instructions) to practically absorb the S. L. P. or to do what has been attempted by this manifesto—to tear down the reputation of all who were foremost or active in the movement for unity. As I have been included (paragraph 4) in the list of those who broke their pledges I send this to you for publication. It will probably be published in an obscure part of the paper. Almost the entire front page was used by your committee in an attempt to blacken the character of all concerned in the conference. It is evident that the four signers had rather place any obstacle in the way of the Socialist movement than to see local power and interests made smaller, as the Socialist movement grew larger by the unification of the political organizations.

Many weeks ago I pointed out in the Class Struggle that the opposition to unity would come only from these individuals holding high or salaried positions. The unexpected has not occurred. But that the method should be that of De Leon—ruthless and reckless character assassination—no one could well expect from those who profess the high principles of Socialism. Yet such is the case.

I shall not attempt (nor could I in twice the space occupied by the manifesto) to call attention to all the errors and untruths in the manifesto. It is one huge, black daub, hurled with but one intent, to besmirch the reputation of those who have served the Socialist cause honorably, faithfully and to the best of their ability. A great majority of the conference committee were for many years working and struggling to advance the Socialist movement when the signers of your manifesto were advertising the reactionary doctrines of the middle class reformers.

I shall here only partially refer to the absolute falsehoods of the manifesto. The accusation by intimation and attacks by innuendo; the blunders and contradictions cannot at all be attended to here.

The falsehoods in part are:

No. 1. That The Herald was open to discussion regarding unity. It was not "open." It was closed to many that I know of.

No. 2. That Benham broke any pledge.

No. 3. That Benham ever agreed to "aggressively" support the name S. D. P. I was known to be opposed to the name S. D. P., but said I would withdraw opposition if Harriman and Hayes were nominated. They were not nominated. I opposed the name in the conference but broke no pledge in so doing.

No. 4. That the Indianapolis convention was essentially a mass convention. It was nothing of the kind; it was a convention in which one-fourth of the delegates had a majority of the voting power in their pockets. Though dozens of questions were decided, the delegates voted but twice by recording the votes of the signers of their credentials.

No. 5. That Harriman has ever agreed to support the name S. D. P. without reservation, is untrue. When Harriman and Hillquit (with so much mystery) were charged by Heath in the conference committee, the matter was shown to be so absurd that no one except Heath showed any signs of believing a word of it, and Heath put in his time explaining how he had been misled into the belief, etc. Stedman and Margaret Haile afterwards insisted on Hillquit being a candidate for provisional committee, and both said he was the best man New York could furnish, all S. D. P. delegates concurring, except Heath, who sulked.

No. 6. That Benham ever used the word "acceptable" in connection with the words Social Democratic. No such word as acceptable was ever used, intimated or implied. I only bore with the name on the ground that the nomination of Harriman and Hayes would make its application to the united party possible.

No. 7. That Harriman and Hillquit ever obligated themselves in any manner to support the name S. D. P. in the conference, except with the proviso that such course was necessary to enable Berger to "use his influence for two hours." Berger did not even see Debs before the latter's acceptance was made public; therefore, there could not possibly be any continuance of a contingent pledge, as the contingency was absent.

No. 8. That Max Hayes ever by word or act in New York or elsewhere, either attacked or declined to support the name S. D. P.

No. 9. That the name was discussed for one whole day. It was discussed exactly four hours—from 2 to 6 p. m., Sunday, March 25.

No. 10. That the committee on conference voted for or proposed to submit two names until the S. D. P. delegation, through Chase, made the proposition on Monday morning.

No. 11. Stedman did not state at the conference that Harriman had no conditions upon his statement regarding name. Stedman said "he did not remember anything of that kind in that conversation on the street."

No. 12. It is false that the Indianapolis convention did (or could) "instruct" the joint committee. It might instruct the S. D. P. delegates; but not the joint committee.

No. 13. That the S. L. P. has studiously avoided giving information re-

NOTICE

We wish the membership at large to understand that no communications addressed to The Herald on the subject before them will be suppressed, but that all the paper will hold up to the issue for May 5 will be published. Then, having passed over this bit of rough road, and the vote announced May 12, The Herald will return to its propaganda for Socialism and the Social Democratic party.

THE SITUATION CLEARED UP

It is now admitted by the S. L. P. delegates that if the ticket nominated had been Harriman and Hayes they would have supported the name Social Democrat. They say distinctly (see Harriman and Hillquit letter) it is true that they pledged themselves to the name if Harriman and Hayes should be nominated. So far the statements made by Gordon and Edwards are admittedly true. "But," say the authors of the joint letter, "Harriman and Hayes were not nominated," and since the Social Democratic convention chose to nominate as the head of the ticket Eugene V. Debs instead of Job Harriman, they now set up the paltry defense that they were absolved from the pledges given just as emphatically for the Debs-Harriman ticket. No genius is required to see clear through so thinly veiled an excuse. Benham says that he "only bore with the name on the ground that the nomination of Harriman and Hayes (which would have pleased him beyond measure) would make its application (acceptance) possible." There never was the slightest doubt as to where Benham stood on the question of name so long as the candidates talked of were Harriman and Hayes. They all agree that if Harriman and Hayes had been nominated they would have been satisfied and the name would have stood. In this they all agree that Edward and Gordon have stated the truth.

But the convention nominated Debs and Harriman and they are not satisfied, although the pledges of Hillquit and Harriman, in spite of their quibbling about Berger's position and what Berger said or did not say, were as clearly understood and as positive on the Debs-Harriman proposition as on the other. With Debs at the head of the ticket they deliberately chose to throw their pledges to the wind. Then by making the claim that there were other "conditions," they seek to prejudice the minds of Social Democrats against the executive board and those who are admitted to have told the truth in one particular and, as a matter of fact, have told it all. Harriman and Hillquit say "it is not true" that they promised to support the name Social Democratic in the event that the ticket nominated would be Debs and Harriman; further along, after injecting the quibble about Berger, they say that in answer to Berger's question: "Will you permit me to say to him (Debs) that your position on the question of name would not be changed [changed from what?] if he accepted the nomination?" that this was what actually occurred: "To that question Benham answered in the negative and Harriman and Hillquit in the affirmative."

What does this mean except that Edwards' and Gordon's statements are confirmed as a whole and every attempt to discredit them only shows that the S. L. P. delegates and all in sympathy with them are trying to fortify themselves behind the paltry quibble that "when the pledges were given Debs had accepted without having been influenced by Berger." Therefore they were released and would jeopardize the whole question of union by declaring the conference, which at the time they regarded as important (especially as at first it promised to result in the nomination of Harriman and Hayes) as having "no significance."

Comrades, what a significance would now attach to that conference, in the estimation of the S. L. P. delegates, had the Social Democratic convention nominated both of their men!

It is contended that the conference of ten had no power or authority to arrange a program; that they could not legally pass upon questions which belonged solely to the convention. The contention is unchallenged. Nobody argues that they could. But any ten men had the moral right in behalf of unity to consult together. This was done in other matters and the motives or character of the comrades who took part have not been assailed. It is not doubted that they were actuated purely by a desire to serve the cause. But as to those of the seven who have told the truth about the "peace conference" (while others who were present and know the truth has been told, either remain silent or put a false construction upon it), they are actuated solely by a desire to "rule or ruin."

Now, comrades, take another view of the affair. When Comrade Debs had declined the nomination and delegates left the hall, most of them did so thinking that Harriman and Hayes would be nominated next day. Of that there is no doubt. Suppose the "peace conference" had met, talked over the situation, agreed among themselves that the best thing to do for union would be to nominate Harriman and Hayes, and pledged themselves to that. Suppose then that some of their number had gone to the convention next day and opposed the nominations. Who would have questioned the moral right of those attending the conference to make such a compact in the interest of unity, and how many of the sixty-seven delegates would have failed to score the opposition for their "perfidy"? Imagine the indignation of Hillquit, Harriman, Hayes and Benham under such circumstances, especially if the opposition had succeeded!

Members of the Social Democratic party cannot be persuaded that the members of the executive board had any hidden motives in issuing the manifesto. They were actuated by one desire only; that was to conserve the interests of a movement for which they as individuals had done as much as any like number of members in the party, and a vast deal more than the "statesmen" who have conspired against them. To now charge them with being recreant to their trust is as paltry as it is untrue and dishonest. But it is quite in keeping with the methods that were adopted before the Indianapolis convention to discredit them, and it is in perfect accord with the methods of escheatism. The latter is finely illustrated in the scurrilous screed by Benham printed in this paper. This ardent advocate of unity (if Harriman and Hayes were nominated) descends to delectable billingsgate and intimates that the manifesto was a service paid for in the interest of capitalism! Ordinarily such venom as Benham exudes would be excluded from this paper; but this is given as a fair, average sample of S. L. P. "argument."

Comrades of the Social Democratic Party: When the advocates of "union at any cost and under any condition" (!) urge that your executive board had no right to issue the "manifesto," there are four important points to be remembered: First—That there was no other way in which the truth could have come into your possession; you never would have had it from S. L. P. sources for reasons that must be obvious to all.

Second—If you had been allowed to act upon the majority report in ignorance of the gross violation of pledges, no man will have the temerity to suggest that your executive board would not properly have been open to censure for permitting the consummation of union under circumstances which, at the very outset, were prohibitive of union.

Third—The compact made at Indianapolis having been violated, it is your clear and undoubted right to pass judgment upon that violation; for you, as members of the Social Democratic party, this question now takes precedence over all others. Do not be deceived by specious explanations. The facts are before you.

Fourth—The question for members of the organization to decide is not as to the merits or demerits of the executive board, but whether in the face of all the facts union is desirable. Under the constitution adopted at Indianapolis you will soon choose a new board of nine, and the present board is ready to relinquish its duties as soon as your decision is known.

Vote on the proposition of your executive board and against the majority report. Vote for the spirit and methods of the Social Democratic party and its preservation.

JESSE COX RESIGNS

To the National Board of the Social Democratic Party: Herewith I transmit my resignation as a member of your honorable board, and beg its immediate acceptance.

In presenting this resignation, I desire to make a few remarks as to the present condition of the Social Democratic party, as well as my reasons for my resignation.

The Social Democratic party was organized at a time when the Socialist Labor party had been in existence for many years. It was believed by the men who organized the S. D. P. that a new Socialist party was needed to occupy a field not reached by the S. L. P., and that an entirely different policy from that of the S. L. P. was necessary to occupy this field and make a successful Socialist party.

The trades unions had been antagonized by the S. L. P., and were, therefore, bitterly hostile to that party. The policy of the S. L. P. was narrow and intolerant. Men who for many years had been in the Socialist movement, and whose character and conduct should have entitled them to the highest respect from the party, were without cause charged with crimes against the party, put on trial, and expelled from the party often for the merest and most innocent trifles. Indeed, the men who had the management of the party, having little knowledge of men, and no experience in the affairs of life, seemed to think that they could treat men as children, and punish them as such. To criticize the management of the party was treason; to be punished by immediate expulsion. The employer of labor, though poorer than the men he employed; the professional man, though perhaps living merely from hand to mouth; every one indeed, but the manual laborer, was looked upon with suspicion when attempting to join the party. To attach oneself to the party, was to submit one's person and reputation to the jurisdiction of men, who had got possession of a few catch words, which they called scientific Socialism, but who were, in fact, persons of the most contracted views, and particularly ignorant of almost everything pertaining to the successful management of a great organization. There were exceptions, of course; but these were few, and scarcely to be found among the managers of the party.

The propaganda of the S. L. P. was largely a matter of vituperation, misrepresentation, and scurrilous abuse of all who dared to exercise the slightest independence of thought or action. It was the endeavor of the party to rouse the hatred of the working class against the individuals of the possessing class, rather than against the physical conditions that produced class distinctions.

A movement like this was necessarily confined to narrow limits, and could never reach the proportions of a triumphant political party.

In saying this, I do not wish to be understood as attacking the sincerity of the motives even of the managers of the party. I speak in all kindness. It is by their acts alone that they must be judged.

In the organization of the Social Democratic party, it was endeavored to avoid these mistakes of the S. L. P. A friendly attitude was adopted towards the trades unions. The platform and policy of the party was such as to attract all classes suffering from the evils of capitalism. The propaganda was directed to excite hatred of these evils, rather than of individuals of the class which had profited by the malorganization of society, for which it was not responsible. But abuse of power by the possessing class was not spared. The propaganda of the party was reasonable, dignified and convincing, and the result was a most rapid growth of the party. Influential newspapers which had been without reason antagonized by the S. L. P. became staunch supporters of the new movement. Although the party has been in existence but a little over a year and a half, it has branches in almost every state, and is favorably known everywhere.

The party organ passed by without notice, the malicious and scurrilous attacks incessantly made upon the party and its prominent members by the S. L. P. The party refused to be drawn into any controversy with the S. L. P.

A party having such judicious management as had the S. L. P. could not long exist without internal dissensions; and finally these dissensions caused a division of the party. Each faction accused the other in choicest billingsgate, of being responsible for the causes of the party mismanagement, which they all now admitted had taken place.

But in truth it was impossible to locate the responsibility for these causes, since while they were acting, scarcely any of either faction raised a protest against the management. The factions fought each other with fist and club, litigated in the courts, and separated.

There is no evidence that the men of either faction of the S. L. P. have changed their character, or their tactics. There is no reason to believe that the policy of either faction can ever permanently change. Men cannot change their nature by a resolution of a convention.

In a caucus of the delegates to the Indianapolis convention I frankly opposed any step towards any organic union with the S. L. P. I believed that any such union at that time would result in injury to the Socialist movement. The two parties occupied different fields, were composed mostly of men of different characters and temperaments, and, as I believed, could not at that time, or in the near future, act in harmony. I thought the two parties might vote for the same national candidates under proper arrangements, but maintaining their own separate organizations, which could be friendly to each other. I thought that the convention should appoint no committee to confer with the committee of nine appointed by the Rochester convention of the S. L. P., except such committee as should report back to the convention itself while in session. I advocated these views in caucus, and privately to the delegates. I pointed out that, in my judgment, any committee we might appoint to meet the S. L. P. committee of nine under the terms imposed by the S. L. P. convention would inevitably get the worst of the bargain, as our men were no match for the men of the S. L. P. in capacity for intrigue and unscrupulous trickery. Our delegates expressed themselves in caucus, and privately, as tenacious of the name and organization of the Social Democratic party, on account both of the record of the party, and the international character of the name. But the S. L. P. delegates who attended the Indianapolis convention, and were admitted to the privileges of the floor, abused the courtesy thus accorded them, and by misleading speeches, false promises, and threats of withdrawal if their own terms were not conceded, won over the well-meaning but inexperienced and too confiding delegates in the convention, to submit not only the name, but the organization, national organ, and very existence of the party to the tender mercies of the joint committee of eighteen.

The result is, that if the report of this committee be adopted, the name, policy, organization and national organ of the S. D. P. will be extinguished; the Socialist Labor party will survive alone, and the same old policy and tactics, which for so many years dwarfed the Socialist movement, will again have sway, making it impossible for self-respecting people to remain affiliated with the organization, and confining the movement to a little sect, whose influence must always be insignificant.

If any one has any doubt about the statement that the men of the faction of the S. L. P. which met at Rochester have not changed their character, let him read the letters now pouring into headquarters from these very men. These letters are filled with malicious abuse and misrepresentation, and indicate that the same vicious spirit that so many years characterized the S. L. P. is still existent in them. Association with such men as these would be intolerable.

Many of the members of the S. D. P. are inexperienced in the movement, and do not know or appreciate the nature and consequences of such a step as the adoption of the report of the committee of eighteen. Let us hope, however, that our members will reject that report, and every part of it.

I have been for a long time anxious to be relieved of my duties and responsibilities as a member of the national executive board. My private business presses me, and I have reached an age when I can no longer stand the additional work, care and anxiety which are necessarily imposed upon a member of the board. Had I been present at the convention when I was re-elected I should have declined re-election. While I am ready to aid the Socialist movement by every means in my power, I think younger men than I should be selected for committee work. I have done such work now in Socialist and semi-Socialist movements for about twenty years, and think I have earned the right to a rest.

I will thank your board, therefore, to promptly accept my resignation, and fill the vacancy thereby created.

In closing, let me express my high appreciation of the very friendly and harmonious relations which have always existed among the members of the present national executive board. Its meetings have always been meetings of warm friends engaged in a common cause, and I shall always recollect them with pleasure.

Fraternally yours,

Jesse Cox.

Chicago, April 11, 1900.

Benham's Thousand and One Reasons

Comrades: After carefully reading the manifesto of the N. E. B. and the "answer" of Comrades Harriman and Hillquit in New York Volkszeitung of April 9, I am thoroughly convinced that (1) if Harriman and Hayes had been nominated by the Indianapolis convention, the name S. D. P. would be a nice-fitting name for the new party, and Mr. Benham would feel himself bound to present one thousand and one arguments in favor of the name. But as only Debs and Harriman were nominated, Mr. Benham felt himself bound to present one thousand and one arguments against it; (2) if the nominees of the S. L. P. would be accepted, Harriman, Hillquit and Hayes would work and vote for the name S. D. P.; "this not being thus" they are now conscientiously opposed to that name for the one thousand and one reasons given by Mr. Benham; and (3) if our heads would locate themselves under somebody else's heels, all would be well; as it is now, the name of the S. D. P. is under no circumstances good enough for them. Comrades! Do not forget that up to now we have never fought one another for a difference of opinion, free discussion being our safety valve. Let us not hurry to condemn any one, be it the weakness of our conference representatives or the wrath of our executive board; be it the unnecessary excitability of one comrade or the indignation of another. Read carefully and listen to both sides, especially to the answer of Harriman and Hillquit, and if you do not care to stand on the slippery ground of "formal truth," "formal promises," "formal nonsense," you will see what happened when you pitted nine honest-minded men, desirous of a union of forces without any back-thought, against nine men who were determined, reason or no reason, not to accept the name S. D. P. Remember that the official organs of the "other nine" are ALL THE TIME AGAINST OUR NAME, although affecting "I-don't-care" airs. Are they ashamed of our name, may I ask in plain language? If yes, they are surely ashamed of it not for its sound, but for the ideas, tactics and men who are associated with it. If they are not, why all this nonsense? Comrades! Think twice before you condemn anybody, but think seven times before you change your fair name for another one, ridiculous in addition to its absurdity. Above all look out for the tactics of the old S. L. P., look out for De-Leonism. Long live the S. D. P.!

Paul J. Bauerberg.

All Due to "Self-Conceit"

Comrades: The national executive's manifesto is a disgraceful blunder. We must fight it vigorously. Prompt and decisive action is necessary in order to insure the unification of the Socialist forces of America. Let us be plain. This is no time to smooth things over. Let us look at the facts in their proper order.

1. Union is desirable, even were the charges of the N. E. B. true. The fact that four members of the S. L. P. committee broke their promises would not be a good reason for refusing to unite. If the presence of four bad men could drive me out of a Socialist party my resignation from the S. D. P. would date from the time of reading the manifesto of Berger, Heath, Cox and Stedman.

2. The so-called "peace conference" referred to in the affidavits was nothing but a private meeting of seven Social Democrats and three members of the S. L. P. committee. It was not authorized by, nor was any report made to, the convention. It was a secret affair to which only seven delegates out of sixty-seven were invited. It was not recognized by the convention as having any binding force. In fact, the instructions to the committee of nine "to urge the selection of the name Social Democratic party" were adopted, and the motion to instruct the committee to "stand" for the name was defeated Thursday afternoon, and this private caucus was not held until Thursday night. Therefore the proceedings of the caucus could not possibly have influenced the convention in giving the committee its instructions, (and I suppose the N. E. B. will admit that the committee was bound by the instructions of the convention rather than by the agreements of the private caucus). The only possible influence the caucus could have had might have been on the nomination of Comrade Harriman for vice-president. But does anyone doubt that he would have been nominated if the caucus had never been held? Either he would have been chosen by the convention Friday morning or a nominal candidate would have been named, to be withdrawn by the joint committee, which would have substituted Harriman.

For the N. E. B. to base its manifesto on the fact that there was a private caucus (which it apparently considers a higher body than a national convention), is to insult the membership at large. Comrades, you should repudiate the manifesto by voting unanimously for union.

3. The manifesto accuses the S. D. P. committee of nine with violating the instructions of the convention when it agreed to submit a proposition to a referendum vote (a referendum, mind you), as follows:

"In case the party name voted for by you fails to obtain the concurrent majority of both parties, shall the name receiving the majority of the total vote of both parties be adopted?"

With what magnificent zeal our national executive rushes to the front to prevent the horrible catastrophe of having the members of the party decide for themselves whether they will yield the name or not in case a majority of the total vote should be the other way. What are you kicking about, my lords? Do you not see that if the majority of the members of the Social Democratic party vote to abide by a decision of a majority of the united Socialists of America your little say is then overruled? Why are you afraid to abide by the decision of the members? If they are unalterably opposed to surrendering the name, even to the extent of sacrificing the union, can they not vote "no" on the above proposition? Wherefore the necessity for your new-born "bugaboo"?

Comrades, the N. E. B.'s second assertion amounts simply to this: that the joint conference committee has submitted something to you to vote upon which the N. E. B. does not want you to have an opportunity to vote on.

4. Now I want to take up our worthy Big Four and call the attention of the comrades to the spirit animating these gentlemen. It has always appeared to me that these members of the national committee were opposed to union from the very beginning—except, perhaps, on conditions that would humble our friends of the S. L. P. and add to the un-glory of the N. E. B. by making the union appear like a continuation of the S. D. P. (thus erecting a grand living monument to the N. E. B.'s prowess in diplomacy). This was clearly shown by their attitude at the time of the S. L. P. convention, when, instead of meeting our fellow Socialists as equals, they telegraphed a condescending invitation to the Rochester convention to join the Social Democratic party. Furthermore, the Herald did not publish a complete copy of the Rochester resolutions until requested to do so. These are only scraps, comrades, but such scraps are very significant when you suspect men of falsehood. Berger's editorials against union in the Wahrheit, until within a short time before the Indianapolis convention, were exceedingly bitter and unreasoning. Jesse Cox was unreserved in declaring against the union at Indianapolis, in private conversation. He said nothing about it on the floor of the convention, and that accounts for the fact that many members are not aware of his attitude. In the meeting of the committee of fourteen at Indianapolis, the object of Berger, Heath and Cox, aided by two or three others, seemed to be not to effect a union but to so arrange the conditions, etc. (diplomatize if you please) as to cast the odium of preventing the union on the S. L. P. This they apparently hoped to do by instructing the committee of nine to "stand" for the name, evidently thinking that either the S. L. P. would reject these terms, in which case it would incur the blame, or, if the terms were accepted, it would be a diplomatic stroke well calculated to flatter the self-conceit of the national executive. In this scheme they were defeated by the adoption of the minority report, after a discussion of three hours. (The Herald ignores this incident in its report of the convention.)

The manifesto just issued is imbued with this same spirit. It fits in well with the other parts of the story and is a thrilling climax, but it is the end of the chapter. It will have no serious effect. The comrades will read it, grow indignant and then laugh and say to our S. L. P. friends: "Our DeLeons are more amusing than was yours."

Understand, I do not charge these four men with being corrupt. I am not so charitable. The whole affair is attributable to their overwhelming self-conceit alone. (Self-conceit has worked more harm in this world than all corruption combined.)

It is our duty, comrades, to act promptly. Vote for union solidly. Show our S. L. P. friends that we respect them and are sincere. Strike hard, talk plain and we soon will have passed over this bit of rough road. E. Val. Putnam, St. Louis, Mo., April 7, 1900.

Stedman's Reply

Comrades: It is difficult to address you and present facts and circumstances which lead to conclusions against your hopes. We are all apt to warp and distort everything we see and hear to fit our desire, even though ruin and discord are seen to be the inevitable result.

The problem you are to solve should be as free as possible from sentiment and decided upon conceded and known facts.

First, are the statements made in the manifesto true and that which they involve?

Second, if true, is union desirable? Without recurring to the statements in the manifesto, but to prove its correctness I will consider with you the Harriman-Hillquit letter. Therein the charge of petty schemes and jealousies and individual ambitions is made. Let us see. The S. L. P. at Rochester nominated candidates and elected a committee of nine on conference which, at Indianapolis under a threat to retire and break off all negotiations, took out of the hands of the convention and the delegates there the privilege of instructing or limiting the powers of their special committee. The threat was made, and the committee was elected uninstructed; thereupon a date for a meeting was fixed at New York when Berger, in all probabilities, would be absent (Berger received the highest vote of any elected on the committee). Harriman and Hillquit say the "treaty was adopted unanimously"; that is their conclusion. I deny its correctness.

Fred Heath made charges of broken pledges (Stedman and Haile were not present at peace conference in Indianapolis). I stated that Harriman and Haile had promised me to support the name S. D. P. at Indianapolis, Mr. Harriman replying said "that was so, but that with the promise he said 'with concessions,'" to which I replied that I did not remember the words "with concessions" being used by him. We remember the circumstances and conversation differently; let it go at that.

As to Springfield for headquarters. Let me tell you the facts. Chicago, Cleveland, New York, Springfield, New Haven and Boston were nominated. A minority of your committee proposed submitting all of them and the members to pick their choice. The majority ruled differently and ordered a vote. Upon the first vote Chicago received one, and was dropped. After several ballots were taken, the place (New York), nominated by the S. L. P., received a majority vote and was carried. Thereupon Harriman (speaking across the table) tapped Hillquit on the shoulder and said "don't you see you are tricked," and asked for a separate meeting of each committee. Your committee then proposed three cities from which our members should make their selection. The S. L. P.'s told us to retire again and select either Springfield or New York. A majority of your committee decided in favor of Springfield.

Now, comrades, why was New York discarded after receiving a majority vote of the joint committee, and the responsibility thrown upon your committee of making a selection between Springfield and New York. I regret here to say a majority of your committee failed to see the point. Benham's section was opposed to New York. Hoehn said New York would lose upon a referendum, so the next best thing for the S. L. P. was to place it in an obscure town, but within the grasp and control of the New York element of the S. L. P., as Stone (S. L. P.) said "we can more quickly destroy De Leon." Harriman, whose "petty scheme was this"? Why not give all the towns a show? Comrades, this move was to give the New York S. L. P. the leverage of the national executive.

It cannot be denied that in New York the S. L. P. are at war with each other, and in New York the S. D. P. is far from harmonious, if not in open war. You who were present at the convention will remember the clash between London and Phillips and each represents different factions in New York, and they are not at peace today. Considering these facts, would it not be suicidal to place your N. E. C. in a hot-bed of internal discord.

Rights of minority. On Sunday morning before opening the discussion there was a motion made by two of the S. L. P. that no minority report should be permitted except by consent of a majority of one of the two committees. I suggested that they seemed to anticipate trouble rather early. This motion was then lost; the next day remade by S. L. P. and carried. Thus a minority (usually Haile and Stedman) can only speak by permission of a majority. That's not gag-rule, comrades; that's Socialism—S. L. P. Socialism. The convention did not prescribe the unit rule. Where the majority secured such a right let them tell.

Harriman and Hillquit say that Haile and Stedman stated that "we would withdraw our minority report." We made no such statement; on the contrary, we asked for five days to determine upon it and send the same to Butscher or Stone. It was sent and was rejected under the rule of the majority. Again, Stedman never proposed a national executive committee, and voted against the conference committee making the nominations, saying "the initiative should remain with the members." The majority decided otherwise, and Stedman then did make some nominations. I did not believe the principle was right then or now.

Harriman and Hillquit say they (S. L. P.) yielded the most important points—location, N. E. C., etc. Comrades, you have the shell (Springfield); they have the oyster (New York).

Harriman and Hillquit say they conceded to Stedman's plan of N. E. C. "solely in the interest of harmony." Error. Harriman and Hillquit, you mean the national committee, to be composed of one from each state, so those in New York might feel the pulse of those on the prairies and in the mines and grasp unitedly the diversified economic interests of the nation, and when adopted I believe the words "not less than" preceded the word "three" in section three (3), article two (2), majority report.

Again I contended for a national executive committee of nine or eleven, the quorum to transact the business and submit their proceedings to the non-resident members, then there could be members of the N. E. C. in the far west and east. This plan works successfully in the Brewery Workers' and International Woodworkers' unions. This plan was not acceptable to the majority; a western or middle western check was not desirable; the Atlantic coast alone should prevail.

As to the name. After discussing the name half a day, we, the S. D. P. committee, were advised to caucus, and as the entire S. L. P. committee, except Hayes, stood for U. S., we proposed submitting two names. The pledges made in the conference were unknown to Haile and Stedman. I did not then have possession of all the facts; will recur to this later.

Harriman and Hillquit say "we parted in full accord with each other." Oh! yes! On parting Comrade Haile said to Hillquit loud enough for all to hear: "We (S. D. P.) could not have surrendered to a nobler foe." That peculiar "accord with each other" which existed between Grant and Lee when the latter, beaten to pieces, gave his sword to Grant, and the "accord" between surrendering Cronje and victorious Bobs.

As to broken pledges. According to Harriman and Hayes and Benham, the latter agreed not to oppose the S. D. P. name if Harriman and Hayes were nominated by us, but as they were not nominated he was at liberty to oppose it. In other words, if we would give up Eugene V. Debs as a candidate and take Harriman and Hayes, Benham would not oppose our name. You may all personally dislike Debs; that is your business. But Benham solicited Eugene to accept the nomination and then because Debs did as requested Benham opposes the name. Benham, you were for or against the nomination of Debs; provided we would not nominate him you would withdraw opposition to the name to ask such as a concession; you must have been against his nomination.

In other words, if Debs went in the air the price would be paid for your supporting the name. Price too high, Ben?

As to Hayes, he failed to speak in favor of the name at the New York conference. Harriman and Hillquit, according to their statement, promised to support the name if Berger could induce Eugene to accept, but as Debs had accepted before Berger saw him, they feel released of their promise. Harriman and Hillquit, what were you after, Berger's influence or Debs' acceptance? If the latter, you got what you wanted and should have kept honor intact. If you only wanted Berger's influence and if that is what you were bargaining for, I grant you stand acquitted; such an excuse discredits those who advance it.

I regret that the lingering spirit of DeLeonism in the New York S. L. P. comrades should have forced these gentlemen from a reputable attitude and that which honor dictated, and it reflects discredit upon the S. L. P. movement there. These men, Harriman and Hillquit, have broken their words, as a sacrifice to a portion of their party located in New York. To exact such a sacrifice was dishonorable, and it is against an element which would force a man to break his pledge against whom this contest is waged.

As to Berger's nomination of Harriman. If you, Harriman, did not wish the nomination, why did you not decline? The convention nominated you, and there was your opportunity to quit.

Harriman and Hillquit say "but between the interpretation of a situation and a pledge there is, you will admit, a world of difference." Yes? Harriman and Hillquit, I will admit; more, there never was a pledge, word or promise that could not be broken, violated or excused upon the theory of "the interpretation of a situation." You could hypnotize the smoothest Jesuit that ever diplomatized upon that theory.

I can assure you that I do not fear the decision of our members. I hope, only, that their decision shall be based upon all the facts (which I did not possess at the conference).

You ask me to be frank, what is our object, etc. It is to prevent a disunion, to prevent the loss of the name S. D. P.; not the symbol, but the methods, tactics and policy that it represents. Nations do not war over sticks and cloth (flags), but over the institutions they represent, and further, we are against the destruction of the Social Democratic Herald.

You, Harriman and Hillquit, ask what influence has changed my attitude since I left the joint conference. This statement will disclose some of them; others will be stated by other comrades, and others in the interest of Socialism I hope may be forgotten.

I am now convinced that the nomination of E. V. Debs has possibly saved the S. D. P.; that his acceptance was not expected; that the name S. D. P. was to be conceded to us by the S. L. P., and we were to nominate Harriman and Hayes and New York was to assume control of the S. D. P. and dominate its policy, etc., and that this understanding preceded the Indianapolis convention, but Eugene's acceptance disturbed the understanding.

I have favored union, proposed a joint mass-meeting in Chicago of the S. L. P. and the S. D. P. before the Rochester convention and after it, and after the Indianapolis convention the two first invitations were rejected by the S. L. P.; the last, no action. Last January we, the S. D. P., proposed to unite locally for spring election under the name Socialist party. It was rejected by the S. L. P. We supported their ticket and I favored that course and now find many of the S. L. P. candidates whom we supported are in hopes the national ticket will get a small vote—they want a slow growth. I want Socialism within a thousand years.

This spirit I believe too strongly permeates the entire national S. L. P. organization.

Benham's article almost answers itself. According to him he commenced his criticism weeks ago in the Class Struggle. Feb. 3, after the Rochester convention, appeared the following: "Having (S. D. P.) first split the Socialist forces by starting a second party, and second, by declining for petty personal reason an honorable and highly important union, we demand your support because we are straight, scientific Socialists; because we are the first party in the field," etc. This followed, you should remember, the Rochester convention. His intimation that Debs, Berger and others deceived or tricked the S. L. P. and "that it was a hold-up behind closed doors," and that "they (the S. D. P.) will none of them be so tall that they cannot be brought to their knees" is characteristic of S. L. P. If a majority want it, perhaps we will come down on our knees. We may as well get used to it early, because in the S. L.

garding its membership. Information has never been asked for, except once, and that was in the conference committee, at New York. The S. L. P. national secretary replied, giving approximately the membership. This was evidently satisfactory. If it had not been, a request for inspection of the books would have cheerfully been complied with.

No. 14. That the S. L. P. does not know its membership. If the S. L. P. authorities do not know their membership, how could they "studiously evade" giving definite information (which they "do not" have)? You say they do not know, and then find fault with them for not telling you. They do know and have been and are now willing to give any information on proper application.

There is no doubt in the mind of all who are acquainted with the facts regarding the Wednesday night conference in Indianapolis that Berger knew Debs was to accept. The fact that Berger insisted and argued and took up so much time in order to get a qualified pledge from some of the S. L. P. delegates, and that he at first refused to go and see Debs, unless Benham would also yield, shows, with the other circumstances, that it was a hold-up behind closed doors to make the S. L. P. delegates personally pledge themselves to the name S. D. P. Hayes was not there; they did not care for him. He was already openly pledged. Only for the impudence of one S. D. P. delegate, who had been talking with Debs, and let the matter out by mistake, the trick would have succeeded. There are several others implicated in the trick (undoubtedly Gordon) and others higher up the S. D. P. ladder. Their names it does not now seem to me necessary to announce.

On Monday Berger pledged himself to Benham to "use his great personal influence with Debs" previous to the presentation of Mr. Debs' name for nomination. At the conference Wednesday evening, after Debs had been nominated and had declined, Berger said he had not used his influence. If not, why not? The fact is not to be doubted that he had, and knew the result of the efforts in that direction. On Thursday morning Berger promised Harriman and Hillquit that he would not present the name of Harriman for vice-president. Berger went directly from the hotel (where he left Harriman and Hillquit) to the convention and placed Harriman in nomination. Was that because he was so enthusiastic for Harriman? Was it because Berger loved him so? No. It was another trick with a double purpose. First, to get Harriman before the people in a secondary, yet prominent position; second, to be able through his being in this position to more effectively knife Harriman's character, attempt to force him from the S. D. P. ticket, and thus prevent the continuance of the friendly basis upon which the relationship between the parties then existed.

In the conference committee when the S. L. P. brought in the list of four names for candidates from New York, Hillquit's name was not there. Stedman and Haile immediately protested. Both insisted that he must be a candidate as he would be the most valuable man that New York could send. At the solicitation of Haile and Stedman, Hillquit was made a candidate. I entered protest then and there, knowing the characteristics and desires of the two who most strenuously insisted. It was, my opinion then, since made an absolute fact, that Hillquit was set up as a candidate that he might be knifed in full public view, as he has been by those who insisted upon his candidacy for the provisional committee. When I made the protest every member of the joint committee pooh-poohed the idea of the charges ever being mentioned again. Hillquit's name was the only recommendation made from either party. Why?

As for the purpose of the manifesto, it is in keeping with the acts above stated.

I may yet be obliged to acknowledge that in my zeal for union and in the hope of its accomplishment, I have over-estimated both the wisdom and sincerity of the Social Democratic party. If the membership can be driven from the plain duty to the Socialist movement by the cry of "stop thief" set up by the Chicago imitators of De Leon, then I shall be forced to the conclusion that there are yet men professing Socialism, but who still yearn for the hand of usurpation and the lash of party masters.

There are some other matters of interest in connection with the unity matter, and I shall in the future be pleased to make some comments upon the idiosyncrasies and weaknesses of some of the "giants" of today. They will none of them be so tall that they cannot be brought to their knees when their peculiarities are made known to the people.

I see that Edwards and Gordon, conscious of how lightly their ordinary statements are regarded by their party membership, have sought to make impressive their statements in this case by appearing before a notary and swearing. I still have an unconquerable desire for a united Socialist movement in the United States. And union will come, and soon, in spite of all interfering officials and their "aggressive tactics" of personal vilification and wholesale repudiation.

While thoroughly cognizant of the unstable character and unsavory acts of some individuals in the S. D. P., the delegates and members of the S. L. P. have no disposition to allow the misdeeds of a few individuals to stand in the way of unification of the Socialist forces in the United States. The necessities of uniting the Socialist organizations (representing the same great principles) are above the acts of individuals, or the personal desires for continued power of men in high places. To all acquainted with the facts in the matter, it is apparent that the charges made and reasons given in support of the manifesto are simply flimsy excuses to block the road to unification.

Jesse Cox, V. Berger, Seymour Stedman and F. Heath by promulgating this manifesto have vilified those foremost in the work of unification in both parties; they have scandalously attacked Harriman, the unanimous choice of the Indianapolis convention for vice-president; they have disowned and repudiated the majority of the Social Democratic conference committee; they have refused to accept the work of the joint committee.

Will the membership of the S. D. P. allow a few individuals to overthrow or hamper the work of the Indianapolis convention, the work of its delegates to the conference, and the work of the conference committee?

In any event, the action of the four signers of the manifesto furnishes a sweet morsel for every enemy of Socialism. All or any opposed to the Socialist movement could afford to pay almost any price for such a service in the cause of capitalism.

C. B. Benham.

Harriman-Hillquit Joint Letter

Comrades: The manifesto issued by the national executive board of your party was a most painful surprise to us, as it undoubtedly was to all earnest friends of union of the Socialist forces in this country.

After months of untiring work on the part of the best men in the ranks of both parties it seemed as if the greatest achievement of the Socialist movement had been attained, the elements of discord, of petty schemes and jealousies and of individual ambitions were apparently banished forever from our ranks, and the foundation for a strong and harmonious Socialist movement seemed to have been laid.

The Rochester convention met, and in clear and manly language declared itself for union with the S. D. P.

The Indianapolis convention met, and enthusiastically acclaimed union with the S. L. P.

Both conventions elected large committees with instructions to prepare a basis for union. Each party elected men who have its utmost confidence and gave them full power to act in the matter to the best of their abilities and understanding, the only limitation placed on their powers being the required ratification by the referendum.

The joint committee spent three full days in deliberations over the great task intrusted to them, and as a result submitted a treaty which to every unbiased mind must appear fair, impartial and conducive to the best interests of the movement.

The treaty was adopted by the joint committee unanimously. No voice of protest or objection was heard on the part of the S. L. P. committee, although many of them had sacrificed some pet ideas in the interests of harmony, and no voice of protest was heard on the part of the S. D. P. committee. Victor Berger was absent. Frederick Heath made some charges against the S. L. P. subcommittee to Indianapolis, but seemed to be quite satisfied with their explanation, as were all other members of the S. D. P. committee. He took no part in the work of the committee on the second day of its session, but reappeared and voted on one question on the last day.

Stedman and Mrs. Haile who had first expressed dissatisfaction with the choice of Springfield as the seat of the national executive committee and with the manner of electing the provisional committee, and who had announced that they would submit a minority report on those points, changed their position and declared they would withdraw their minority report when Stedman's plan of electing the permanent national executive committee was adopted, and a national campaign committee with headquarters in Chicago was created.

On the most important questions the S. L. P. committee yielded to the desires and sentiments of their S. D. P. comrades. When the choice of the seat of the N. E. C. had by a process of successive balloting narrowed down to Springfield, Mass., and New York city, the S. L. P. committee left the final decision with the S. D. P. committee, and when the latter by a majority vote adopted Springfield the S. L. P. committee endorsed the recommendation by a vote of 8 to 1.

On the question of the composition of the N. E. C., Stedman's plan was adopted against the inclinations of the S. L. P. members and solely in the interests of harmony.

In the consideration of the party press the Social Democratic Herald was accorded special privileges which no S. L. P. paper received, and even on the question of name, the first motion to submit two names emanated officially from the S. D. P. committee.

Both Stedman and Mrs. Haile before parting fully and frankly expressed their appreciation of the courteous and liberal treatment of the subject by the S. L. P. committee. The joint committee parted in full accord with each other, each one, including Stedman, promising to go and work for the united party.

A subcommittee was appointed to prepare and submit the treaty and nothing but the general vote was wanted to formally accomplish union.

And after all that, just when the results of the good work commenced to show in an increased and enthusiastic activity all over the country, four members of the S. D. P. and members of the national executive board, overriding the will of their party as expressed by their national convention, ignoring the majority of their own committee on union elected by the same convention, appear with what they are pleased to term a manifesto, and openly agitate against union.

And on what grounds do they seek to justify this very extraordinary step?

Two grounds are stated in the manifesto:

I. That the S. L. P. committee to Indianapolis had pledged itself to the name S. D. P. and had broken its pledge.

II. That it had been agreed that each party vote separately on the propositions submitted, and that the joint committee had violated this agreement by submitting the following question:

"In case the party name voted for by you fails to obtain the concurrent majority vote of both parties, shall the name receiving the majority of the total vote of both parties be adopted?"

Let us consider them in their order. The charge of broken pledges is contained in the following six different statements:

1. "G. B. Benham pledged himself to unequivocally and aggressively support the name Social Democratic on the condition that Harriman and Hayes accepted by the S. D. P. as candidates."

We do not believe that this charge requires any reply, as Harriman and Hayes were not nominated by the Indianapolis convention.

2. "Max Hayes, on the floor of the convention on Thursday afternoon announced his personal choice of the name Social Democratic, and in solemn terms pledged himself and his paper to the name. * * * he did not vote for the name."

Comrade Hayes has made that statement on condition that the minority report would be adopted; the minority report was adopted and Hayes has fully lived up to his promise; he has worked and agitated for the name S. D. P., and he voted for that name at the joint committee session, as the record will show.

3. "Mr. Morris Hillquit in his first address to the convention on Wednesday, March 7, declared that the Rochester convention had purposely refrained from adopting a name in order that they might be free to adopt any name that might be agreed on."

Why do the writers of the manifesto fail to state that Comrade Hillquit added: "The S. L. P. has no prejudice against your name and will adopt it if you can show it to be better than any other name, but we also expect that the members of the S. D. P. are not fetish worshipers and will adopt any other name which they could be persuaded was the best?"

That changes it a little does it not, comrades? And still you could not fail to remember one part if you remembered the other so well. Why, then, this omission?

4. "That Comrade Harriman had stated to Comrade Stedman that he would support the name S. D. P. and that Stedman announced on the floor of the convention that he changed his vote from the majority to the minority report because Harriman and Hayes had given him their promise to support the name."

We do not remember and do not believe that Comrade Stedman ever referred to an alleged promise of Comrade Harriman on the floor of the convention in our presence, for had he done that we would surely have corrected him upon that point. Comrade Harriman has on a previous occasion explicitly denied that he had promised to support the name S. D. P. unconditionally. What he did say to Comrade Stedman was that he was not prejudiced against the name and would be willing to accept it, provided corresponding concessions were made.

The keynote of all negotiations between the S. L. P. committee and the S. D. P. convention, in open and private discussion, was that the union should be effected on honorable terms, which could only mean that corresponding mutual concessions were to be made.

This point, which will surely be remembered by all S. D. P. delegates, seems to bear out Harriman's version of his conversation with Stedman rather than that of the latter.

5. "That the S. L. P. committee had in informal conference promised to support the name S. D. P. if the full Rochester ticket (Harriman and Hayes) would be nominated by the Indianapolis convention."

This is true, but Harriman and Hayes were not nominated.

6. "That Harriman and Hillquit had also promised at that conference to support the name S. D. P. in the event that the ticket nominated would be Debs and Harriman."

This is not true.

What actually transpired at that conference was the following: Berger stated that he had not given up all hope of inducing Debs to accept the nomination, that he had great personal influence with Debs and would, with the permission of the conference, endeavor to persuade him. He then said in substance: "If I go to Debs telling him that your committee had pledged itself to the name S. D. P. if Harriman and Hayes were nominated, and that you would not support the name if Debs be nominated, that would be an argument against Debs' acceptance. Will you, therefore, permit me to say to him that your position on the question of name would not be changed, if he accepted the nomination?"

To that question Benham answered in the negative and Harriman and Hillquit in the affirmative in order that that obstacle in the way of Debs' acceptance be removed.

But at the time the question was asked, Debs had already definitely accepted the nomination without having been seen by Berger and without having been in any way influenced by the attitude of the S. L. P. delegates on the question of the name.

Whether or not Berger knew of that fact at the time he asked the question, we do not assume to say; but we may certainly state that when it became known that Debs had accepted the nomination while we were in conference, we as well as the S. D. P. delegates understood at the time that we had been talking on false assumptions and that the entire conference had no significance; and although we had parted with the express understanding that we would meet again in two hours, no one of the conference ever thought of re-assembling.

We are free to confess that our suspicions against Berger had been aroused at that time. We decided it would be best not to have Harriman nominated by the S. D. P. convention at that juncture, and requested Berger and a number of other prominent S. D. P. delegates to desist from nominating him. Berger promised to respect our desires and promptly nominated Harriman in the absence of the latter.

We may notice right here that Harriman's nomination for the second place on the ticket was by no means a concession to the S. L. P. as the authors of the manifesto seem to assume, but was distinctly a concession to the S. D. P.

In support of our statements we will quote from the stenographic report of the session of the joint committee a few remarks on the subject made by some members of the Social Democratic party, whose trustworthiness is above doubt.

CAREY: "I want to say right here that the attitude and action of those four members of the S. L. P. there, reflects credit on them, and I do not believe any one of them ever made pledges that he broke." Carey was present at the Indianapolis conference.

MRS. HAILE: "I want to say I thoroughly believe that the comrades of the S. L. P. have lived up to their pledges."

CHASE: "The proposition was made with these three gentlemen to work for the S. D. P. name, provided Harriman and Hayes were nominated. These promises were also to stand provided that Debs accepted the nomination through the influence of these pledges as presented by Comrade Berger. Comrade Berger had nothing whatever to do with his acceptance, and they were perfectly justifiable in feeling that there were no pledges."

That a number of delegates to the Indianapolis convention were convinced that the name S. D. P. had been practically decided upon we may well believe.

But let us remind you how that came about.

In the first conference our committee insisted upon a joint vote being taken by both parties on all questions of union, while your committee and especially Comrade McCartney demanded that a concurrent vote of each party be taken. Considering the question between ourselves after the adjournment of the conference, we concluded that the position taken by the S. D. P. delegates on that question was the better of the two, and we frankly admitted it on the next day.

When the motion to take a concurrent vote was thereupon carried, the S. D. P. delegates reasoned that if each party would take a separate vote on the question of party name, their members would unanimously vote for the name S. D. P. and the members of the S. L. P. knowing the situation, would have no other alternative but to vote for the same name if they want union; and we are frank to admit that we at one time shared that impression and made no secret of it.

But between the interpretation of a situation, and a pledge, there is, you will admit, a world of difference.

Closing our remarks on the party name we desire to say that we regard the question of name as one of very subordinate importance in comparison with the great question before us. We insisted on a different name so as to avoid the appearance of a surrender to your party which would have created great depression in the ranks of the S. L. P. and resulted at best in a lukewarm, half-hearted union.

The choice being now with the members of both parties, it is absolutely indifferent to us which of the two names is adopted, and we will work for the united party to the best of our abilities whatever name it carries.

As to the alleged breach of the promise to have each party vote separately on the referendum, we absolutely deny that charge and are perfectly willing to leave the decision of the question to the intelligence of the comrades.

The proposition referred to reads as follows: "In case the party name voted for by you fails to obtain the concurrent majority of both parties, shall the name receiving the majority of the total vote of both parties, be adopted?"

This question will be submitted to the separate vote of each party. Your party is not bound by the decision of our party. You may vote it down, and if you do not, it is the voluntary decision of your party to submit to a joint count on the question of name.

Moreover, your entire committee including Stedman voted unanimously for the proposition.

What, then, is the real objection to that question? You cannot possibly fear the decision of your own members!

Your insinuations that our party would return a fictitious or dishonest vote on the treaty is not worthy of a reply.

Comrades Cox, Berger, Heath and Stedman, why not be frank about the subject? What is your real object in issuing this singular manifesto at this time?

It cannot possibly be the desire to preserve your name, for the way to do that would be to agitate among the members of your party to vote down the proposition above mentioned and not to attempt to break off all negotiations for union.

Comrade Stedman, what influence has changed your attitude since you left the joint committee?

Comrade Berger, if you were ever in favor of union, as you claimed to be, why did you systematically write against it in your organ, The "Wahrheit," going to the extent of distorting facts and indulging in personal abuse of the ugliest kind, for which we are ever ready to furnish the proof by translations from your paper?

Comrades Cox and Stedman, be frank. Is not your "manifesto" in singular accord with the tenor and spirit of that other singular document, the letter sent by you to the Rochester convention?

Comrades, we have by this time seen enough of the members of your party to have the utmost confidence that they as well as the members of our party are fully capable of deciding upon these questions if an opportunity is given to them.

We rest our case on the good sense and judgment of the membership of both parties.

Job Harriman,
Morris Hillquit.

Amalgamation a Mistake

Editor of The Herald: I am glad to see, and so are a good many comrades in New York, that the conference has succeeded in greatly reducing the enthusiasm of many comrades all over the country for unity. If the conference has demonstrated anything it is that the S. L. P. faction did not want an honorable alliance with the S. D. P., but a complete swallowing up of our party. What was the conference, if not a meeting to endorse everything that was passed by the Rochester convention and to undo everything that was built up by a few years of hard toil first by the S. D. A. and later by the S. D. P. The S. D. P. never boasted of being a class conscious, proletarian, scientific Marxian party in the DeLeon or the "Volkszeitung" sense of the word. We never inquired whether our agitators are well versed in the three volumes of Marx and all their commentaries or not, and we never cared to examine through a microscope the speeches of Eugene Debs to see whether he did not in some enthusiastic plea for Socialism commit an error in his definitions of some economic terms, as capital, wages, etc. We were even so liberal as to raise the question of a farmer's plank, in spite of the fact that a farmer does not properly belong to our class-conscious proletarian class. All these traits of the S. D. P. are regarded by our new S. L. P. comrades as symptoms of "muddle-headedness," and in case of amalgamation they would certainly view it as their sacred mission to purify the S. D. P. from all its old traditions. That all this is true was more than demonstrated by the conference, where they also gave us a taste of those "constitutional" measures by which their mission will be carried out. Now it is a fact that these two parties still differ in their spirit, and this difference can not be so easily wiped out by a mere decision to amalgamate. I don't after all blame the S. L. P. representatives for their attempt to swallow the S. D. P.; there was simply more shrewdness on their part, and as a result they succeeded in the game, and not we; the result would be otherwise under opposite circumstances. The trouble, it seems to me, lies in the original idea of amalgamating two things which do not lean toward each other, neither in spirit nor in mutual sympathy.

But some sort of unity is certainly wanted, and the problem is to find some way of working together so as to reap all the benefits of combination and avoid all the disadvantages connected with a premature amalgamation. And in this our European comrades could give us, as in many other things, very useful hints. Look at the Socialists in France, where unity certainly was of much greater importance than here. The Socialists there could not very well stand separated in factions, while Socialism became so strong as to compel the government to give a Socialist leader a place in the cabinet. And still did the French Socialists amalgamate? Certainly not. They simply combined for the purpose of common action, leaving the integrity of the different Socialist organizations untouched. All they did was the election of a joint executive board, but each organization retains its identity, its membership, its newspapers, its policy, as before. In course of time a perfect amalgamation will probably take place, but this will be a natural union and not an "automatic coupling," accomplished by a stroke of the pen. Exactly the same we see in England. At a recent conference a united labor party was organized composed of trade unions of the S. D. F., S. L. P. and the Fabian Society. And here again we see a co-operation and not an amalgamation, its sole purpose being to work together in political campaigns. The S. D. F. remains the S. D. F., the S. L. P. remains what it was before and so does the Fabian Society and the trade unions. None of them would ever consent to give up its identity. Every one of them has its own policy, its own spirit, its own history and traditions, and it justly desires to keep up its individuality. The union was brought about for such purposes, where unity is absolutely indispensable, namely, for political action and no more.

Now, why should not the S. D. P. and the S. L. P. faction unite on the same lines? This is to my mind the only way in which an effective, healthy union could be accomplished. Not amalgamation, but co-operation. Let Debs and Harriman run on the same ticket, though belonging to different organizations; let us begin to practice the same policy of combining with the S. L. P. during campaigns everywhere and we may expect a real genuine union to grow out of course of time and not an artificial fusion with mistrust at its very birth. It is never too late and I would urgently recommend the Executive Committee to set to work at once and to devise some practical plan by which such co-operation could be brought about even for the coming campaign, and I am confident that a co-operation on these lines will be much more acceptable to a good many members of the S. D. P. than the scheme prepared by the conference.

Hayes' Letter Settled Him

Dear Comrades: I am one of the common herd, but I want to tell you of my feelings the past week when I read the manifesto of the executive board. I was much depressed; then I grew indignant. Why had they acted so quickly. They were hot. Why not cool off and then if need be, act? Why not let us wait and discuss the committee report, and then, if it seems best, vote that down? Then the thought would come that perhaps they were right after all. For a week I wavered—first one side then the other. Then came the Herald for April 14. The first thing I read was Max Hayes' reply, and it was enough. I did not need to read MacCartney's able presentation of the case. Hayes' letter settled me. There is one thing that especially struck me among the other self-accusations. He says: "When the name question was being discussed in New York I attended the weekly meeting of the Central Federated Union and addressed that body." Why, Mr. Hayes, were you not sent as a delegate to the committee on unification? Was it not your duty to be there? It was not for you just then to be attempting to make a few more converts. Surely there were other Socialists who could have done that. What if the other seventeen had also gone about speaking at meetings. Mr. Hayes, your place was at the unification meeting and no amount of circumlocution can cover it up. I am for the Social Democratic Party as it is.

For Socialist Unity

Comrade Socialists: The manifesto issued by the National Executive Board of the Social Democratic Party and published in the Social Democratic Herald of April 7, 1900, justifies an expression of opinion on our part, as well as on the part of all other organized Socialists, and because of that we feel it to be our duty as a portion of the Social Democratic Party to issue this circular.

We have read this manifesto with unfeigned regret and surprise. It was our hope that the plans inaugurated by the Rochester and Indianapolis conventions and practically consummated at the conference on socialist union held at New York would have reached completion harmoniously and satisfactorily. It was apparent to every one that the time had come for the union of Socialist forces and necessity demanded that such a union should be accomplished in order that the cause of Socialism should be advanced and accelerated. In view of existing conditions we therefore hold:

First. That union is a necessity. Second. That the overwhelming sentiment among Socialists for union demanded that such union be accomplished as speedily and equitably as possible.

Third. That the negotiations for union should be conducted regardless of the acts or wishes of any individual.

The action of the National Executive Board of the Social Democratic Party has presented a new phase in the situation and it is our purpose to outline what in our opinion is the best course for all Socialists interested to pursue in the premises.

The manifesto in question charges that the Social Democratic committee on union violated their instructions in failing to preserve the right of a concurrent vote on the question of party name, and also that certain members of the Socialist Labor Party committee on union failed to fulfill pledges said to have been given at an informal meeting of certain delegates held at Indianapolis during the convention. In answer to the first charge we call attention to the fact that the members of both parties, in case of a failure to decide upon one of the two names by concurrent vote, have the choice of declaring whether or not they will accept that name which receives a majority of the total votes cast on the question of name. This proposition also requires a concurrent vote, thus leaving the entire matter in the hands of the membership of both parties. Consequently the first charge falls to the ground.

In reply to the second charge we insist that the failure of individuals to fulfill pledges, even if made, is not sufficient reason to prevent a union of those wishing for the inauguration of Socialism. It will be plain that if any conference was held as recorded such conference was entirely unofficial, and for the National Executive Board to base their action against union, upon the results of that conference is unjustifiable, because any action taken by the conference was a usurpation of power and not binding upon either party.

And while we deny the right of the National Executive Board to submit such a proposition as embodied in their manifesto, yet taking all the circumstances apparent at this time into account, and also realizing our inability to fully state our position we urge and call upon the members of the Social Democratic Party, not in our name, but in the name of the working class movement for Socialism, to vote "Yes" upon the proposition submitted by the National Executive Board in their manifesto, believing this action will best avert the destination of a unified movement.

Further, we call upon the members of the Socialist Democratic Party and the Socialist Labor Party to vote for the name "Social Democratic" as the name of the united party and also in favor of the other propositions submitted by the joint committee on union, to the end that unity may be effected. Believing it to be the purpose of the present National Executive Board to maintain a separate organization, we therefore urge upon the members of both parties the distinct necessity of voting for the name "Social Democratic" as the name of the united party, so that such purpose of the board if attempted in case the name "Social Democratic" is not adopted, be prevented. By voting for the name "Social Democratic" you will prevent the use of the name unduly, and thus facilitate the transfer of the control of the Social Democratic party into the hands of the provisional committee of the united party. Prompt and decisive action is necessary at this critical period and we trust every socialist will act with but the best of interests of the great cause of Socialism as their guide.

The Party Press Arrangement

Comrades:—I have already criticized the press arrangement submitted by the conference committee, but want to add another word on a phase of it that has since come to my knowledge.

At the conference I opposed the selection of Springfield, Mass., as the seat of the National Executive Board for various reasons. One of them was that if the local Socialist paper which the Springfield anti-DeLeonites publish and support was in any way a reflection of their views and their general make-up, as would naturally be the case, they were not exactly the kind of people to direct the affairs of a party of which the Social Democrats were to form a component part. At this point I was interrupted by a member of our own committee, and was told that the Proletarian, the paper to which I had reference, was practically dead, and its editor was discredited among his own kind, not recognized by them. An S. L. P. delegate volunteered the information that the editor, whose name is Spelman, was now supposed to be with the De Leonites; and all the rest of the S. L. P.s, sitting around, looked on and listened, and by silence gave consent. Upon the above assurances I dropped that point, and went on to another.

That you may know the ground of my objection to the Proletarian, I quote from its issue of Nov. 19, 1899, which I happen to have by me, as a specimen of what the able editor can do when he tries:

"A liar himself, this old buck, master of bastard English, father of socialist liars, editor of Kuhn's People, Daniel De Leon, struts at the head of a contingent of skulking, cringing, fawning frightened followers. For these latter we have much pity. They are dupes; they are stupid; they are hypnotized. Do hot charge us with using abusive language, Messrs. Skunks; we have simply picked up a few of your terms, by the way. You think you like a scrap. We enjoy it better than you, when we find it a necessity. Gentlemen of the S. L. P., it is necessary to get out on a skunk hunt."

Now, I don't want to criticize the editor of the Proletarian. For those who like that sort of thing, his style is all right. In fact, I frankly acknowledge that, for its kind, it can hardly be surpassed. I merely say that it is not our kind; and I believe most Social Democrats will agree with me.

Well, as I said before, upon the assurances given me that the Proletarian was practically dead, and its editor not recognized by the Kangaroos, I allowed the matter to drop.

I had to leave the conference before it adjourned, in order to catch my train for Boston, but left three of our committee, Comrades Carey, Hoehn and Butscher, together with the entire committee of the S. L. P., to settle up a few minor details of the constitution. They settled up these matters, and, I find, also took up and decided the exceedingly

MORE BENHAM (S.L.P.) VENOM

The Workers' Call prints the letter of Benham, which appeared in this paper, but with the following additional proof of high moral principle from a genuine S. L. P. source; he inserts this in copy sent to papers with the indelible S. L. P. brand:

"Incidentally, would it not be very advantageous for the Republican party to have as many Democratic parties in the field as possible? And might not the Republican party so 'interest' the four signers of the manifesto that they would make the stand they have for 'Democratic' as against anything and everything? Whoop 'er up for union!"

important question of which papers should be placed upon the list of official organs and receive the support of the National Executive Committee. Six papers were selected by the joint committee, and among the six, as you will see, comrades, by the majority report, is the Proletarian!

How is that for "good faith"? Is that fair and honorable treatment for me, I ask? I cannot keep silent upon this matter. It is an outrage that it should be given out as the best judgment of the joint committee that the Proletarian should be endorsed as an official organ of the united parties, receive the support of the National Executive Committee, and be placed upon precisely the same footing as our Herald, which, whatever else it may not be, is at least clean! It matters comparatively little what private enterprise papers may say, even though they may call themselves Socialists; but, for the utterances of an official organ, the party itself is properly held responsible. And of all the six papers on the list the Proletarian, being published at the proposed seat of the N. E. C., will be most generally recognized as the special mouthpiece of the party. Are you willing, comrades, to be held responsible for all the possible utterances of the author of the above quotation? I, for one, am not.

Another criticism I have to offer of the list submitted, is that it contains no German paper. We have lots of good German comrades, and at least three good German papers, any one of which might have been put upon the list. Many of the German comrades have already complained that the S. D. Herald is of little use to them as they read it with much difficulty, and have requested that arrangements be made whereby they could have a German paper instead. This would have been a good opportunity to make such an arrangement.

But what does it matter? The whole scheme is wrong. And as I expected, our membership is not satisfied with it. A letter from Maine, received this morning, among many others of a similar tone, says: "We would rather yield every other point, even the location of the national headquarters, and if necessary the party name, rather than not to have the Herald as our official organ and sent to the membership free. We believe this to be the strongest feature of the organization. Every member getting the paper, it keeps all in touch with the spirit of the party. I think this feature has been a very strong factor in building up the party to its present standing." To which I heartily subscribe.

I believe that the press plan, submitted by the joint committee, should be rejected, and the committee instructed to devise and submit a better one.

MARGARET HAILE.

Reject the Majority Report

Editor of The Herald: Let no comrade be disheartened because of the action of the New York conference. The principles of Socialism are founded upon the eternal rock of justice and they will endure. The petty bickerings of individuals can in no way affect their truth. The Social Democratic party is built upon those principles, justice, purity, truth and progress have been its watchwords from the day of its organization down to the present time. We have started at zero and in twenty months have made our party a power in the country. We have done this not only without the assistance, in any way, of the S. L. P., but in most instances IN SPITE OF THEIR ACTIVE OPPOSITION.

We have made the party in spite of them; surely we can continue it without them.

We are on the eve of success; why should we feel disheartened? The work of the conference committee is unsatisfactory in almost every respect and it should be rejected. Time, the great peace-maker, settles all disputes; and the day is not far distant when there will be but one Socialist party in all this land, and that will be the Social Democratic party of America.

But let us in discussing these things remember that this is not a time for accusations and recriminations. It matters not what Hillquit or Hayes or Benham or any other man may have promised or have said; it is what has been done that counts, and our discussion should be limited to that. Let us not be too hasty to condemn but rather let us never forget that we are comrades in the most glorious struggle for liberty and justice that the world has ever known. Courage, a cool head, and a perfect loyalty are the prime necessities of the hour. A month from now our passions will have cooled and many of the things which now appear as mountains will not even make molehills then. Let every comrade stand loyal to the party and wait. And may the spirit and wisdom pervade our councils and help us to know the right, is the prayer of Evansville, Ind. C. W. Hewitt.

Conference Report Repudiated

Comrades of the Social Democratic Party: The members of the Social Democratic party demand the right to vote as a party on the propositions of the committee on unity that were authorized by the convention.

It is their privilege and right to initiate freely such amendments as they desire shall be submitted with the report of said committee. The national executive, consisting of Eugene V. Debs, Victor L. Berger, Jesse Cox, Seymour Stedman and Frederick Heath, is still in power and authority, and will be until by referendum the members of the party declare for unity and elect other members of a national committee to succeed them.

The Social Democratic Party has aroused the dormant hatred of oppression and tyranny that is the heritage of each true American citizen. We want this to continue and only those thoroughly imbued with the American spirit can continue the task.

While we yield to no one in respect, love and admiration for the Socialists who have borne the heat and burden of the days that are gone, we yet insist that this aroused American sentiment cannot be led properly by the eastern members fresh from the imbroglios, sharp practices and club-using of the past few years.

Our movement is great enough to be truly representative. A few men in a restricted locality, circumscribed by condition and their sectionalism, cannot look after a national movement. Let us profit by the mistakes of the past. A national committee formed and controlled by a small section is a gigantic mistake.

We, therefore, members of the Social Democratic party contained in branches Nos. 1 and 4 of New Jersey initiate the following amendments to the committee's report and call upon branches in five states to second our amendments that the national executive committee may submit them together with the majority report of the unity committee to the referendum of the party:

First—That the headquarters of the national committee shall be in Chicago, Ill.

Second—That one member from each state and territory shall constitute the national committee. Each state to send its delegates to the national committee meeting at its own expense. Seven members to constitute a quorum at a called meeting and a total vote of twenty-five necessary to settle a question submitted by mail. Any state may be represented by proxy.

Third—We deplore the failure of the understanding which contemplated and pledged support from the "unnamed" Socialists for the name "Social Democratic party."

The name selected as a substitute is most unfortunate. There is not now nor perhaps ever will be a "united" Socialist party. The name is a sham, a piece of cheap brag, an air bubble. It breathes an atmosphere out of which we had graduated.

We were willing to leave the question of name to a referendum if an honest endeavor was made to get the sense of the members that desired to join us, but the secrecy thrown around the members and organization of the S. L. P. and their action in the committee on union make us lose confidence. Inasmuch as the resolution submitted by the committee on union No. 3 which reads: "In case the party name voted for by you fails to obtain the concurrent majority of both parties shall the name that receives the majority of the total vote of both parties be adopted" contravenes the resolutions submitted and carried at the Indianapolis convention, we demand that the national executive committee shall rule it out of the referendum and not submit it to the voters.

We are glad that the national executive committee seeks an expression of the members of the party on unity. The members of our branches are in favor of unity, but we want to safeguard the interests and principles which led to our separate organization two years ago.

CONDENSED OPINIONS

So many communications have been received by The Herald on the subject of unity and its various incidents, that, while it has been our desire to print them entire, their number and length makes this impossible. We give complete more than a dozen letters in this paper on both sides of the controversy; others have been necessarily condensed to a brief statement of the writer's position for or against the attitude of the executive body or the matter of unity, as follows:

Geo. A. Gowdy, Bristol, Conn.: "Let us accept the referendum of the New York conference just as it is proposed. By it we can accomplish union. After union is accomplished we can have more referendums if we are not satisfied with our condition."

Branch 2, Erie, Pa., instructed its secretary to formulate charges against the executive board and voted in favor of the union.

Branch 5, Philadelphia, indorses the attitude of the executive board, but expressly declares the necessity for union. East Side Branch, New York, adopted resolutions expressing full confidence in the board.

Branch 3, New York, passed resolutions condemning the action of the executive board and favoring union.

F. M. McQuivey, Eureka, Utah: "The S. D. P. is a movement; the S. L. P. bolters a sect—yes, only a part of a sect. I am for union—when the time comes for it."

W. G. Markland, Sherwood, Tenn.: "After digesting the action of the Indianapolis convention and of the union conference, at New York, I am compelled to believe that there was violation of good faith and pledges, in spirit and in fact."

Julius A. Martin, secretary Branch 1, Ardmore, I. T.: "Our branch will send in an official vote; it will be no—no—no."

The branch at Seattle, Wash., sends in long resolutions denunciatory of the executive board.

A. D. Stone, St. Louis, is opposed to the board's attitude.

Branch 4, Chicago, is solid against union and in support of the executive board. This is practically true of all branches in Chicago, where the "Big Four" are known.

Branch 9, Brockton, Mass., supports the action of the executive board, along with Illinois, New York, Wisconsin, Indiana, Kentucky, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Maine and almost the entire West. Sober second thought has saved before; it will save the Social Democratic party.

"Merlin," after getting a line on all the facts, writes: "I am unqualifiedly in favor of no union. Don't get discouraged. This is only a stone under the wheel. It may shake, but cannot stop the wagon of progress. The S. D. name and spirit shall conquer."

The vote secured by Comrade Bruell of Pana, Ill., who was the Social Democratic candidate for alderman from the Fourth ward, gives the party a place on the official ballot next year. His vote was 46 against 54 for the democrat and 74 for the republican.

Trades unionists will be consulting their own interests and helping their own cause by giving the special trades union edition of the Appeal to Reason the widest circulation possible. Every union should order a big bundle to distribute among non-union workers.

Job Harriman has been appointed state organizer of the united party for New York. This was done at a meeting at the Labor Lyceum, New York city, April 9, by the two state committees.

The official returns of the recent municipal election at Milwaukee give the Social Democrats the following votes: Heath, 2,584; Hinz, 2,681; Tuttle, 2,749.

The city central committee of Chicago has voted unanimously to indorse the position of the executive board.

Socialism in a Little Box

Comrades: For a long time the Socialist Labor Party tried to keep Socialism shut up in a little box, which was watched by a holy guard, and on certain occasions, if one furnished the required credentials, the lid of the box was lifted and he was allowed a whiff from the inside. The qualifications entitling one to this privilege were, generally speaking, inability to speak English, lack of good clothes and proximity to New York city. Deficiency in any one of these qualifications had to be made up by excess in one of the others.

As Socialists became more numerous in spite of the guarded box, another protecting circle was reached and a detective cordon was organized, one or two members of which were in each center of Socialistic thought. These detectives were furnished with a measure, and all who joined the party were either stretched out or lopped off to fit the measure. At last a revolt took place in the ranks and the holy guard was despoiled of the box.

Those who were not fortunate enough to attend the S. D. P. convention at Indianapolis can not fully appreciate the happy fraternalism characteristic of that assemblage. The joy of meeting comrades known only through correspondence and reputation, the intense desire to act wisely, the earnest wish to unite all Socialists of the United States were uppermost in the minds of all. In that spirit the committee on union was elected. When that committee met the corresponding committee from the S. L. P. it developed that the pledge of good faith given to our comrades had been given to allay our fears and throw our committee off its guard. In place of a desire to unite Socialists and best promote Socialism, it was expected to bargain for such a union of party machine as would best control the Socialist movement. Instead of a fraternal conference of workers in the same cause, it was expected to treat pro and con for the guardianship of the little box.

Comrades, Socialism is like air and sunshine; it is a glorious fact, free to all, good or bad, just or unjust. The mists of ignorance obscure it, but it is always there. Any attempt to shut it up develops the poison of exclusiveness. The S. D. P. cannot assimilate that poison.

We have an organization that is growing, an executive who have done well, a paper clean and free from malice, headquarters in the storm center of the revolution, all these have been rejected by the committee of the S. L. P.

They have only left us our candidate, and his worth and popularity is relied on to break up completely the very party we have builded.

We cannot consent to this. Let us stand together. Let us say to all Socialists, "Come and help us push the standard of Socialism as high as possible during the coming campaign. Give us your personal strength and help for the coming battle and then let us meet again and try to understand each other." By that time the little box may be lost.

Corinne S. Brown.

Artificial Union Not Wanted

"The mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse." The scheme for political union which has been industriously boomed and exploited for six months has brought forth its first-born, and behold it is a misshapen monstrosity of discord and strife.

Perhaps this result was necessary in order to show some of our comrades who had almost gone daft over this scheme, the utter folly of attempting to patch up an artificial union without first securing organic unity.

Whatever the merits of the present controversy, there can be no doubt that the plan finally degenerated into an ordinary political dicker and trade. The goods were not delivered as promised, and as a result criminations and recriminations, charges of broken pledges and double-dealing are flying thick and fast. All this in the name of socialist unity. Like the fellow who was bound to have peace if he had to fight for it, they have forced a scheme for union upon us to the very verge of disunion in our own party.

Do we need any further demonstration of the utter folly of pursuing such a course in such a spirit any further? A lathwork aggregation of political parties without organic unity always has and always will be a farce and a failure. Socialist parties are no exception to this rule. We have learned a lesson. Let us now call a halt and take our bearings. We have been chasing this will-o'-the-wisp of socialist unity till we find ourselves floundering in the quagmire of party discord and disruption.

Our first duty is to our own party. No Social Democrat and no Socialist worthy of the name will seek union at the expense of disunion in our own ranks, now that the danger is apparent. The man who persists in pushing a scheme for so-called unity in the face of imminent disruption has no right to call himself a unionist.

The man who in this emergency does aught to foment the spirit of discord is not a harmonizer. The man who says that those opposed to his pet scheme must be "kicked out," and that the next fight on Socialism must be to DRIVE OUT the "lawyers, doctors and ministers," such a man is "stealing the livery of heaven to serve the devil in," for under the guise of a revolutionist he is acting the part of a reactionist, and under the guise of unity he is creating discord!

A crisis is upon us, and the supreme duty is to work for peace and harmony within our own ranks first of all, and to preserve intact the name and integrity of the Social Democratic Party. This, as I understand it, is the attitude of our national executive, and in it they should receive our fullest support. They could do no less and be loyal to their trust.

Does this mean that the cause of Socialist unity must be side-tracked and the sincere men and women who are looking and longing for a welding of Socialist forces must consider themselves enemies and be kept apart? Not at all. The absurdity and failure of the present attempt has only made apparent the necessity for organic unity. The present trouble has sprung entirely from the fact that those who were booming political union began at the wrong end. They attempted to stand their pyramid on its apex, and behold! it has toppled over almost before it was built. Now let the comrades of the S. L. P. and the S. D. P. who sincerely desire true organic unity, go to work first to secure harmony in their own ranks, then between their respective local branches, and out of this will grow organic unity which will inevitably find expression in state and national organizations. The pyramid will then stand on its base.

In view of the present crisis the cause of genuine unity can best be served by voting no in the proposition submitted by our national executive, throwing aside this artificial patchwork of the conference committee and then going to work in our local branches to bring about harmony in our own ranks and unity with the S. L. P. If we proceed in this spirit and by these methods the longest way round will prove the shortest way home and in the end we shall secure genuine and lasting unity of Socialist forces.

Milwaukee City Committee

The central committee of the S. D. P. of the city of Milwaukee assembled at a regular meeting on the 9th of April, 1900, and discussed fully the pending problem of the proposed union of forces of one of the factions of the S. L. P. and the S. D. P., and arrived at the following conclusions:

1. The deliberate repudiation by the representatives of the S. L. P. of their own pledge, solemnly given by them at the Indianapolis conference, in New York, show plainly that the leaders of that party do not act in good faith and entertain a scheme to simply absorb the S. D. P. under the pretext of union.

2. The delegation of the S. D. P., by agreeing in New York to the reopening of the discussion as to the name of the united parties and to the submission to the referendum vote two names jointly by the S. D. P. and S. L. P., in direct violation of the understanding arrived at at the Indianapolis conference, clearly acted in a grossly inconsistent manner, being swayed by the Machiavelian tactics of the S. L. P. leaders.

3. The union of the S. D. P. with the S. L. P. as an organization would be, under the present circumstances, simply suicide.

4. Every Socialist who subscribes to the principles and tactics of the S. D. P. is fraternally welcome to join the rank and file of the members of the S. D. P.

5. The young and hopeful S. D. P. ought not to be burdened by the fatal mistakes, gross blunders and extreme unpopularity of the S. L. P.

In view of this and other considerations the central committee of the Milwaukee members of the S. D. P. hereby heartily endorse the manifesto issued by the National Central Board of the S. D. P. and embraces the opportunity of expressing itself unanimously and unequivocally against any union or fusion with the S. L. P. as an organization at the present time and under the present conditions.

Believing; 1. That the consummation of a harmonious and effective union of Socialist forces is, on general principles, a matter of supreme importance; that at present it seems most desirable; and that such union would undoubtedly strengthen and stimulate the Socialist movement;

2. That the spirit of calm deliberation, frank and fraternal discussion, and a thorough knowledge of every side of debated questions, are necessary to a proper understanding and settlement of the same;

3. That it is most desirable to develop a spirit of faith in each other and in the movement; while, on the contrary, the arousing of the spirit of distrust, and denunciation of individuals, is harmful and disruptive;

4. That, while the party name is not of chief importance, it should nevertheless clearly express the object for which all true Socialists are striving, and at the same time should avoid the possibility of confusion with other party names and principles, or danger of variance with the truth; and

5. That the very essence of Socialism is based upon the expressed wish and will of all concerned;

Therefore, it is the resolution of Branch No. 18, Newburyport, Mass.,

1. That every possible honest means should be used for the consummation of a harmonious union between the Socialist Labor party and the Social Democratic party, avoiding even the appearance of any desire or effort on the part of one party to absorb or control the other, but exhibiting every willingness to make mutual concessions in the interests of the one great end in view;

2. That, though it can readily be understood that undue haste may easily arise from great zeal for the cause, yet such haste is to be regretted, especially where it leads to recriminations and reflections upon comrades of either party who have undoubtedly sacrificed for the same cause, and who give large evidence of an honest desire to continue doing their utmost in its behalf;

3. That ample time and opportunity should be given for the fullest and freest discussion and expression of opinion in the national organ, but that unpleasant personalities and recriminations should be avoided;

4. That the joint committee on union is entitled to the gratitude of all comrades for the time and attention thus far given to the duties for which it was appointed; that its present report be accepted as a report of progress; and that further time be given it for the formulation of a program for union, giving the largest rational latitude to the rank and file in deciding the party name, location of headquarters for the national executive committee, and all other matters which shall be submitted to the branches for referendum vote.

Suggestion From Boston

The following resolution was adopted at a meeting of the Boston city committee S. D. P., held April 17:

"We recognize that the present discord in our party on the matter of Socialist unity is due to the intent of none but to the mistakes of many. We deny the necessity of placing the blame or imputing the motives of any, and declare our confidence in the integrity of all parties concerned.

"In the interest of harmony we urge the National Executive Board to recall their manifesto and referendum and leave the proposition submitted by the conference committee to the judgment of the membership of the party.

Signed: Affirmative: M. J. Konikow, S. E. Putney, A. McDonald, Bra. 1; C. W. White, Bra. 4; J. Spero, A. Segal, Bra. 15; T. H. Goetz, Bra. 44; H. H. Goodwin, F. S. Schmidt, Bra. 45; J. Ryan, Bra. 53.

Negative: A. C. Mendall, Bra. 29. I was absent from the meeting because of illness. Should have signed the affirmative list had I been present.

Another View From Brooklyn

Comrades:—Four of our comrades by a usurpation of authority and obvious misrepresentation of facts dare interfere in the progress of Socialism on the eve of a union of the two Socialist parties of America.

There is no use threshing our well-known facts. As intelligent men and women, as Socialists, we must realize them. We must have observed and we must acknowledge that, as a whole, the S. L. P. has acted much more fairly in the unity negotiations than the S. D. P., not that our comrades have not done nobly in the great majority, but that the less than manly conduct of some S. D. P. comrades has dragged our side in the mud. As we foolishly gave them voice in our party management so must we witness the besmirching of our party's name and fame.

It was well that Comrade Eugene Debs should have been elected a member of the S. D. P. Executive Committee. But to aid him in directing the affairs of a party representing the most glorious of causes whom did we choose? They and their qualifications are:

Comrade Victor Berger, who has continually vilified in his paper earnest Socialist workers; who, by so doing, stamps himself as prejudiced and unqualified to act in an executive capacity; who wrote in his paper when he said he had influenced Comrade Debs to accept the nomination; Comrade Heath, who has said that the S. L. P. comrades were of another kind altogether from himself and the S. D. P.; Comrade Jesse Cox, who has said he did not want anything whatever to do with the S. L. P. comrades; and Comrade Seymour Stedman, who is noted for being unable to keep his head.

Shall we let these men now prevent us from boarding the same ship with our brethren and sailing toward the shores of the co-operative commonwealth? They are willing to sail, too, for that shore; as such we know their intelligence and honesty of purpose; but as they desire to ride in their own vessel that they may stand at the helm and feel that their individual selves have not been contaminated by contact with those in the other craft, we despise their narrowmindedness and uselessness.

We of the rank and file want unity. We know that every single objection to it has arisen through some of our leaders: At least four of them, and, apparently, Comrades McCartney and Haile do not favor it. Shall we allow six comrades to sway us from the loftiest purpose we could at present hold? Most important of all things now is unity. More important than the name or tactics or constitution or propaganda or the six—one billion five hundred millions of the world's people who wish to prevent it more than all others.

The cause of Socialism demands that we stand shoulder to shoulder. When we have union we may decide what to do with the leaders who do not lead. It would be galling to have to remain in our party if union should not be effected. Let us take our lesson as nobly as the S. L. P. took theirs—overthrew their schemes and come forth free men. And as De Leonism is ever rampant so on our part 10,000 of us, eternal vigilance is the price of not only our liberty but, perhaps, that of the proletariat, for through the S. D. P. and the S. L. P. must come the co-operative commonwealth. If we flinch we are worse than capitalists, for they do not know the truth. We, knowing it, are most degraded if we fail in our duty to ourselves as workingmen and proletariats.

I like the last paragraph of Max Hayes' reply to the Executive Committee's (four-fifths) aspersions:

"There are some people in this world who are bound to have their own way in even the most minute particulars. They will rule or ruin, being incapable of real leadership, a welding together of homogeneous elements. Such a man is Daniel O'Connell. There are others, nevertheless. Hurrah for Socialism in our time!"

Let me add there are some hero worshipers in the S. D. P. who often think themselves the heroes and continue the worship.

Say Union is Completed

At a joint meeting of branches 2 and 3, Cleveland, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, In our opinion the executive board instead of furthering the amalgamation of the S. L. P. and S. D. P., has widened the breach by the issuing of the manifesto appearing in the S. D. Herald of April 7.

"We believe the committee as a whole has done its duty to the members of both parties. We further believe that the committee of the S. L. P. are personally in favor of the name Social Democratic party, and it was only fair and just to their constituents that two names be submitted.

"It appears that there have been too much personal feeling and prejudice throughout all the proceedings, and it would be better for all concerned if such affairs were left out.

"Resolved, That we most emphatically protest against the issuing of the manifesto at this time, as the amalgamation is now practically complete. It would now be too late to submit the question of amalgamation to a vote. For in our opinion the rank and file have been in favor of it at the cost of any sacrifice.

Committee."

To Our Connecticut Readers

All unattached Socialists in the state of Connecticut are requested to write Louis Schlaf, 26 Spring street, Rockville, for information concerning the organization of branches.

Southern California, Attention

All Socialists in the seven southern counties of Southern California should now get to work and so far as possible form branches in every voting precinct. To further this end communicate at once with James T. VanRensselaer, 1618 Terman street, Los Angeles, Cal.

One of the new branches reported as organized at Milwaukee last week should have been credited to Sheboygan.

From the Viewpoint of History

Comrades: As a rule, I do not mind abuse—I am accustomed to it. It usually is an indicator of the fact that what I am doing is right, whenever I am abused by either the capitalist press or by the members and papers of the S. L. P. But this is a different case. At the present I am denounced in no small measure by some members of our party who do not fully understand the situation. However, I made it a rule of my life not to be stamped by oratory, never to be coaxed by flattery, nor ever to be intimidated by abuse. In order to be convinced I want plain facts.

Comrades, I do believe I find myself in the position of that Greek who said: "Strike me, but listen to me."

Before all things, permit me to say that I have studied the S. L. P. and its methods for many years. In fact, I was compelled to do so, having been a Socialist for many years and at one time the editor of a daily paper which was acknowledged an organ of the S. L. P.

The talk about De Leonism in the S. L. P. is all wrong. De Leonism is simply the synonym of Social Labor Partyism; what is usually called De Leonism was there a long time before they ever heard of De Leon, but it could not speak English. I will admit though that Professor De Leon, having more ability than the average S. L. P. leader, brought some method into the madness.

To begin with, the S. L. P. is not a political party, never was one and never can be one—it is simply a political sect that adopted Marx's book "Das Kapital" as its bible. And a bible not in the modern, but in old medieval sense, when few people could read it. "Das Kapital" is a book written in a foreign language—only the first volume was ever translated into English, and even the original is written in a language foreign to the average German. The reading of "Das Kapital" presupposes either an academic education or very hard application. In all my experience with the S. L. P., where every man constantly talks about Karl Marx as if he had attended school with him, I only found two or three men who had really read "Das Kapital" and talked about it understandingly. Two of these men are in our party now.

And to the fact that Marx's book is used as fetish rather than an economic work, is partly due that Social Labor Partyism is and always was the caricature of Marxism; and I want it understood that even pure Marxism has not in all things stood the test of time and experience.

To the average S. L. P. man Marx's work is a book with seven seals. Still, the first thing the S. L. P. always accomplished was to give its members a fearfully magnified idea of their importance and "science." They learn a few phrases about exploitation, surplus value, the great revolution and especially about "class-consciousness," repeat them on every occasion, and call that science. In that way the most ignorant of men becomes a "scientific Socialist" in one evening, without having the inconvenience of studying books and thinking about social problems.

The rest of their tactics can be told in a very few words: It is to denounce and vilify everybody who does not entirely agree with them. A man who does not belong to the S. L. P. is in their eyes either a very ignorant person, even if he be a university professor, or he is a scoundrel. Especially do they say this of every reformer, labor leader, or Socialist who has not joined them—of the S. D. P. they have claimed innumerable times that it was a "middle-class party," founded and kept up by the capitalists.

With such conditions it is natural enough that the S. L. P.s watch each other very closely and that every member is a spy upon all the rest. It is enough to see a member shake hands with a government official who is his neighbor, or to bid "Good morning" to a man he has known from childhood, but who is running on the ticket of a capitalist party, to be considered a traitor and a man "who has sold out." The consequence is that every S. L. P. member, no matter how highly he stands in the eyes of his comrades, is sooner or later considered a renegade by his companions unless he dies young—I mean young as a party member.

In short, their tactics are based upon fanaticism, but fanaticism and falsehood being twin-brothers, there is probably no other political organization where more untruth is told about opponents than in the S. L. P.

The main business transacted by the S. L. P. sections (before De Leon's time or after) was not the propagation of Socialism. Their main business was to fight other Socialists who held opinions different from those in vogue in the S. L. P. or of whom the S. L. P. leaders were jealous. They took especially good care to kill off Socialist papers that they could not fully and absolutely control. Besides papers of small importance the S. L. P. has during the last decade ruined four daily Socialist newspapers.

The result? The S. L. P. became the great stumbling block in the way of progress of Socialism in this country. The S. L. P. is probably not stronger today than it was twenty years ago, although both sides, the De Leonites as well as the Volkzeitung wing, claim 82,000 votes, most of which they received because there was no other Socialist party in the field. In itself the S. L. P. has been most barren and impotent. It has produced not one man—outside of Daniel De Leon—who is in any way above the most common mediocrity; still, it has besmirched and vilified every labor leader and reformer who has appeared during the last thirty years from Swinton to Debs and Jones of Toledo.

The ideal of the S. L. P.—provided it has any ideals—seems to be a communistic state controlled by hierarchy; something of the kind the Jesuit Fathers had in Paraguay more than 100 years ago. It was a state where everybody had enough to eat and where all had the same elementary education and where all worked in common—but where all independent thinking ceased, the Jesuit Fathers thinking for them all. The result was that life there became so dull that even the propagation of the race ceased to a large extent, although the rulers put up a price for every child that was born. And I may say for myself that if I thought for one moment that the methods and principles of the S. L. P. had any show at all in this country I would direct my last drop of blood in fighting them, for I would rather live under the despotism of the emperor of Russia.

But some may say, Well, all these things have been true of the old S. L. P., but things have changed since the great "Revolution of July 10, 1899," when they dethroned Daniel De Leon. Let's see.

Was that great revolution—it took three Tammany policemen to quench it—really brought about by a change in the methods, principles or tactics in the S. L. P.?

Nothing of the kind. Professor Daniel De Leon, the last generally acknowledged pope of the S. L. P., wanted to get a hold of the type-setting machines and the press of the New York Volkzeitung in order to publish a daily People. It is only natural that the Volkzeitung's editors defended their means of "production and distribution," and being pressed very hard, they tried the same "coup d'état" on Daniel De Leon and his executive board they did ten years before in 1889. But they forgot one thing. In 1889 they had peaceable Germans to fight, who were not prepared for war. But this time they got hold of the wrong fellow. Dan was prepared, and when the Volkzeitung's crowd came to commit the "revolution," they found a picked lot of Irishmen and Americans to receive them. Dan made short work of the Volkzeitung-Garde, and the only fruit of the great revolution for the Volkzeitung is the capture of the Labor Lyceum Saloon. Not only this. Daniel De Leon beat them in the courts. He got the party name and the party emblem. And what's worse, he also beat them at the following state election; his party receiving about as many votes without the Volkzeitung's crowd as formerly with them.

And the New York Volkzeitung having lost the party and their prestige began to look out for a "new home." It is generally admitted that not one of them thought of fusion with the S. D. P. before. It is also generally understood that had the Volkzeitung party won the S. L. P. name and the S. L. P. emblem in the state of New York and in other states, that there would have been no fusion. But having no party name and a questionable following, they directed their efforts toward our party. Now, if there really had been a change of heart and of tactics in the S. L. P., and if they meant to advance the cause of Socialist unity, then was the time to come right straight over to our side and join our party. But that wasn't the S. L. P. way. Instead of joining us, they tried to capture us. They tried to destroy our organization and to start a new sect with the old spirit under a new name.

The rest you know. And now you will also understand the course of the older Social Democrats and of the executive board. Certainly we wanted a "union of Socialist forces"—although the cry of "union of the reform forces" has destroyed the People's party in 1896—but we wanted a union that would wipe S. L. P.ism off the earth. We did not want to infuse any poison into our young party, and in that sense we clung so tenaciously to the name of the Social Democratic party. We wanted everything that we thought we could use as a shield against the injection of S. L. P. ways and S. L. P. methods. But on the other hand, I must admit the name itself is in no way a panacea against the old evils, if the spirit of the S. L. P. is to dominate the Social Democratic party.

In conclusion, the way all negotiations have been conducted by the S. L. P. is a fresh confirmation of the old tactics and spirit. The leopard has not changed its spots. Will Social Democrats give them a majority vote on false pretenses and broken pledges? I hope not. Fusion now carries with it the germs of future dissensions. For your own sake and for the sake of Socialism I implore you to vote "no." Let all tall men of the S. D. P. now stand erect!

Victor L. Berger.

Comrades:—No greater surprise could have come than that brought by "the manifesto."

A howl of dissatisfaction will surely go up, in answer to this statement of our National Executive Board. It appears to be De Leonism over again, for what on earth could have possessed our N. E. B. to publish all this manifesto in support of a minority report before having submitted the majority report! Is this fair?

Further, you state that Mr. G. Benham stated at the conference of March 9th that he would support the name Social Democratic on the condition that Harriman and Hayes were accepted by our party as candidates. Were these two accepted as candidates by our party? And as they were not, did Benham break any compact? Then again you state that Comrades Harriman, Hayes and Helquit entered into a solemn compact at a conference held at the Occidental Hotel, Indianapolis. In what way did this bind any of these? Was it a conference ordered by the then existing conference or merely a conference of a few members assembled to talk matters over? And as to Comrade J. Harriman having told Comrade Steadman that he would support the name, should a statement not made on the floor of the convention be taken as official?

Now I shall drop this to take up the matter of the conference in New York city, having been present the whole time. Comrade Berger (as you are aware) did not attend the conference. Comrade Heath remained through the Sunday, even taking part in the debate as to name, and it was not until late on Monday that he withdrew. If he considered that the S. L. P. delegates were not acting in good faith, why did he not make this public on Sunday afternoon instead of waiting until 7 p. m. Sunday evening, and then calling upon the chairman for the committee to go into executive session and there create a rumpus? Was he afraid of publicity, or what could have been his intentions?

Did Stedman get hot under the collar because Chicago was not accepted as desired by him for national headquarters? It certainly seemed so, for it was after this that he began to denounce the action of the S. L. P. delegates. (I would relate here that on the first vote for national headquarters Comrade Stedman was the only one to vote for Chicago, even Comrade Haile did not vote for it on the first vote.) From my observation as an onlooker at this convention I feel bound to state that the account in our organ (S. D. Herald) of the opposition delegates is outrageous, for positively no one there could have acted more fairly than Comrades Benham, Hayes and Harriman. Between Comrades Hilquit and Stedman lawyers' battles were carried on, always questions and cross-questions; of course this is only what one might expect.

Now, comrades, I wish to state that New York desires union regardless of

PAMPHLETS

Views of a Committeeman

As one of the members of the committee on union I desire in behalf of myself as such, to lay before the comrades of the S. D. P. certain facts in relation to the New York conference, and at the same time in language as strong as I possibly can to repudiate some of the statements made in the manifesto issued by the N. E. Board in the Herald, as well as the one great motive back of all the prevention of Socialist unity.

It is a positive fact that some of the N. E. Board were strongly opposed to a unification of the S. L. P. and S. D. P., and were it not for the overwhelming majority and sentiment of the delegates at the convention who came instructed to work for union, negotiations to that effect would have been prevented at that time.

In the first place, I wish to censure the N. E. Board for exceeding their authority by publishing any such manifesto previous to receiving report of the committee together with their side of the case, and thereby endeavoring to prejudice the minds of the comrades throughout the country as to the exact state of affairs, so that when the report is sent to the branches to be voted on, the comrades will be ready to overthrow our earnest and sincere efforts to secure an honorable union without understanding the whole situation.

The convention at Indianapolis elected a committee of nine to confer with the committee from the S. L. P. to arrange a plan for union of the two parties; until such report had been placed before the membership, I again reiterate that the N. E. Board had no jurisdiction in the matter. The membership, through its delegates at Indianapolis, evidently had enough faith in the comrades elected to consummate a union to believe that not one step would be retraced from what they considered right and just; and nothing was done at that conference which does not clearly show that the comrades who sat for three long, weary days and nights hard at work on the many intricate questions were persons of broadest mind and character, who held the principles of Socialism high above anything else in connection with our movement.

One thing is to be regretted, however; the two members of our committee on union who affixed their names to the manifesto took no part in the proceedings at the conference and violated the great trust given to them by the Indianapolis convention. Comrade Berger did not come at all, claiming sickness at home; but had he been anxious to have our full quota at the conference a telegram sent to the secretary of our committee at the time his co-delegate, Comrade Heath, left Milwaukee, would have been ample time to have telegraphed to the comrade who received the next highest vote, requesting him to attend in place of Comrade Berger.

Then there is Comrade Heath, who, after sitting with the conference all day Sunday, March 25th, hearing and taking part in the preliminary discussion, refused to act any longer in conjunction with your committee, after we had unanimously agreed (even Comrade Stedman, who also signed the manifesto) to submit two names to a referendum vote. The manifesto clearly states that the conference committee of eighteen failed in performing its true work in two salient points, viz., in regard to name, and secondly, regarding the referendum on the name.

In relation to the first point let me state that according to the instructions passed at the convention, which, by the way, was the minority report, that we urge the name Social Democratic Party. This your committee did with all the argument and oratory at their command, the debate on that question lasting all day Sunday; but both committees were of a steadfast opinion, and all the argument from now till doomsday could not have convinced our S. L. P. friends on the committee that our name was the best.

Therefore, after one whole day of earnest and hard work, it was decided that each committee should hold a separate meeting and discuss the question of name. This was done; your committee adjourning to the Occidental Hotel, where the whole thing was thrashed over again until midnight, when it was decided that we submit the name Social Democratic Party and let the S. L. P. committee submit a name if they chose to.

Right here I will state that Comrade Stedman was in favor of the proposition and agreed heartily with your committee on this point, I can't understand how he has come to the conclusion to sign the manifesto just issued.

The National Executive Board is trying to show up your committee as having violated its trust by allowing the question of name to be settled by a majority vote of both parties.

I must deny that statement, for in the report you will see that simply as a provision, not to have unity overthrow in case a concurrent majority vote fails, we have submitted the following proposition: "Are you in favor of a majority vote of both parties deciding the question of name in case the vote fails to receive a concurrent majority of both parties?"

This question now being referred to the membership of both parties for settlement, who shall say that the democratic principle of allowing the membership to decide this question is not proper and just?

Let the comrades understand that if a concurrent majority fails on the question of name, all negotiations are off, unity is buried, and the hopes of a united movement are blown away like chaff before the wind.

From what I have been able to learn, had some of our learned comrades used better judgment, tactics and the proper spirit since the convention, the name Social Democratic Party, although perhaps failing to receive the concurrent majority vote, would positively have received a large enough majority on a joint vote to insure the name of the united movement being the Social Democratic Party; even now it is not too late if our comrades use the proper judgment.

Such action as that displayed in the manifesto is not going to gain votes for our name, but to the contrary, is doing it a positive injury.

As to what took place at the hotel in Indianapolis, the statements of Comrades Edwards and Gordon are true (as I was present at that meeting) with but one exception, and that is the statement of Comrade Benham.

I deny that Comrade Benham made any promise whatever, but, to the contrary, would not take any definite stand; stating that the rest of the committee, referring to Comrades Harriman and Hilquit, could promise what they saw fit, but he (Benham) would not stand for any promises, and would not be bound by anything they said. He gave no personal pledge, which I am sure Comrades Chase, Marely, Carey, Martin and others who were present, will corroborate if interviewed on this point.

Therefore it is bad policy and dangerous for any person to swear to an affidavit if he is not perfectly sure that his statements in such affidavit are absolutely correct.

Now as to the pledges made by Comrades Harriman and Hilquit, will state that after they had promised their moral support to work for the name S. D. Party, with the understanding that that was to be an argument to be used by Comrade Berger in influencing Comrade Debs to accept the nomination. But immediately upon leaving the room, we were confronted by Comrades McCartney, Haile and Thomas, who advised us of the acceptance of the nomination by Comrade Debs.

This news coming immediately after leaving the conference where Comrade Berger stated it would take him possibly two hours to convince Comrade Debs to accept, was received with alarm, not only by the S. L. P. members of the conference, but by some of the S. D. P. comrades, who immediately inquired whether the whole thing was a put up job to get the S. L. P. delegates to agree to stand by our name; after explanation all present were satisfied that it was not.

Therefore as the compact was made to influence Comrade Debs to accept and as he had already accepted while we were making the agreement in our room, the S. L. P. delegates did not consider their promises binding whatever.

Where the mistake was made was in the conference not meeting again, at 11:30 that evening as agreed upon, when the matter could have been settled then and there.

The whole affair was a misunderstanding between the two committees, and when properly explained to your committee on union they were satisfied to continue negotiations.

Another statement to be repudiated is the one referring to Comrade Hayes' action at the conference. While I do not remember at this moment whether he did or did not speak in favor of the name "S. D. P.," I will positively state that he did vote for the name "Social Democratic Party," and was the only one on the committee from the other side who voted with us. He broke no pledges, and stood by what he said at the Indianapolis convention. It is therefore very unjust for our National Executive Board to publicly make such a statement against Comrade Hayes.

What an enormous blunder and what a discredit is heaped upon the N. E. Board when they openly state that the S. L. P. comrades are likely to hand in a fictitious vote. This is an open insult to every member of the S. L. P., and I, for one, shall not stand for it. I am convinced that the S. L. P. comrades are just as good, honest, sincere, earnest and devoted to the principles of Socialism as are the Social Democrats. Therefore, let those people who "live in glass houses" refrain from throwing stones at others.

Two more points and I am done. One is the antagonistic spirit in which the manifesto is written, referring to our choice for the vice-presidency, Comrade Job Harriman, as "Mr." (and also Comrade Benham), when we should at least address such earnest workers in the Socialist cause as "Comrades." And finally, no better argument could have been presented by any comrade that Chicago is not the place where the Executive Board of the unity party shall have its headquarters than the spirit and antagonism shown in the issue of this manifesto.

Union is desirable. Union is wanted and union will be accomplished, although a few who think they control this movement can try to sidetrack it by bringing forth their personal enmities.

The Socialists of this country will no longer tolerate a handful of men to dictate to them what they shall do, but are intelligent enough and understand fully well what is the best step to be taken for the advancement of the cause of Socialism. Our Executive Board asks is union desirable? when in the city of Chicago the S. D. P. and S. L. P. have united in the campaign just closed under the name S. L. P. Milwaukee also united in the campaign just closed under the name S. D. P. Other places like Cleveland, Ohio, and Newark, N. J., are now in campaign united. The New York State agitation committee is working in unison with the S. L. P., while in many places throughout the country the branches of both parties are carrying on together their work of agitation.

This explanation of the true facts in the case is not handed out with any other spirit than that of a true and sincere Socialist and to show the comrades of the S. D. P. the position taken by your committee on union and that taken by your National Executive Board.

Truly said, you are the arbiters; and I for one have enough confidence in my comrades to know that the proper stand will be taken by them, and those who are in the wrong will be most severely criticized and censured as the case warrants it.

WM. BUTSCHER.

The Situation

Comrades: There is nothing in a name. A name "should not stand in the way of Socialist unity." Those are the phrases we hear now often from members of the S. L. P., and from some of our own comrades, who are ready to sacrifice our name for unity's sake. Many arguments were given for the name, Social Democratic Party, and the best I heard were certainly J. Carey's, at our last meeting, but there is still some vacancy left, which I intend partly to fill out. If a name should not stand in the way of union, why do the S. L. P. comrades make such a fight for the change of it? If our party would have made our name a condition sine qua non, as the majority report on the name question wanted, there could have been some dissatisfaction from the S. L. P. comrades. They could say that it was humiliating for them to accept such conditions. But, although instructed by their constituents to do so, our delegates to the Indianapolis convention showed good judgment and accepted the minority report, extending by that a brotherly hand to the organization of the S. L. P. We all expected that the S. L. P. comrades would now take the second step towards us, show that they grasped the situation, and would drop all discussions about the name. Whether the members of the S. L. P. committee did promise or did not to work for our name, they could clearly understand that the rank and file of our party could not be induced to change the party name; they could understand that the acceptance of the minority report was on "a form," a diplomatic way of not offending the S. L. P. comrades and in the same time pressing our point. I do not know what kind of "deals" have been made about the names and candidates, in what words the promises were made or not made; one thing is clear to everyone—the members of the S. L. P. conference committee created the impression that they would work for our name, and as a proof that they tried it we can cite the fact that their own New York comrades met them with great dissatisfaction. The three members of the S. L. P. conference committee (I understand that Max Hayes kept his word and cast his vote against the name U. S. P.), certainly deserve a great deal of criticism. Even if their constituency showed dissatisfaction with their stand, they should have kept up the impression they had made on our convention and rather resign from the committee than be conscious of having acted, not like men, but like diplomats and politicians in the capitalist sense of these words.

But whatever name their action deserves, the Social Democratic Party has nothing to tremble for. I have entire faith in the good judgment of our comrades to have voted for our party name, to have voted down point 3, and also cast a big "No" against the most anarchistic plan of conducting the press affair of a party that ever came to my knowledge.

The common sense of the rank and file would have brought the whole situation to a satisfactory one. But, alas! The members of the party propose and the executive committee disposes. Here comes the great mistake of all executive committees. They always have too little confidence in the rank and file and are always inclined to too much "leading" instead of "following." I think that the referendum proposed by our executive committee is, mildly expressed, a step in the wrong direction; that it makes the situation more complicated than ever, and that many a faithful comrade, who stands with his whole soul for Socialism and for our party, will feel that a great mistake has been made.

Because a few members of the S. L. P. conference committee did not take the stand we had a right to expect from them to break up a movement for unity, where thousands of simple honest workmen are concerned, who are not very smart in diplomacy, but have a keen sense of righteousness and honesty, would be ridiculous. Our own conference committee did not show the good judgment we expected from them, and after all we are all human and are all liable to make mistakes. But to base a question of unity of Socialist forces on mistakes made by a few personalities would be entirely wrong. To break off our relations with the S. L. P. in such an abrupt manner as our executive committee proposes to us would not prove that we are far-sighted enough to grasp the situation.

Such an action would certainly prevent union, not for years, but for scores of years to come; it would make any new steps towards union almost impossible. But if everything goes the regular way—how different. Let us suppose that both parties vote on the name; our party without doubt voting for ours, the S. L. P. comrades voting for the "United Socialist Party." Such a disagreement would bring the conference committee together, and if they could not unite on one name, there would be no unity, but there would be no bad feeling and union only postponed.

With the referendum proposed by our executive, the situation is very complicated indeed. But never despair. Our party is too strong to be staggered even by harder blows. The way out of it is clear.

I would advise all comrades to vote "yes" on the proposition of the executive, adding at once their vote—

1. For the name Social Democratic Party.

2. Against proposition 3, which advises to accept the majority of both parties as ruling.

3. Against the whole matter about the party press.

This would prove to our executive committee that our party is not in danger and that, although not accepting the path they offer us out of the difficulty, in spirit we ask them and have no doubt that it was only their faithfulness, their deep love for our movement which dictated to them the somewhat hasty action.

Mrs. A. Konikow.

Democracy and Socialism

Editor of the Herald: As to the present name of our party being set aside, and another name adopted, would, I am sure, be a sad case of social suicide. Let us retain our present name, Social Democrat, and not divorce the word democracy from socialism, because we are truly a democratic party. And through its principles we expect to construct the system of Socialism. I love the name because W. J. Bryan and "democrats" so-called do not believe in its principles. It is a name that is invisibly tattooed on every Socialist. If he has not got it, he is not a Socialist. But you may say there is a Democratic party, and we should not lose that name. To that question I would say there is not a Democratic party; there is a party that assumes that name, but its principles are not democratic, neither will they be so, until it is compelled to prolong its life by adopting as a plank direct legislation, which will only be used to inject a feeling into its old supporter.

Let us stand for the name Social Democracy!

Dissatisfied With Terms

Editor of The Herald: I would like to be informed by what authority and consistency the national executive decided to leave the question of "unity" to a referendum vote, after the delegates with instructions given by a referendum vote of their respective locals unanimously voted for the affirmative of this question at the national convention. I am positively in favor of "unity," although not fully satisfied, with the terms the conference committee proposes.

Hilquit and the rest of the delegates of the S. L. P. may not have kept their promises; but that does not mean to express the traits and sentiments of the whole S. L. P. I know of many comrades of the S. L. P. who are in favor of both the name (S. D. P.) and the seat for the national executive (Chicago).

It is my opinion that instead of speaking against "unity," the national executive ought to have agitated for the adoption of all the good points the joint conference committee proposes, and for the abolition of the bad ones; and thereby have avoided the creation of diametrically opposite opinion in the ranks of the comrades of New York.

BRYAN'S FINANCIAL POLICY AS A "STEP" TOWARD SOCIALISM

By Rev. Charles H. Vail.

Occasionally one meets a man who says he is a Bryanite-Socialist; that is, a man who claims to be a Socialist and a Bryanite at the same time. It is quite evident that a person occupying that position has not grasped the economic theories of either party, for they are mutually exclusive and move in contrary directions. That Bryan's trust policy is anti-socialistic is now generally conceded, but some seem to think that his financial policy is a step toward Socialism. They argue that the money trust, as they call it, is the greatest of all trusts, and that we should commence reform by destroying the money power. Bryan, they say, is "going our way" and we should abandon independent party action and join the silver democracy.

It is not my purpose in this article to show the absurdity of such tactics, but merely to consider the question of Bryan's financial policy as a step toward Socialism. It is my contention that Bryan's financial policy, like his trust policy, is a middle class reform, and consequently of no interest to Socialists or the working class—Socialism being primarily a working class movement. Not only would this measure not improve the condition of the working class but it would tend to rehabilitate the declining middle class, and is, therefore, decidedly anti-socialistic. Any measure that tends to re-establish the conditions of the past—the conditions of competitive industry—is reactionary.

Socialists believe in the organization of industry. They trace the industrial evolution through its various stages, and point out the fact that the trusts have come as the natural and inevitable outcome of the competitive system. The trust, then, is a step toward the Socialistic ideal—the complete unification of industry. Every measure that tends to facilitate the organization of industry is a step toward the final goal, but every measure that tends to check unification is decidedly anti-socialistic.

Now, let us inquire. What would be the effect of Bryan's financial policy? Mr. Bryan contends that what he calls the money trust is the greatest of all trusts, and that the first step toward the destruction of industrial trusts is to destroy the money power. If the destruction of the money power would lead to the dissolution of the trust system, then, surely, no one can claim that such a measure is a step toward Socialism. Mr. Bryan himself makes no such absurd claim, in fact, he contends that all trusts depend upon the money trust and that the destruction of this trust is the first step toward the destruction of all trusts. His plea for the destruction of the money power is for the purpose of striking a blow at the whole trust system, which, he holds, rests upon special legislation of which money privileges are foremost.

It is true that the ruling class have been able, by the manipulation of finances, to facilitate the concentration and organization of industry. The gold standard serves the interests of the large capitalists and hastens the downfall of the middle class. The money question, then, is merely one of interest to the capitalist class. The interests of the small proprietors are opposed to the interests of the large capitalists. In this struggle for supremacy both endeavor to enlist the support of the working class. But the working class is not interested in this capitalist family quarrel, especially, in the hopeless endeavor to preserve a class that belongs to a past era of economic development. The whole anti-trust movement, of which free silver is a part, is merely a movement in the interests of the class of small proprietors. As the present financial system has contributed to the centralization of industry, its destruction would only serve the interests of the middle class. Could the Bryan financial policy be carried out, it would tend to give a new lease of life to the competitive system. To be sure, it could not in itself re-establish the supremacy of the middle class, but the measure would tend in that direction, and is, therefore, reactionary.

Mr. Bryan as champion of the small proprietor class well knows what he is about. He makes no claim that the destruction of the money power is a step toward Socialism. Why, then, have any Socialists fallen into this error? Evidently because of the governmental feature connected with some portions of what is called financial reform. Many who are not well grounded in Socialist economics, seem to think that all kinds of governmental activity is socialistic. Of course, the free coinage of silver does not come under this head, but many who advocate this do so as a step toward complete government monopoly. They think that anything that enlarges the sphere of government activity, or is a step in that direction, is socialistic. But this is far from the fact. Prof. Ely well says on this point, "Not all government activity can be called socialistic. If the purpose or the spirit of the activity, in question is to render the collectivity dominant in the economic sphere, then it must be designated as socialistic, otherwise, not. Those who have studied Socialism to little purpose who imagine that the Socialist approves of all activity of government whatsoever, and that he is ready to endorse any plan which will enlarge the functions of government." Those Socialists who are Bryanward inclined, or who are affected with any species of financial reform, would do well to consider the above statement. Prof. Ely, although not a Socialist, has a clear insight into what constitutes Socialism, and the things that tend in that direction.

Clear-cut Socialists are not interested in the so-called money question—this interests only the proprietary class. The large capitalists want the gold standard, the middle class free silver. The latter hope, by depreciating the money standard, to pay off their mortgaged indebtedness with a debased currency or inflated product worth but about half its selling price. The interests of the working class are not served by this scheme of indebted farmers, land speculators, silver barons and small producers and dealers, and they refuse to be used as a tool to fight the battles of their exploiters.

Under Socialism, the monetary question will solve itself. In fact Socialism would abolish all metallic money and substitute therefor a system of labor checks or vouchers based upon the product of labor. It is absurd to propose, as some do, the application of this principle to the present system of commodity production. Yet many support the free coinage doctrine with this end in view, and pretend to think that it is a step toward Socialism. But those who would take a step beyond Bryan and introduce the Socialist principle under the present system, have failed to grasp the nature of either capitalism or Socialism. Such a position is as illogical and impossible as it would be to endeavor to put the roof on a house before the frame was erected. Under capitalism, money is a merchandise; that is, it has an intrinsic base. Like the institutions of credit and banking, all are convenient methods of conducting one portion of the machinery of the present order. To transfer to a capitalist state any of these functions now performed by private capitalists is surely not necessarily a step in the direction of Socialism.

I am not interested, then, in the so-called nationalization of the present financial system, or in Bryan's amendment, or any other device that can be put in operation under the present system. All such schemes, at the best, are middle class demands. Socialize the economic power—the means of production and distribution—and the money power will disappear. All the time spent on such questions today is absolutely wasted. The Socialist who thinks that Bryan is "going our way" is woefully deceived. Bryanism is not a step toward Socialism. The standpoint from which he proceeds is that of the middle class interests against the interests of the upper capitalist class. All proposed revisions of the monetary system will be ineffective to remove injustice so long as the present system exists. It is impossible to establish an equitable financial system on a basis of an economic system which is usurpatory in character. If our financial reformers would investigate the question sufficiently to discover the dependence of financial institutions upon economic conditions much confusion would be avoided. Until they realize the economic basis of the financial system we shall have confusion worse confounded. Do not be deceived by Bryanistic sophistry. If you want to solve the monetary question, vote straight for Socialism.

Has Found One Exception

Dear Editor: Being S. D. P. organizer for the city of Chicago I come in contact with the membership frequently, and find that in the present crisis as regards union with the S. L. P. every member with whom I have talked (with one exception) is opposed to union at the present time. Fraternally, Wm. C. Horgan.

NOTES AND COMMENT

Success again! At Spring Valley, Ill., the Social Democratic party elected Comrade Joseph Kelly to the city council as alderman against the "coal company ticket." Later, in the school election, 500 votes were cast for the Social Democratic candidate against 700 for the "coal company ticket."

The man who reads the newspapers should be able to decide for himself whether Debs is a real factor in the presidential campaign. Already the Texas "pops" are quarreling over the question of fusing with the "dems" in support of Bryan or joining the Social Democratic party in support of Debs.

The following extract from a letter written by B. Berlyn, one of the oldest S. L. P. censors in Chicago, printed in the Workers' Call, is given to show the great degree of confidence which characterizes the present demand for union: "One thing must be insisted upon, that the candidate subordinates himself to the principles. We want a large Socialist vote for the principles of Socialism, aye, we want the majority, and we will get that majority much sooner by insisting that we want votes for the principles and not for any particular candidate. We should keep an eye on those who make a personal canvass. They may be all right, but the election of no one man can help the working class."

The Revgen, a Danish-Norwegian paper in this city that at the last presidential election supported Bryan, has declared for Debs and Harriman and the Social Democratic platform. An article in its last week's issue concludes as follows:

"The nomination of Debs and the agitation for him and his cause will guarantee that the coming presidential campaign will not be an out and out humbug-fight between the old parties but will force the social question to the front, as far as possible, and even if Debs will not this time be elected his candidacy will be the most effective stroke for Socialism ever witnessed in this country."

THREE GEMS FROM BENHAM

"I shall in the future be pleased to make some comments upon the idiosyncrasies and weaknesses of some of the 'giants' of today. They will none of them be so tall that they cannot be brought to their knees when their peculiarities are made known to the people."

"The manifesto furnishes a sweet morsel for every enemy of Socialism. All or any opposed to the Socialist movement could afford to pay almost any price for such a service in the cause of capitalism."

"Incidentally, would it not be very advantageous for the Republican party to have as many Democratic parties in the field as possible? And might not the Republican party so 'interest' the four signers of the manifesto that they would make the stand they have for 'Democratic' as against anything and everything?"

Rank Injustice to Women

I wish to refer to the article, "Women and Social Democracy," in The Herald of March 31. The attitude of the Socialists towards women is like water to a dying plant. But women have become so accustomed to their ridiculous, disgraceful, stupid, economical position, that most of them do not recognize or feel their position and actually imagine they enjoy the universal respect of men; so they do just as much as children and animals do. In this city, under a new charter (good in itself, but beginning with an untruth on the first page, where it says it was ratified by vote of the people, when actually it was only "men" and should be truthfully so stated) there was recently held an examination for municipal copyists in which women were graciously allowed to compete. There were almost exactly half of each sex. A woman came out No. 1 and most of the highest places were held by women; those men who had been and were then employed as municipal copyists could not (with four exceptions) pass this examination! But when it came to appointments, women were entirely passed over and men were chosen; for the time defeating the praiseworthy efforts towards justice and impartiality on the part of the civil service commission.

Women must work; no human being in good health and not deformed or crippled can be honorably excused from work; but for women as wives, to work at home as housekeepers for nothing but board, lodging and clothes is just giving the husband's employer the labor of two for the wages of one; this confusing of the duties of wife with that of cook, washerwoman, dressmaker, etc., is very beneficial to employers, but is one of the subtle, unnoticed leakages of labor, to which it is time men directed their attention.

All honor to Socialists, who are the only body of men who try to understand and put straight the defects in the economic position of women, as well as men. A. T.

"GROWING AWAY FROM THE CHURCH" YET GIVING IT SUPPORT

By W. P. Borland

It has so often been asserted that "the masses"—meaning the wage earners—are growing away from the church, and so many good people have occupied themselves with the devising of schemes to bring back the erring ones to the vineyard of the Lord, that it has come to be accepted as a truth in a great many quarters that workmen are far from being ardent supporters of religion.

This is one of those great falsehoods which comes to assume the garb of truth solely because of reiteration. As a matter of fact, workmen are much more ardent supporters of religion, according to their means, than are the Christian faddists who worry so much about the salvation of their (the workmen's) souls, as witness the Salvation Army, which is supported almost entirely by poor working people, and which has developed into theocracy of such wealth and power as to recently cause a split in the ranks of the leaders over the administration of the spoils wrung from the rank and file by this highly efficient soul-saving apparatus. Witness also the Roman Catholic Church, which is essentially a poor man's church, so far as the agencies for its financial support are concerned.

Workingmen, in truth, render much greater financial support to the church than they ought. If they would as a class devote as much of their attention and their means to temporal matters affecting their welfare as they devote to religion, they would stand some show of speedily realizing here on earth some of the blessings which the priests and prophets have promised them in the hereafter.

Let any person who wishes to satisfy himself of the truth of this assertion run through the schedule of cost of living by families, contained in the sixth and seventh annual reports of the United States Labor Commissioner. In the schedules of "expenditures other than for food" will be found some figures which I imagine will come as a revelation to many of those who worry so much over the indifference of workmen to religion. Taking the first five hundred families in each of the four leading industries dealt with—glass, woolen, cotton and iron—and comparing their expenditure for labor organizations with their expenditure for religion, we are able to construct a table, as follows:

	Annual expenditure labor unions, 500 families.	Annual expenditure religion, 500 families.
Trades—
Glass workers...	$4,791	$3,067
Woolen workers...	93	3,368
Cotton workers...	52	3,787
Iron workers...	371	2,516
Total	$5,307	$12,738

These figures indicate that these two thousand families taken together spend nearly two and a half times as much annually to support religion as they spend to support labor unions, and this average will hold good throughout the more than eight thousand families treated of in the schedules. Leaving the glass workers out of the above table it will be seen that the remaining fifteen hundred families spend nearly nineteen times as much annually for religion as they spend for labor unions. The glass workers are the only ones that spend more for their unions than they spend for their religion, and it is well known that they are a solidly organized and comparatively well paid class.

It is a significant fact that the poorest paid workers of the lot, the cotton workers, spend more for religion than do the glass workers, or any of the others, while their expenditure for labor unions is the smallest of the lot, being but $52 for the 500 families, or about 10 cents per year per family. The woolen workers come next, and the iron workers next, in point of wages received, amount paid for unions and amount paid for religion. It is safe to say that were the figures reversed for these three classes of workers, so that the large amounts would stand for the unions and the small ones for religion, their material condition would be much improved. There is not the least doubt, however, that if these workers were reproached with the meagerness of their support to labor unions they would answer that they could not afford to pay more, and they would undoubtedly point to the size of their religious contributions as one of the causes of this inability. The average man is a queer animal. He derives more satisfaction from laying up treasures in heaven than from securing decent conditions of existence here on earth.

THE GREAT CHAIN OF PROTEST

The purport of the hour is vast.
The world wants justice; it demands
United hearts, united hands.
The day of charity is past.

Men have outgrown the worthless creed
Which bade them deem it God's good will
That labor sweat and starve to fill
And glut the purse of idle greed.

They have outgrown the poor content
That breeds oppression. Forged by pain,
Mind links to mind in one great chain
Of protest and of argument.

And, by the hand of progress hurled,
This mighty chain of human thought,
In silence and in anguish wrought,
Encompasses the pulsing world.

And he who will not form a link
Of new conditions soon to be
Ere long must stand aghast and see
Old systems toppling down the brink.

They cannot and they shall not last—
The broader impulse of the day
Will gain and grow and sweep away
The rank injustice of the past.

More labor for the selfish few,
More leisure for the burdened class—
These things shall surely come to pass
As old conditions change to new.

They change through toil and strain and strife;
The worst but speeds the final best;
Work for all men, for all men rest,
And time to taste the joys of life.

OUT-OF-PLACE POOR

When you look upon the world, and judge it from its standpoint of greatness, you wonder how it arrived at that condition. It is only the few who have money; the many are poor. Poverty is not greatness. Poverty is not riches, and yet all this magnificence is poverty's work. How do we know where it all comes from? By looking into the pockets of the rich and prosperous, you will find there, money, money, money! Where did they get it? From the poor man. His wife had so many less gowns, his children so many less shoes, and they all had so much less comfort. Time goes on, and churches, colleges, public libraries and other buildings grow more and more magnificent, and the poor man and his family grow more and more shrunken, timid and dependent. Dare they enter any of these buildings? Never! They would shrink to nothingness on entering. And if one had the temerity to enter, rich in the thought that his hands had placed that building there, that without him it could not have been, then some broadcloth brother, by his supercilious scrutiny would make him feel that he was not at home, that he was quite out of place.

Give your children all your spare pennies to build cathedrals. The gentleman in broadcloth, though he has money has many temptations to glitter. He must be satisfied, so must his wife.

The churches are doing a good work. They let you join their sanitarium and enjoy all its privileges for 25 cents a month. What more could you expect? You might, possibly, be unwilling to be classed as "city's poor" in the connection.

Twenty-five cents a month contributed by a number of people will equip any "hall" in a short time with paraphernalia for gymnastics, a library, and other requisites for mental and physical culture.

Poverty need not be ashamed, nor finch, when it receives its own.

Comrade Charles Hallbeck of Branch 10, Chicago, desires the statement made in The Herald that members of this branch are in favor of union.

PALTRY CHARGES AGAINST THE BOARD

When the writers of circulars and letters or newspaper opinion attacking the integrity and official acts of the Executive Board, essay to prejudice the minds of members against the "Big Four," which, by the way, is the method they have adopted to promote what they call the "sacred cause of union"—whatever that may mean—they base their "honorable warfare" upon these grounds:

First—That the "manifesto is an illegal document."

Second—That it is "undemocratic" and "unauthorized."

Third—That the board had "no right" to issue a manifesto.

Fourth—That it is the "climax of a series of officious acts exceeding their powers."

Let these so-called justifiable reasons for diverting or attempting to divert the members of the Social Democratic party from a careful consideration of the causes that stand in the way of union to an unseemly and dishonorable attack on the board be passed calmly in review.

First—This is wholly dependent upon what is meant by the word "illegal." If anything is illegal that does not conform to and give support to the pre-convention plans of a few members of an eastern branch, then the action of the executive board comes within that category. But the writer's purpose evidently is to create the false impression with his readers that the executive board has exceeded the legitimate power conferred upon it by the laws of the organization. This position can not be maintained except by showing that the board has taken action in conflict with the constitution or declaration of principles, and this the circularizers for union have not attempted. The constitution and not the Haverhill Social Democrat is the law of the Social Democratic party.

Second—The charge that the board's action is "undemocratic" falls with the first. When the constitution expressly charges the board with the responsibility of supervising and empowering its members to "carry out the objects" of the organization, it assumes that crises might arise when the objects of the organization would be imperilled. Such an occasion came; the board took action, as it was bound to do or keep the members in ignorance of certain facts which, in the estimation of a dozen delegates to the Indianapolis convention, were fatal to a genuine union at the very outset. How "undemocratic" the course adopted by the board may be seen, not by passionate denunciation and abuse, but by recognizing (1) that as officials of the party they acted clearly within the requirements of the constitution, and (2) they submitted a proposition to the membership for a referendum vote, thus complying, as they have always done, with the democratic spirit and law of the party. This action is now denounced by those who get entangled in the meshes of their own verbosity as "undemocratic" and a "usurpation of power!" Those who make the charge do so, not because they for a moment believe it, but because they think it will serve their purpose of accomplishing fusion.

Third—If the board had no right to issue a manifesto at a time when its members, without a single exception, believed some action necessary to conserve the interests of the organization, then why have an executive board at all and why give such board instructions as to its duties? The appointment of a committee at Indianapolis to confer about union with another organization did not relegate our own to the limbo of perdition; the party did not expire when the convention adjourned; that committee was not the party. The board had an undoubted right to issue an address in behalf of an organization of whose rights and interests it was the legal and authorized custodian. As a matter of fact, while others were the pliant emissaries of the S. L. P. in an attempt to wreck the S. D. P., the executive board was engaged in a conscientious effort to prevent the wreck.

Fourth—No intelligent, thinking member of the Social Democratic party can be cajoled and hoodwinked by the specious and paltry outcry from quarters where political ambition and finesse passes current for fidelity to Socialism, that the executive board of the party has been guilty of a series of "officious" acts. They who seek to justify their suspicions of others are always clever in the distortion of language to serve their purposes. The board has been "guilty" of a few official acts. Its administration has been so free from offensive officiousness as to sometimes leave its members open to criticism on the ground of laxity of purpose. Twice in the interest of the party the board has felt called upon to act: First, in the case of an independent political movement in New York and now in the instance before us. The conviction is rapidly spreading that as the members of the board were right in the first case, so are they in this.

The cry of the circular writers and others against the "undemocratic" course of the board, who have never desired to "conduct" or "boss" the Social Democratic party, but only to serve it, will not prevail. It is paltry and impertinent.

A Plea for a Truce

Comrades: The threatened disruption and alienation of the Socialist forces of the United States, coming as it does on the eve of a national campaign from which we all hoped for great results, must certainly be disheartening to every Socialist in the country.

This being the case, our evident duty is to set about averting the impending evil. Instead of spending a season in petty bickering and squabbling, had we not best face about, cease lamenting the vanished might-have-been and arraigning our fellows; and buckle to, regardless of party affiliations, and bestir ourselves to set things right again?

It seems to me that, unless party members in various places fail to do their manifest duty, a truce for the political purpose of furthering the coming campaign could be easily agreed upon and would meet with the approval and heartfelt support of almost the entire membership of both parties.

The S. L. P. people in the aggregate have certainly evinced a desire for a fair and honorable union and most of us of the S. D. P. feel likewise; so why can we not agree at least to hang together until after next November.

There is plainly no immediate solution of the difficulties now before us.

There is certainly much to be said for both sides to the squabble. And the violent partisanship now rampant bodes ill, not only for national Socialist unity, but even for party integrity.

The next thing on the tapis is dangerously likely to be wholesale secessions of state and local organizations from both parties and concomitant with such an occurrence we may consistently expect one or more new sets of candidates to appear in the field.

There is no need to say much of what would follow. The Socialist vote would surely be so divided as to set back the movement the period of a presidential term.

You Socialists, whose battle-cry is "Socialism in our own time," what think you of this? Are you willing to thus lose the ground which we have so lately gained and for which we have battled so long and so valiantly in the past?

It is quite impossible to do anything now before the vote on union is taken, but had we not better provide for the aftermath? If the vote is against union should not steps be at once taken to provide for a harmonious political cooperation with the S. L. P. during the presidential campaign? If for union, what had we best do to propitiate the dissenting branches of the S. D. P. if any verge on secession?

To get all concerned to agree to an armistice to endure until after November should be no difficult task. It is not as though any of us had any fault to find with the principles of either candidate or the platform. We are all agreed that whatever their minor shortcomings or frailties, they stand like a regiment for that for which we all stand—Socialism, Socialism unadulterated and Socialism soon. And each party has given us one of the candidates.

Why can we not, in so far as may be possible, let all lie dormant until after the election? After then would be time enough to come to a final reckoning. Do you pro- or anti-unionists fear that if things are left so long in status quo the antagonistic forces would abate in brotherliness? Perhaps; but have you a sufficient plan to secure their immediate reconciliation? Will it be more conducive to ultimate harmony to break the S. D. P. into warring factions? Or does your wisdom lead you to the belief that an utter break with the S. L. P. would culminate in a love feast or lead to aught but a withdrawal of Harriman as Debs' running mate?

Comrades, contrary assertions notwithstanding, we can ill afford to risk these dangers. Whatever may be our personal opinions as to the merits or demerits of this current controversy, we all feel in our heart of hearts that through Debs and Harriman and our rational selves, the Socialist movement may now make a stride in this country which will put it far and away beyond hurt or injury from the strife of factional disturbances. Let us act accordingly. Let us call a truce. Until November let us bury the hatchet. After then let us fight it out, tooth and nail, if you will—but a truce until then. And let the people of this country see what we will achieve in the portentous days of next November. Who's next? Let us hear from others.

Comrade Gordon Sums Up

Comrades: It is true that I was one, if not the first, Socialist Democrat to advocate a union with the S. L. P. And it seems to be equally true that I made a huge mistake. Neither the S. L. P. nor a large number of the S. D. P. were ready for a union. It is true also that I regard the movement as a hundred times greater than the name. When I found that a large section of the S. D. P. would not unite unless the name S. D. P. was retained I became a strong advocate of our name. At the convention I pointed out that I was in favor of a union. I realized that trouble would come in New York and Massachusetts. I stated to many S. D. P. and S. L. P. members that I was ready to take myself out of the way in favor of a union. I am now, I did not abuse any S. L. P. members in my speech. I simply stated that certain members were just as bad as De Leon and that being true there was no abuse, and those I referred to are not wanted by the S. D. P. of Haverhill or Boston. The "peace conference" was called by me, aided by Comrade Maily. Both Maily and Carey, who fully know all the inside facts of that conference, know quite well that Berger was about the last man to be told about it. Both Carey and Maily know also that in my affidavit I simply told the truth. Let the S. L. P. ask these two comrades as to whether they think I stated the truth or not. Comrade Hayes was wanted at the conference and Maily will remember that I asked him to invite Hayes.

It was comrade Maily who made the agreement at the "peace conference" in favor of the S. D. P. name, and he used the argument that the S. D. P. was to concede Harriman for vice president and the S. L. P. was to concede the name. Let Comrade Maily make a statement as to the truth of this. It may or it may not be true that the Social Democrats in Haverhill, Brockton, Boston, New York, etc., have little regard as to what I say, but if any of them have so informed Benham, then they are certainly playing a double part.

Carey, Maily, myself and others prevailed upon Harriman on his return to the convention hall Friday night to accept the nomination, and a little later, when Berger came to the hall, he (Berger) was informed of this, and proceeded to nominate Harriman. That's the way it happened, and because of that Benham tries to make out a case against Berger. Edwards had nothing to do about "engineering" the "conference." Maily and I alone are responsible for that. Edwards was invited to attend. Let the S. L. P. members who have read my affidavit ask Comrades Carey and Maily whether it was true or not. Hilquit and Harriman did pledge themselves to stand for the name S. D. P. at the conference, and they so pledged themselves before Berger had refused to see Debs. Upon Benham's refusal to support the name S. D. P., Berger declared he would not see Debs. Then the argument was made to Berger that as Hilquit and Harriman were to stand for the name, the name would be saved. I did not see the "manifesto" until it was published, and do not know to this day who wrote it. The Milwaukee comrades know full well that I stood almost alone in that city in advocating a union. The whole sum and substance of the thing is this: Harriman and Hilquit both intended to stand for the name S. D. P. When they met the rank and file in New York they were charged with being a party to "being swallowed up" by the S. D. P. The rank and file even used Berger's paper to prove that the S. L. P. had surrendered to the S. D. P. They felt compelled against the storm that broke over their heads to take a different stand. The mistake which they made was in, first, making any pledge, and, second, when they found their own membership stood they should have issued a statement, either publicly to the S. D. P. or privately to those to whom they had made pledges, stating the difficulties. Had they done this, many things that did happen would never have been made public. It is no doubt true that the old S. L. P. spirit still exists. And it is equally true that both the S. L. P. and S. D. P. leaders largely mistrust each other. Again, it is true that both of us have been playing for position in all the negotiations that have taken place. It follows that almost any organic union proposed (at this time) is bound to be a failure.

A political union can be arranged by the states. If this political union along the lines proposed by Comrade Debs can not be arranged, then it is a waste of time to talk about any organic union.

I have only one word to say to my S. D. P. comrades: Let the S. L. P. have a monopoly of calling names, and let us remember that calling names is never an argument.

Comrade Benham says I was half the time for a union and the other half abusing S. L. P. comrades. Does any one who attended the Indianapolis convention remember any such thing? The only comrades that I said one word against, even in an indirect way, were the very comrades that are not wanted in the "United Socialist" party by Carey, Chase, Putney, et al. In fact, all of the Massachusetts comrades know these S. L. P. people of both sexes much better than I, and want them still less.

F. G. R. Gordon.

The Right of the Manifesto

If our National Executive Board has usurped authority, by all means let it be condemned. If it has tried to "thwart the will of the majority," let its action be overthrown. If it has committed "treason" to the Socialist movement, let it be recalled.

This I say, as every true Socialist must.

But those "ifs" must be proven, and the burden of proof is upon those who make the charges. Certainly they have not yet proven them. So far they have done nothing but shriek their baseless accusations, and try to make us believe them true by frequent repetition.

What are the facts? A committee of nine on union is elected by the S. D. P. convention. That committee is given certain definite instructions. It is instructed on three different points: (1) That it shall urge the selection of the name S. D. P.; (2) that after the conference it shall submit all reports and recommendations of the committees to referendum vote; (3) that the question of party name shall be submitted to referendum vote of each party voting separately; and if the name S. D. P. does not receive a majority of each party, voting separately, the negotiations for union shall drop, then and there. All other questions may be re-submitted; but if the party name does not receive the concurrent vote of both parties, then the matter of union drops, for the present.

The last two of these instructions the committee of the S. D. P., when it met in conference with the S. L. P. committee in New York, openly and flagrantly violated. Instead of submitting "all reports," as they were instructed, they straightway agreed with the S. L. P. committee to SUPPRESS ALL MINORITY REPORTS UNLESS THEY WERE SIGNED BY FIVE MEMBERS; that is a MAJORITY OF EITHER COMMITTEE. Four of our members could not submit a minority report, according to their ruling! If they had the temerity to do so, they "would have to get it before the membership the best way they knew how." After the adjournment of the conference, a minority of the S. D. P. did send in its report to the committee who had the matter in charge, and the committee returned the report with the statement that it could not be published.

In the second place, the instructions of the convention were plain and unmistakable that all negotiations were to be forthwith dropped, if the name S. D. P. did not receive a majority of both parties voting separately. The convention distinctly prescribed this kind of vote. This the S. D. P. committee utterly ignored, and agreed with the S. L. P. committee to submit a third proposition which took the final decision out of the hands of our own party and placed it with "the majority of both parties voting together." The S. D. P. committee had no earthly right to agree to submit that third proposition. It is quite true, as they plead in self-defense, that the membership has the right and the power to reject that proposition. Certainly it has; but that is not the point. The point is that the committee had no right to submit it for the membership to reject. It had no right to take into its own hands the power of shutting off minorities and submitting propositions, contrary to the directions of the convention.

Here, then, you have the real culprits, the real usurpers of authority. It is they, and not the National Executive Committee, whom they are now so loudly accusing, who have exceeded their authority, and it is they, and not the National Executive Committee, who should be condemned.

This committee of nine is responsible to the convention for the submitting of a report in accordance with its instructions. The convention having adjourned, the National Executive Committee, as the representative head of the party when conventions are not in session, must hold the committee to a performance of its duty.

Upon the adjournment of the conference in New York, the N. E. C. finds that the instructions of the convention have been disobeyed in two important particulars by its own committee, and that certain agreements entered into by the representatives of the S. L. P. who were present at our convention have been broken. Upon finding this new state of affairs, the N. E. C. issues a manifesto, laying the facts before the membership, and saying: "Here are some facts which you did not know before, and which our convention did not know when it took action. Upon these facts, do you wish to go further with the negotiations? If you do, vote yes, and the reports of the conference will then be acted upon. If you don't, say no, and the whole matter will drop." Now, in all soberness, what right has the N. E. C. usurped in submitting this proposition to the membership?

The claim that the N. E. C. did wrong because it issued the manifesto before receiving the official report of the committee on union is a mere technical quibble. The contents of the majority report, and the whole history of the conference, were known to the N. E. C., through the verbal reports of two members of that committee, Comrades Stedman and Heath, and my own written report as secretary of the S. D. P. committee, and through the reports in the German papers which had chronicled the events of the conference from day to day as they took place. All the facts were known to them, just as well as if they had received the official report. The existence of our party was threatened, and prompt action was an absolute necessity. If they had not taken that action, they would have proved themselves unfit to serve as the executive head of a party like ours.

Instead of trying to "thwart the will of the majority," they seek to ascertain it.

Now, as to the "treason" of it. Were an immediate amalgamation of the S. D. P. with the anti-De Leon faction of S. L. P. in any way essential to the progress of the Socialist movement in this country, or even conducive to it, then undoubtedly any action that would seem to prevent or even delay that amalgamation would be treason to the cause. No such necessity, however, is revealed by the closest study of the situation, and even its desirability is questionable.

The S. D. P. was getting along all right before the question of union was ever heard of; and was, and I believe even yet is, destined to become the Socialist party of the country. With its 5,000 members in good standing gained in twenty months, with branches organized in thirty-two different states, with its own press and its own corps of speakers and writers, with its splendid showing at the polls both East and West, it has a brief but glorious record behind it and a brilliant future before it. Its success has demonstrated that it was on the right track, and all that is necessary is that it should be allowed to continue to grow and develop naturally and without interruption along the lines it has laid down for itself, that it may ere long become a power in the land that will make the oppressor tremble. Anything that would arrest its development or throw it off the track is, to my mind, the real treason; and thus the proposed amalgamation would most certainly accomplish.

The two organizations have entirely different conceptions of the movement. The S. D. P., holding ever in view as its aim the conversion of this republic into a co-operative commonwealth, has a conception of a great national movement which shall include the exploited and the oppressed of every state in the union, and lays its plans, locates its headquarters and adapts its agitation accordingly. The S. L. P., if one may judge from its actions, conceives Socialist work to consist in attacking individuals, who become prominent in its ranks. That this is as true of the anti-DeLeonites as of the DeLeonites, may be seen from the following quotation from the letter of Benham in The Herald of April 21: "I shall in the future be pleased to make some comments upon the idiosyncrasies and weaknesses of some of the 'giants' of to-day. They will none of them be so tall that they can not be brought to their knees." Social Democrats have neither time nor inclination to bring comrades to their knees. They prefer to spend their time in educating and organizing. With such widely different conceptions of Socialist work, an amalgamation of the two parties now would simply give us a house divided against itself, unable to stand. The fresh and vigorous start which the American Socialist movement has taken would be nipped in the bud. This I say, and not the action of the N. E. C., is the real treason.

Where does the report of the conference committee, if adopted, leave the S. D. P.? Our N. E. C. blotted out; our national organ abolished; the national scope and character of our movement destroyed and dwarfed into an affair of the Atlantic seaboard, our national headquarters arbitrarily removed from its central location and placed in a little seventh-rate city in Massachusetts, and half a continent away from our candidate for President just at the time when it is necessary for him to keep in close touch with it—the management of the national affairs of the party taken out of the hands of those who had the ability to bring the party up from nothing to its present standing, and placed in the hands of an entirely new and inexperienced set of men at a most critical time—just as we are entering upon our first national campaign. It is true they permit us to have a national campaign committee located at Chicago, upon which some of the members of our N. E. C. may serve. They may have the privilege of raising all the money and doing all the hard work of the campaign, but the moment the elections are over they must turn over their books and accounts to the Springfield Executive Committee and—pass out of existence—and with them, I tell you, comrades, will pass the last vestige and semblance of our young and promising Social Democratic Party. We shall have been malevolently assimilated.

And how eager they seem to be to unite with us upon this basis! One can not help being reminded of the eagerness of a hungry wolf to unite himself with a lamb. Even before our convention they had sent out the cry that our rank and file should unite with them "over the heads of their leaders." Their efforts now to incite our members to "turn down" our N. E. C. are open and undisguised. To a Socialist there is something revolting in the ghoul-like gleam with which their papers pounce upon every hasty word, every ill-considered circular, every hysterical cry of "reason" from any of our members and publish and gloat over them. It is inexpressibly sad. Clearly there still exist the reasons which demanded our organization as a separate party three years ago, and they still demand our continuance as a separate body for the time being, though uniting with other Socialists at the polls.

Margaret Haile.

A Statement

Comrades of the S. D. P.:

The Social Democratic Herald of April 7, 1900, contained a "manifesto" signed by four members of the national executive board, the evident object of which is to prevent a union of Socialist forces. The claims on which this document is based are the actions of those present at the so-called "peace conference" at Indianapolis, in connection with the work of the conference committee at its sessions in New York city.

The "peace conference" was simply the efforts of a few individuals to try and overcome obstacles in the way of securing what the overwhelming majority of the national convention desired. The "peace conference" was not authorized by the convention, and made no report to it. It was instigated by S. D. P. members whose only object was the unification of forces against a common foe. Those present from the S. L. P. were Harriman, Hillquit and Benham. From the S. D. P. Gordon, Edwards, Berger, Mailly, Butcher, Carey, Chase and Martin. Of the latter, Chase, Carey and Butcher were members of the conference committee and present at its sessions in New York.

Having read the "manifesto" and the various published statements, and possessing a personal knowledge as to what took place in the "peace conference," and the conference committee, or both, we desire to say that we consider the "manifesto" issued by the four members of the national executive board to have been uncalled for, and a most unfortunate document, calculated to arouse distrust, suspicion and enmity without just foundation. We further believe that the report of the majority of the conference committee offers full scope for expressing our opinions. In all its details it is probably satisfactory to few, but, as a whole, it presents a practical basis for what all honest, fair-minded Socialists desire—union of class-conscious Socialists to fight capitalism.

The way to secure the adoption of the name Social Democratic party is by honorable argument. Let us prove ourselves worthy of the name.

Fraternally,

Chas. R. Martin,
Wm. Butcher,
William Mailly,
John C. Chase,
James F. Carey.

Debs as a Rival of Bryan

St. Louis Globe-Democrat: "The Bryanites who were expressing forebodings recently as to the possibility that the candidacy of Debs would injure their favorite are being vindicated in many quarters these days. Several more or less prominent supporters of the Nebraskan in 1896 have been saying recently that they are going to drop him this year and take up Debs in his place."

"Thus, as many shrewd democrats feared, the candidature of Debs will be a menace to Bryan's chances. Some of Debs' friends are predicting that he will get several hundred thousand votes, while a few of them are saying he will get more votes than were given to the populist Weaver in 1892, which was over 1,000,000. All these votes, of course, will come from the element who otherwise would support the democratic candidate. Thus the talk that the Socialist nominee put up a few weeks ago at Indianapolis would injure the man who is to be nominated by the Kansas City convention is seen to be very far from being a joke. Every vote that Debs secures will be a vote taken from his old friend Bryan, and Debs may be relied on to make a particularly active canvass this year."

New Ideas, Seattle, Wash., says: "Not that we love Bryan less, but Debs more. Mr. Bryan is a great statesman, an orator, but he lacks a few of the fundamental principles necessary for the advancement of the laboring class, while Mr. Debs falls in line with a platform, and can be put into execution, that will cut the tangled mess with blessings for all, not a few."

Some S. L. P. Resolutions

The resolutions which follow were adopted at an S. L. P. meeting last Sunday in Chicago, at which less than half a dozen Social Democrats were present. They were presented by T. J. Morgan.

Whereas, The S. D. P. and the S. L. P., each assembled in their respective national conventions, selected committees to formulate a plan for the union of all Socialists in the United States into one Socialist party; and, Whereas, Said committee performed the duty assigned to them and prepared a joint report to be voted upon by a referendum vote of the members of both parties; therefore,

Resolved, That this meeting of Chicago Socialists of both parties hereby approve of the proposed union of Socialists; and

Resolved, That as Socialists we declare for the fullest recognition of the principle of self-government and the use of the referendum as the best method of ascertaining the individual and collective will of associated Socialists on the question of union. Therefore, we declare that all assumption of leadership exceeding the limits of proper suggestion, that all claims of individual members, committees or officials to superior intelligence, which are set up as a warrant for forestalling, controlling or defeating the free will of the membership, violates Socialist principles and injures the cause of Socialism, and we fraternally suggest that the membership of the general Socialist parties seek for information in the official reports of the several conventions and the report of the joint committee, and from these legitimate resources draw their own conclusions and make their judgment known by the referendum; and

Resolved, That pending the vote for union this meeting hereby ratifies the nomination of Eugene V. Debs and Job Harriman as Socialist candidates for President and Vice President of the United States.

A Gross Outrage

Elmer Vandervoort is a man of middle age, living in Chicago, who some years ago while employed as a railroad brakeman was crippled for life. Of late he has been trying to eke out a living by selling newspapers on the street. To do this he was required to have a permit from the powers that be. While engaged a few days ago in pursuing his precarious vocation a ruffianly policeman ordered him off the street, and though informed by Vandervoort that he had a permit, the minion of the law compelled this poor man to move on. Later, while Vandervoort with a friend was passing up the street he was accosted by the same policeman, now accompanied by another in plain clothes, and without cause, or provocation whatever, both he and his friend were arrested and thrown into a cell. They were locked up from 7 in the evening to 11:30, then taken before a brutal justice and on representations made by the police that they were obstructing the sidewalk, forced to pay a fine of $11. The men had no recourse, because of their poverty, and the administration of justice for the fees there is in it was triumphant.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

FUSION AND CONFUSION

An Instructive Fable Without a Moral.

And it came to pass that a few old hawks having lost their power as birds of prey, but retaining their desire for spring chickens, decided to coax their inexperienced young and hopeful creatures into their (the hawk's) nest, by means of crafty designs. With this purpose in view the hawks one nice day addressed the inhabitants of the nearest chicken coop, saying: "Dear fellow birds: We hawks were always fond of you chickens. Appearances are deceptive. If we did attack you in open battle now and then, it was because we loved you rather too strongly. And much ought to be forgiven to those who loved much. We and you are birds, although not of the same feather. Let us now all flock together into our hospitable nest and live in harmony in the interests of the airy kingdom of our common race." Thus the hawks spake, and many of the chickens were delighted to the extreme to hear their old adversaries utter such sweet words of reconciliation. These chickens agreed to a union with the hawks under the term that the latter should agree to rechristen their nest and call it henceforth "Chicken Coop." The hawks agreed to that, and some other terms imposed upon them by their new allies. So all was well. But the hawks, once having gained the consent of the chickens to a union, broke their pledges. And then—But what happened then, or rather what will happen can be only a matter of conjecture, as the fable is still being enacted before our very eyes. Will the chickens be simple-minded enough to allow themselves to be swallowed up by the crafty hawks or will they come to their senses and safely remain in their own coop? The future will show it.

Let us, however, leave allegories for the present and try to express our attitude towards the historical events inaugurated in Indianapolis and brought to confusion in New York. The Social Democratic Party started its existence under the brightest auspices. The old middle class parties have no vital principles to incorporate, and political parties without principles are bodies without a living soul in them. The day is approaching fast and furious when the struggle will be waged only between two great parties—the capitalistic party and the party of proletarians. The first will represent the anachronistic principle of anarchism, while the second will incorporate the thoroughly modern and scientific principle of socialism. The first party will consist of a small class without any useful function in society to perform, the second of all toiling humanity. The marvelous growth and development of the S. D. P. proved that it is a national as well as an international political organization of the proletariat of the United States. We do not want to antagonize anybody or offend any one. We feel fraternally towards all sincere, public-spirited, idealistic men, and especially so towards radical thinkers of the Socialistic stamp. But truth is dearer than Plato. The predecessor of the S. D. P. and its contemporary, the S. L. P., proved its inability to win the conference and sympathy of the people of the United States, whatever the cause of it may be. The S. L. P., petrified in the early Lassalle tactics and practices, tactics and practices long ago discarded by the S. D. P. of Germany. Bossism, heresy hunting, intolerance, the preponderance of personalities over principles and a great deal of authoritative utopianism, made the S. L. P. especially obnoxious to the strongly developed individuality of the American proletarian. Things in the S. L. P. went from bad to worse. The party was rent asunder by internal dissensions and personal animosities. One faction retained the legal right to the name of the party. The other faction was compelled either to start a new third Socialistic party without any justification for it or join the S. D. P. At this juncture the S. L. P. made overtures about union to the S. D. P. Nothing was more natural. That faction of S. L. P. had no other alternative. There was absolutely no cause whatever for any members of the S. D. P. to turn hysterical on that account. All sincere Socialists always were and will be fraternally welcomed into the folds of the S. D. P. as individuals. The disorganized S. L. P., however, wanted to join the S. D. P. as an organization. And there is where the gravity of the problem presents itself. The S. L. P. in the first instance, is now in a state of disorganization and has, therefore, no right to be recognized as an organization. Secondly, the S. L. P. as an organization proved to be a disastrous failure, and it would be suicidal for the S. D. P. to absorb in itself the germs of dissolution permeating the body politic of the S. L. P. We do not want the S. D. P. to degenerate into an exclusive sect, but we do not want also that the S. D. P. enter into a compact with the S. L. P. or any other Socialistic party as a party. There are all kinds of Socialists—religious Socialists, state Socialists, authoritative Socialists, Utopian Socialists, Socialists in general, anarchistic Socialists, single tax and free silver Socialists, and no end of confusionists who style themselves Socialists. There is no harm done if they are accepted into the party individually. They will eventually either be educated up to the clear-cut Social Democratic ideas or drop out. But if they enter as an organization they must necessarily implant confusion and discord into the rank and file and in this way form rather an element of weakness than strength. The S. D. P. is not in any way identical with the S. L. P. as an organization. The S. L. P. had always its popes, its dogmas, its sectarian narrowness. The S. D. P. does not want any of these things. The S. D. P. stands for the inauguration of democratic principles in the domain of economic social activity. It has its own field, its own mission. The S. D. P. is not Utopian; it is an evolutionary as well as a revolutionary party. It is the party of all the people who work for a living. The S. L. P. spent all their energy in erecting altars to idols and then tearing them down; in personal invectives and small machiavellianism. The history of the S. L. P. and the events in New York supplement each other.

Now, what shall we, the rank and file of the S. D. P., do? Let us keep cool and express ourselves against any fusion and confusion. The S. D. P. is growing and vigorous, and will surely work out its own salvation. The best elements of the dying S. L. P. will come our way anyhow, and for the rest of them we do not care.

I. LADOFF.

MAKE IT UNANIMOUS FOR UNION

Again our party is confronted with the question: Shall there be unity with the S. L. P. or not? We are told that our conference committee have acted contrary to their instructions; that revolt is gaining headway in the party. We are certainly in a critical condition, but will we better the condition by voting no union? Can we afford to bear the burden of responsibility for defeating union? Do we not rather encounter a still greater possibility of revolt, and give impetus to another party who might gather strength from dissensions among the S. D. P.? I believe so. To me it seems a calamity that the question of union is made an issue in the party by the manifesto of the national executive committee. We as a party cannot afford that failure of union shall be laid at our door.

Vote for union and the name Social Democratic party. And then, if there is no union, it is not our fault. The conference committee has submitted no proposition or made any agreement which does not give to the majority of the S. D. P. the opportunity to stand by its honored name, or reject any proposition which would make a majority of the joint parties vote decisive.

Better by far that union should fail, by failure on name, or some other of the propositions, than a vote point-blank against union.

If we do not want to abide by a name which our party votes in opposition to, yet receives a majority of the combined vote of the two parties, all we have to do is to vote against the third proposition, as to name.

I believe our conference committee did the best they could under the circumstances. Though our national convention decided that a separate vote—each party by itself—should be the rule on all questions, please remember that there is a higher authority than the national convention or national executive committee; and to the highest court of the party our committee has agreed to submit the matter, viz.—the general vote of the party. Are we afraid to trust the good sense of our rank and file? If not, then vote solidly for union.

The lack of keeping faith by our comrades of the S. L. P. seems to be charged by those who were busy in holding side-room meetings to fix things. Such efforts never turn out well. I know of three delegates at our national convention whose combined credential vote was at least three hundred, who were for standing by our party name, and argued as I did to instruct our conference committee to stand by the name Social Democrat; these three delegates were very busy in consulting with the S. L. P. subcommittee, and no doubt thought things were well fixed, and when it came to a vote, voted for the minority recommendation to simply urge our party name.

The convention should have been flat-footed and voted for just what they wanted, and if union then failed the responsibility would have rested on the S. L. P. and not on us.

While union is desirable, I maintain our S. L. P. friends, by asking us to take a new name, they are for the sake of pride and a little prestige for themselves, asking us to do the cause of Socialism, for this year, at least, harm; and for the good of our cause we should refuse, even though the result is no union.

Now, I am not arguing for our name because I love it for itself alone, or of its applicability from a dictionary definition when applied to the Socialist movement. It does not matter much what a word means; but it is all important as to what the people think a word or name means.

To the members of the S. D. P. and S. L. P. it is taken for granted that it means with us so far as the number of votes to be secured, that the result is the same whatever the name is to be. But we are less than 10,000 votes, and we expect to get 1,000,000 at the coming election. Under the name Social Democrat, Socialism has got such an advertisement in this country as never before in the history of the movement. We have as a candidate for president a man with not only a great national reputation, but of international fame. One who, with the exception of a few crazy De Leonites, is universally honored as a man of ability, and integrity of character, whose voice has sounded the principles of Socialism throughout the length and breadth of this nation; in the name of Social Democracy. And at this time to change our name would lead to confusion and doubt when we are looking for accessions of strength to our cause. To yield to the request of our S. L. P. friends would, I believe, result in greater loss than any help they can bring to us.

Whether our name be Social Democrat or United Socialist, in many states we have got to put up a fight to get a place on the official ballots. If Social Democrat, we have got to fight the democratic capitalist party; and that is a part of our program. The people expect it. We are after the scalps of all capitalist parties. If our name is to be United Socialist party we have got to fight the De Leonites. Great Scots! What a spectacle! A United Socialist party fighting before capitalist officials, another Socialist party, for position. The situation would make us ridiculous. Our experience has been that we succeed best when we ignore the De Leonites. When they fight us, we are the gainers. When we get into a wrangle with them, we belittle ourselves and our cause.

We oppose capitalism and capitalist parties, and have no time to waste in fighting other Socialist factions.

So I say let us be unanimous for union with the S. L. P. and our party name. Let us take up each proposition submitted by the conference committee and vote as intelligently as we can, ready to make all reasonable concessions. Let no one's desire to retain a hitherto important position influence us against a union of the two parties. Whatever a majority of the members of the Social Democratic party choose for a name, that name is good enough for me. If our party by a majority vote choose to accept a name having the largest number on joint ballot of the two parties, like Barkis, I'm willin'. To our S. L. P. friends who want a new name anyway, I will say you can't find a better name than ours; do your duty and vote for Social Democrat.

Squire E. Putney.

THE TRANSFIGURATION

A bare, cheerless room, incumbered with old, worn-out furniture; a hard-working wife, bending wearily over a small, rickety stove; the whole pervaded with that atmosphere of grime and dullness which seems to hang permanently over the dwellings of the poor; this was the home in which John Carvel stood, one morning in the spring. In absolute keeping with his surroundings, rough and rusty as they, with dull, lusterless eyes, and gross, homely features—a typical laboring man; one of whom the better situated look down upon as one of another species, fashioned with other clay, coarser than their own, absolutely devoid of all those higher instincts that distinguish men from the brutes. He was preparing to go to work, but had tarried a moment to examine a small packet left by the postman.

When he had removed the paper covering a small pamphlet was disclosed to view, on the face of which was the printed word "Socialism." A look of disgust and disappointment came over his face. Socialism! What was that to him? What was it, anyhow? He threw down the book, hastily put on his coat and left the house.

Two miles to the workshop. The road ran through cultivated fields, relieved here and there by little patches of woodland. April was shedding its bloom on all nature; the air was light and free, filled with the fragrance of early morning. The trees and shrubs were gay with blossoms, while here and there a precocious daisy peeped out from the grass to drink in the sunbeams. But what was all that to John? John was thinking, of his debts, perhaps, or his work, or perhaps he was not even thinking at all; such might have been the observation of the passer-by, seeing him plodding along with bowed head and empty gaze. Soon he reached the scene of his work, and he sat down to his task. The long, monotonous hours moved slowly forward as he bent over the bench in the same attitude which he had taken the day before, and the day before that, and all the days, weeks, months and years since first he had come to labor in the mill. The same mechanical movement of the hands, the same action until the human automaton and the machine of steel seemed confounded into one mechanism, propelled by some unknown power. At noon there was a respite, a short interval, in which John indulged in a few moments' conversation with his fellows. What did they talk about? It matters not. The work was now resumed until the evening.

John had lived through many such days. With one or two exceptions they were but prototypes one of the other.

Perhaps John did not even know that life could be any different, and yet today he was more tired and oppressed than usual. The hours dragged with a heavier pace; the buzzing wheels seemed to sing a dizzier song, and as the day drew to a close a feeling of deeper gloom seemed to have entered his heart. Work was over. On his way home he crossed the path of a friend. Struck by the look of unutterable woe and haggardness which darkened the man's face, he stopped him and inquired the cause of his trouble. "Discharged," he answered; "a hasty word; I tried to make it up, but it was no use. I don't know what to tell them at home." "What are you going to do?" asked John. "Do?" A gesture, half of anguish half of anger, was the answer as the man hurried away. These were common occurrences in the big mill town, and after condoling a little in his heart with his unfortunate friend, John proceeded on his way. Nevertheless as he walked the thought pursued him—what should he do were he also discharged or deprived of work? Who would take care of the family at home? The sun was sinking to the horizon, filtering through the trees, rays of orange and red. In the sky, here and there, a few tinted clouds were floating in a sea of blue and gold. A hush was descending over the face of the world, spreading its blessing of peace and rest upon the fields and flowers. The buds and blossoms were beginning to nod their drowsy heads in the evening breeze and the buzzing insects of the sunlight had already retired to rest. At a certain spot a gurgling brook crossed the road, eddying and whirling around its pebbles in noisy glee. When John reached the little rustic bridge which spanned the tiny streamlet he paused for a moment and looked down into the water. Here it was dark and glossy; there, reflecting with a silver luster the tints of the heavens; farther on, white with foam. The picture was peaceful, quiet, enchanting. Suddenly, as he gazed, half absently at the rippling water, a song burst out into the air. A hidden nightingale from a neighboring tree was pouring forth its evening melody. For a few moments the music endured, floating down sweeter and softer until it died away into the silence.

As from a dream John Carvel awoke, and without stopping again he hurried to his home. The same dull scene as the morning; the same gloomy interior, the same rickety chairs and coarse, ugly utensils. Tired, weary, and sad, with an inexpressible feeling of misery in his heart, John sank down into a seat beside the table. Almost touching his hand lay the little pamphlet which he had thrown down so disdainfully before. "Socialism." The title seemed to stand out on the white cover almost defiantly. Socialism—what was it? Listlessly John took the book and opened it. He read on a few lines, greatly surprised to see how easily he understood it. He continued, and soon became absorbed in its contents to an extraordinary degree. Once he put down the book and stopped for a moment to reflect. All was quiet in the house; outside only a few pale gleams still streaked the somber sky. It was now supper time. After going through the evening meal as usual, John again took up his pamphlet and read on. He seemed to be under the spell of some fascination; now and then he would stop and remain for some time plunged, as it were, in a deep reverie; then he would resume his reading with more ardor than before. As he sat there in the lamplight, the observer who could have seen him would have greatly marveled at the expression which had gradually settled upon the worn visage. The hours succeeded each other silently as time crept slowly through the night, and soon the first rays of dawn shot into the room, paling the light of the dying lamp. Astonished, John looked up. The book fell from his hands. He raised his head and shaded his eyes, dazzled by the light. When he opened them again a new expression was there. The dull, sordid features had disappeared; the brutish look was gone. Intelligence, earnestness and a profound joy beamed from the sparkling eyes, and from John Carvel's old self looked forth a new man. Almost reverently he picked up the little sheet and placed it by the extinguished lamp. The light had come. He walked to the window to breathe in the fresh morning air. The sun had just risen and was flooding all nature with a wealth of red brightness, while the birds sang joyously their chorus of welcome to the coming day. And on that day John Carvel went out into the world, to labor, to struggle and to live.

THE EVOLUTION AND THE REVOLUTION OF TRUSTS

Before the Brooklyn Co-operative club, which meets at the home of Eugene V. Brewster, Rev. Charles H. Vail recently spoke on the "Evolution and Revolution of Trusts." From the address the following passages are taken:

"In order to thoroughly understand the revolution of industry which the trusts have effected, we need to trace the processes of industrial evolution which have culminated in these great organizations of capital. Industry has passed through several stages of development. Beginning with the handicraft stage of the middle ages it passed through the manufacturing stage and on into the factory stage which began in the last third of the eighteenth century. This last period was introduced by a series of inventions and improvements which completely revolutionized industry. The production of this period, being based upon mechanical invention and a far-reaching division of labor, is essentially social production. The change in the form of production which resulted from the industrial revolution wrought the downfall of the small producer and reduced the once independent handicraftsman to the level of a wage slave. The result of turning the limited implements of production into mighty powers, precluded individual ownership on the part of the workers. Not only had the tools become social in character; that is, such as could only be operated by co-operative labor, but the vast cost of the new implements rendered their possession by the laborers impossible. This condition necessarily gave rise to the capitalist class, the owners of the instruments of production. As a result of this appropriation of the means of livelihood the laborers were reduced to servitude and dependence.

"When the tools first became social in character they were owned by individual capitalists. But the development of industry soon necessitated the massing of large capital, and as it became difficult for the individual to furnish the requisite means the joint stock company arose. The next phase of this evolution was the union of these companies into trusts. The rapid trustification of industry during the last few years has been phenomenal. The trust, however, is a perfectly natural and logical outcome of competitive industry. It is the result of the efficiency of capital in large masses. Associated capital and machinery are requisite to efficient and economical production. These great organizations of capital make possible the saving of labor by dispensing with the services of armies of advertisers, drummers, canvassers, clerks, etc., who only exist for the purpose of attracting the attention of the public to various competing firms.

"The reason why the trust is regarded by many as an evil is because society, as at present constituted, is not benefited by all this economy in production and distribution. The saving thus effected goes into the pockets of the capitalists who have monopolized the control of industry. If the organization of industry is effective in reducing the cost of production, and society as a whole is not benefited by the improved method, the trouble is not with the principle of combination but with its private ownership and control. If the people wish to enjoy the benefits of the trusts they must own them. As the principle of combination, which is the embodiment of the trust, is sound, it ought to be extended to the whole social order. We protest, however, against leaving such an effective principle in the hands of private individuals to be exploited for private profit. We demand that every industry shall be systematized and organized; in other words, trustified; and we further demand that all industries shall be collectively owned and operated for the benefit of all the people. When the trust is socialized the evils which result from private ownership will disappear, leaving only the benefits which result from co-operation. Socialists, then, see to perfect the trust, extend it and utilize it for the benefit of all.

"The revolution of industry wrought by the evolution of trusts is resulting in the downfall of the middle class of small producers and distributors, just as the introduction of the machine wrought the downfall of hand labor. As the laborers cried out against the machine, so the middle class are crying out against the trust. But the trust, like the machine, is the natural product of industrial evolution. The trust is the great labor displacer used by big capitalists in eliminating the small fry. It is no wonder then that this class of small producers should cry, 'Down with the trusts.' To succeed they must have the aid of the laboring class, and so have endeavored to beguile the workers into supporting this middle-class policy. It is the old trick of using the working class as a tool to fight the battles of the masters. But fortunately the working class is awakening to its own interests, and perceives that this denunciation, by the middle class, of the trust, is not in behalf of labor, however loud the professions, but in behalf of its own existence. This outcry does not mean the betterment of labor. The tools of production today are social and can only be operated by co-operative labor. This fact precludes the possibility of individual ownership of the tools by the laborers. The destruction of the trusts, then, does not mean that the instruments of production can be owned by the laborers; it only means that these instruments could then be owned by smaller combinations of capital; that is, by the middle class.

"If the middle-class program were carried out it would simply mean an increase in the number of exploiters. Labor would still be dependent, the same as now, upon those who own the means of production. Is there anyone so foolish as to contend that labor would be better off by increasing the number of parasites? The whole anti-trust movement is in the interest of the class of small proprietors who are being pinched by modern industry. The triumph of this class would in no way improve the lot of the workers, they would still be non-possessing dependents whose labor-power would be bought in the open market at its competitive value. The method of the small employer is precisely like that of the large, and the smaller the field of operation the more profit he must extract from labor in order to live in idleness. The laboring class, then, are not interested in the preservation of the middle class and their wasteful system of industrial competition. The very fact that competition is being supplanted by combination, evidences that the former is wasteful and injurious. The middle-class policy is absurd. There is no possibility of returning to any of the stages out of which we have evolved. Nothing could be more Utopian than the free competition of the past. That condition has forever passed away into innocuous desuetude. The passing of industry from the hand-stage into the era of social organized labor meant the death of the old competitive order. Monopoly has come and come to stay—the people must own the trusts or the trusts will own the people.

"We welcome the trust, not as a finality but as a step toward Socialism. The trust is doing excellent work in organizing industry and preparing the way for the co-operative commonwealth. It is a pioneer of progress—an unconscious forerunner of Socialism. As the trusts are social instruments, they should be owned in common. This is the only way to abolish the incongruity between social production and capitalist appropriation. The place of the present despotic system of industry we propose a social democracy. Social or industrial democracy is in the line of economic evolution, and is certain of attainment. Every careful discernor of the times knows that the social revolution is at hand. Every vote cast for Socialism hastens the day of economic emancipation."

France

The men and women employed in shops in Paris have at last formed a union. They complain that though nominally they are supposed to leave at 8 in the evening, yet in many cases they have to stay much later. The shopmen and shopwomen have much to complain of; their hours are long, their food bad, and, if they live in the house, their sleeping accommodation is detestable, and the women are subject to other perils which are not exaggerated in Zola's "Le Bonheur des Dames." The position of the men and women employed in the Socialist stores in Belgium seems to be very good, and it would be advisable if similar stores could be started

There is a strike at Carmaux among the miners, and they are having a very hard fight with the masters.

The Assumptionist Fathers have been ordered by the Pope to give up their scurrilous newspaper, La Croix. So they have obeyed his Holiness' command, not by discontinuing the paper, but by selling it to a syndicate. And this is a sample of obedience to the Pope's orders.

Summer is here, but thousands of the city children will not see nature this summer, except when it rains, or when the sun gets at a proper angle to shine down in their alley.

RALLYING SONG

Inscribed to S. D. P. Branches
By H. S. Geneva Lake

The storm is on us, ship ahoy!
Rally, boys, rally!
But never mind the sly decoy,
Rally, rally, rally!
Our ship is raked on all her sides,
Sail on, sail on, whate'er betides,
Rally, boys, rally.
The night is dark, the stars are few,
Rally, boys, rally!
These crises, they are never new,
Rally, rally, rally!
Our captain, crew, all hands on deck,
The light is there, though but a speck,
Rally, boys, rally.

The storm will rage, no matter, though,
Rally, boys, rally!
We have the commonwealth in tow,
Rally, rally, rally!
Around the campfires yet to be
We'll tell of how we sailed the sea,
All ropes made taut, our fair flag free,
Maned by the brave Democracy,
Rally, boys, rally.

Art in a Ditch

Wm. Morris says that art is "the expression of man's joy in labor." What a definition of art? Do you think there is very much joy in digging a sewer ditch at 50 cents a day? Can you see much of art in a man's life who is compelled to live on less than $200 for a year?

Under the private contract system of labor in one of the cities of Ohio last year, the contractor put laborers in competition with each other for the work of digging a sewer by the foot, with the result, as I told the civil engineer of that city, that those laborers received less than 50 cents a day. In another city of Ohio laborers on the street improvement and repair received less than $200 for their year's work, the labor market being so overstocked that they could only be employed less than half time in order that all might have a little work. Yet in that same city there are men who used the streets and piled up in profits hundreds of thousands of dollars, wholly unconscious of their guilt in using streets kept up at the cost of the lives of other men.—Samuel M. Jones, Toledo.

International Congress

Our comrades of the French Socialist Comité d'Entente have issued a circular of invitation to the great International Socialist Congress to be held in Paris this year. The Congress is fixed for the 23d to the 28th of September next. It sets out the conditions under which the Congress has been called, the basis of representation, and the questions which are to be considered. All working-class organizations will be entitled to be represented at the Congress which accept the principles of Socialism, i. e., the socialization of the means of production, and the conquest of political power by the workers organized in a distinct proletarian party; and all trade unions which, while not taking an active part in the political movement, recognize the class war and the necessity for political action. Among the subjects set down for consideration are: International organization; the constitution and organization of the working-class party in the different countries; the expropriation of the bourgeoisie; the socialization of the means of production; international peace, militarism, the abolition of standing armies; colonial politics, and trusts. There is every reason to hope for a large, important, and successful congress.

Belgium

A vigorous speech was made the other day at the Maison du Peuple at La Louviere by the Abbe Daens in favor of old-age pensions. The government has made some proposals, but they are quite inadequate.

The Socialists at Antwerp have determined to run several candidates at the general election; they were going to agree on a joint list with the Liberals, but they have decided to act independently.

The Maison du Peuple of Brussels has just published its accounts for the last six months of 1899, the profits come to £8,600. After allowing for depreciation and for propaganda funds, part of the profits are returned to purchasers. But the institution has done even more good by putting a stop to the credit system and at the same time selling only goods of the best quality.

Bulgaria

It is reported from Budapest that a Socialist movement is developing in Bulgaria and that the peasants are refusing to pay taxes. But it is very doubtful if this is a Socialist revolt, as Socialism in the Balkan Peninsula is a purely academic movement, and it is much more likely that the trouble there is agrarian and anti-dynastic.

SUCCESS OF SOCIAL DEMOCRATS IN ELECTION AT MARION, IND.

The center of interest for Social Democrats in Indiana, on May 1 was Marion, Ind. As a result of the local election in that place the party now has two representatives in the city council, who will retain their seats for four years. Comrade J. W. Kelley received a majority of seven in a ward usually having a Republican majority of 300, while Comrade Croke, in a three-cornered fight between Republicans, Democrats and Social Democrats, carried his ward with a majority of 45.

The Marion Daily Chronicle (Rep.) in an appreciative editorial said: "The existence of socialistic sentiment is a thing to which the Chronicle has time and again called attention, but it has always been received by the majority of readers with incredulity. To the observer the growth of this sentiment for years has been clear. Over and over again the Chronicle has spoken of it. All over Christendom Socialism has been growing and growing for a quarter of a century. The growth has been steady. In Germany Socialists command more votes at the polls and more votes in parliament than any other political party. It has no majority, it is true, but it has a plurality, and it has been rapidly on the increase. The London and Paris councils are under the domination of that sentiment. The growth in this country has been none the less constant, though it has not been so apparent on the surface. There are several causes for this which have been mentioned in these columns more than once, and which will have attention again.

"Another factor in the First ward is the popularity of Mr. Kelley. All who know him believe in his sincerity. The same may be said of his opponent, it is true, but the latter is not so well known. Here it is proper to say of Mr. Kelley that all who know him have absolute confidence that he will do what he believes right, regardless of all other considerations. To what degree he will reduce his ideas to practical work for the advancement of the city remains to be seen, but everybody knows that he will do just what he believes he ought to do. Then, too, he brings to bear upon his work not only a conscientious regard for duty, but also a keen intelligence which is known only to those who come closely in contact with him.

"The election of Mr. Croke was predicted by some active Republicans, and yet it was thought that the division of the opposition vote would give Mr. Jones a plurality. Mr. Croke's election is due to the same influence that elected Mr. Kelley. Among the workmen in the Evans factory, and everywhere where he is known, he is very popular, is said to be very intelligent, and it was freely predicted that among those in his neighborhood he would command a solid vote. In addition to his personal popularity he brings to bear a general information on current social questions which few persons possess, and in argument there are not many who can cope with him. That he is most popular among those who know him best is a tribute to his personality that equals anything that can be said of anybody. In this contest, too, Socialistic sentiment was a factor which is to be considered in such contests far more than most people are willing to admit. It is a fact, and a potent one, and is not to be pooh-poohed out of existence."

The workmen of Marion have honored themselves in this electing representatives of their party, and the Herald extends hearty congratulations to the comrades on this signal success in their first campaign.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS

CELEBRATE MAY DAY

Last Sunday afternoon witnessed a May Day celebration at Milwaukee under the auspices of Social Democrats. It was inaugurated with a parade followed by a mass meeting at Schlitz Park, with speeches by Seymour Stedman of Chicago and Dr. Titus Voelkel of Milwaukee.

The parade formed in front of the Exposition building shortly after 1 o'clock and marched down State street to Third with members of the Federated Trades council at the head, preceded only by Bach's band, which led the participants in the demonstration to the park. There were nearly fifty members of the Trades Council in line, and the Molders' Union followed with about 150 men represented.

The Carriage and Wagon Makers' Union, whose members are now out on a strike for the recognition of the union, were then seen in line, with almost the entire union membership of 150 men, and the fifteen branches of the Social Democracy in the different parts of the city followed with nearly 200 men, the remainder of the members of the branches being scattered among the various labor unions in line.

The Brewers' Union, with a membership of nearly 500 marchers, followed with Mayr's band at the head, and after them came stationary engineers and firemen, who in turn were followed by the men of the Brewery Teamsters' Union, who brought up the rear of the parade with the exception of members of various unions which were not officially participants in the demonstration.

As the parade marched on Third from State to Chestnut, Winnebago, Eleventh and Walnut streets, there were numerous banners carried by the various organizations, among which was one inscribed, "Debs for President," "Shorter Hours, Higher Wages, Mean Better Morals and Nobler Manhood." Banners with such inscriptions as "When Brains Vote, Ideas, Not Men, Rule," and "To-day the Trust, To-morrow the Deluge," were common. "Why Are You Against Socialism? Because You Know So Little About It," was followed by "Do Not Talk Politics in the Union, by Order of the Boss," was the inscription displayed by one of the paraders. All along the line of march there were cheers from the people who had turned out to see the demonstration.

The program opened at Schlitz park at about 4 o'clock and after music by Bach's orchestra, Miss Metha Bochart recited William Morris' "The March of the Workers," followed by Charles Mackay's, "Call for Revolution," as an encore. The Socialist Maennerchor rendered two musical numbers and Comrade Stedman then gave a short address.

"The demonstration to-day," he said,

"is an expression of the sentiment of the world that there are no clans or sects in the world of laboring men. There is a struggle on the part of all humanity for the economic independence of every man, woman and child, and it was not always the case that workmen could get together as they have done to-day. A few years ago we had the strike at Homestead. As a result of that strike Pinkertonism was done away with, but the capitalists found at Chicago, a few years later, that the national soldiers could do their work even better than did Pinkerton. Now we have the government by injunction developing, until a judge in New York has enjoined workmen from giving financial assistance to their striking fellows.

"The educational facilities are being curtailed. Why? The ignorant are the most servile tools of the plutocracy and there is no chance for Socialism among the most depraved and ignorant of the world. We find the great powers of government used to curtail the liberty of workmen. It will refuse aid to the workmen, but its strength is given to the men of the prevailing class, the rich. It will not give a bounty to the striking miners of the Coeur d'Alene as it does to the sugar trust. The capitalist organizes the trust, and laws and franchises are passed for his assistance. Trades unions do not seem to recognize the necessity of bringing the government to aid their class. If the men of the shops showed their power at the polls the legislators would shift their assistance to the workmen instead of giving it to the employers. When you once come together at the ballot box you will find that the employers will grant what you ask, to perpetuate their own existence. Our success would not be the success of the classes, but the destruction of all classes. When people realize our wishes they will come to us and there will be a new social system prevailing and freedom for all."

Gains at Terre Haute

Terre Haute comrades polled 223 votes for James A. Hatchell, 207 for John C. Kingery, and 210 for James E. Wall for councilmen at large. Slight interest was taken in the election, as but 60 per cent of the vote was cast. The comrades made no extra effort in this election, as we are saving our energy and finances for the fall election. The highest vote polled in 1898 (county election) was 260, lowest 56, an average of about 80 for the city. Our gain is about 140 straight Socialist votes. Look out for Hoosierdom! Jas. Oneal.

The Social Democrats at Jacksonville, Ill., organized a branch January 1, 1900, and fought their first political battle on the 17th of April. They elected two members of the board of education, Comrades H. Hering and Benj. J. Miller.

EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETING

At a meeting of the executive board held May 6, the resignation of Jesse Cox was accepted with expressions of great appreciation for his faithful and constant attention to the requirements of the position he has filled with complete satisfaction to all acquainted with him and the demands made upon him during the past two years.

When you buy an article worth $25 or over, something out of the usual run of household goods, you get a friend who understands that particular line of goods to go along with you. Why? You acknowledge in so doing that the capitalistic system of production as opposed to the socialistic system, does not stimulate to action the best efforts of the workingman. The goods were made to sell; not to wear, to eat, or to arouse admiration.

A good price will sometimes buy a fine article, but all cheaper articles of the same line are imitations more or less like the good article, according to the price paid. Thus there are fifty makes of pianos, the same of bicycles, typewriters, carriages, watches, etc., all equally "honest goods"—according to the salesman.

During the past three centuries we have had what we consider a large number of master painters, musicians, authors and scientific men, who have struggled to the front in spite of the capitalistic system that has developed during that time. They have fought against poverty, custom and the demands of relatives who wanted to see them "get along" in the business world, and yet they stand out as bright stars in a dark sky. We do not know what architecture, painting, music and science have in store for the twentieth century man and woman.

One of the Social Democrats elected to the city council of Brockton, Mass., against the expressed will of the members of his branch, voted in favor of a private franchise on the ground that his constituency, irrespective of the wishes of his comrades in the S. D. P., also favored it. The result was an acceptance of his resignation from public office by the branch, but the capitalistic members of the council stood by him and he declined to retire from the council. He was then expelled from membership in the Social Democratic Party.

One of the organizations identified with the progressive labor movement is the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, which is represented in Chicago by several branches, one of which, No. 77, meets the last Sunday in the month at 3 p. m., at Ehlert's Hall, corner of Eighteenth and Loomis streets. This organization has a record of fifteen years. The secretary of Branch 77 is F. Rose, 857 W. Twenty-first street, who will be glad to give any information desired.

Everywhere the work of the newer branches is characterized by the same energy and enthusiasm that has marked the record of the older ones in the past. At Coffeen, Ill., our comrades polled 37 straight Socialist votes at the township election last week, and for village justice Comrade Champe received 102 votes against 212 for his demo-republican opponent.

THE FUTURE OF DEMOCRACY

No thorough student of American politics will deny the statement that there has never been any real democracy in America. There were many things quite admirable in the old party of Jefferson and Jackson, and there is indeed much that is admirable in the present Democratic party of Bryan, Alged, George Fred Williams, etc. But the word "democratic" does not always mean democracy any more than the word convict means rogue. The Republican party to-day claims to be as democratic as the Democratic party, but the Republican party is just as anti-democratic as it is anti-republican. So is the Democratic party. Both of these parties mean the perpetration of the present wage system of capitalism—the Republican party representing the capitalistic class and the Democratic party representing the great but rapidly disappearing middle class. The Republican party believes in fostering and assisting those grand industrial organizations known as trusts, while the Democratic party believes in harassing, restricting or destroying them. Unconsciously the corrupt Republican party is doing valuable work for the cause of Socialism, and unconsciously the Democratic party is doing much to retard the advance of Socialism. To again put the Democratic party in power would be to take a step backward. To retain the Republican party in power for four more years would be to take a step forward. Capitalism and trusts are natural products of industrial evolution and the very best thing that could be is four more years of uninterrupted capitalism. Then its natural life will have been spent. When a doctor is consulted about a boil that has just appeared upon his patient he naturally concludes that there are impurities in the blood that must be removed. He could easily drive the boil away, but it would be only for a short time, because the impurities would still remain and must some time be removed. The best thing would be to bring the bothersome nuisance to a natural head—not to prolong the suffering or to temporarily relieve it.

The Democratic party would drive the boil away temporarily only to see it reappear later bringing with it more terrible consequences. The small capitalists, or the middle class, who control the Democratic party, would gladly crush the trust and become exploiters themselves, but they will never succeed. The big capitalists of the Republican party will not permit it, and it is well.

As to the elections this fall, it looks as though there would be four sets of candidates in the field besides the regular Socialist candidates—McKinley and Bryan, an anti-imperialistic Republican, and a gold Democrat. I doubt if the Populists will cut much figure. Most of them will join the Socialists, and the others will support Bryan. It looks as though Admiral Dewey will be the gold Democratic nomination, and if he does he may defeat McKinley. But one of the two will surely be elected, and with four more years of capitalism, the way will be prepared for the incoming co-operative commonwealth, for Socialism, which I think will carry the election in 1904. It is very plain that the duty of all Socialists this year is to stand by the Socialist candidates. It is almost wicked to do otherwise. With a million votes to their credit next November, the party will be filled with new energy and supreme confidence in the future.

The future of democracy in America, therefore, depends upon what Socialists do this year. The larger their vote the sooner will come the democracy of the future.

A B C OF SOCIALISM

Every man has a right to work to keep himself alive without let or hindrance from any other man.

Every worker has a right to all he has produced.

Every man has a right to work under such conditions as will give him the most for the least.

The trusts have demonstrated that co-operation produces most for the least outlay.

Society creates all values, therefore all values belong to society for the good of all.

Society gives all value to all inventions.

If there were no society, a corner lot in San Francisco would have no value.

If there were but one man, his million-acre farm, with its millions of cattle, would be worthless as pebbles. Nay more, his own life would have no value, it would not be worth the living.

If there were no boarders, the landlord would buy no butter and the dairy would have no value.

Socialism holds that these truths are self-evident and it therefore boldly proclaims that all franchises, all laws that give individuals the control of values are legalized robbery—the cause of all trusts, all wars, all poverty, and most of the crimes that have buried so many, so-called civilizations—they are the source of the danger now threatening human liberty.

Socialism, however, does not propose to meddle with the dead past. It wishes to think no more of those old wars and horrid tales. Its ways are peace and good will.

It will address itself to the present—It will construct and operate railroads at cost and let Huntington charge $5.90 or $5 to San Francisco, and get it if he can.

It will use checks as a universal clearing house, and let banks loan money at 186 per cent if they can.

Labor will farm its own lands and let Lux and Miller farm their millions alone, if they can.

Ten days of this will teach the haughty millionaire that his riches are nothing but a cunning legal contrivance borrowed from bloody Rome, which enables him to lawfully seize and hold the products of other men's toil.

In Brockton, Mass., 21,000 people produced over $21,000,000 of shoes at factory price. This is over $5,000 for every shoemaker, who took $600 of his own product for his pay and turned over $4,400 to his master for the privilege of working. Brockton is now Socialist and the arrogant master will be poor as soon as the workmen leave his mill to co-operate in one of their own. His mill will be as worthless as Huntington's railroad, but as the boss goes down, the people will rise; they will keep that $4,400.

This is Socialism, or universal co-operation. To say it will do away with all incentive to labor, is simply to say, John Jones cares more for his family alone than he does for the whole world, his own family included.

Depend upon it, men are too selfish to let this good thing go by. It will enable every man to produce the most for the least and to keep his own product.

Then the great instinct to which Christ appealed, "Do as you would be done by," will be supreme—nay, it is supreme even now, for in spite of all the evil and anguish engendered by legislation, for every bad deed men do, there are ten good ones; otherwise the race would perish.

When all products can be had at cost the saloon will cease to be, for it is run only for profit.

The movement is international and we are coming a hundred million strong.—M. V. Rork.

SOCIALISM'S PROPHECY

An address delivered by Harry F. Dyruff, on April 30, 1900, before the Franklin Literary Society of Brooklyn, N. Y.

I have been asked to speak on the subject of Socialism's Prophecy, and I think it best in the few minutes allotted to me to explain to you in my crude and humble way the ideas of Socialism. From that you will see what Socialism is and after seeing what it is you cannot help but seeing its inevitableness. Socialism's Prophecy is, that we will have Socialism and will elect a Socialist national ticket within the next decade. One of the finest definitions of Socialism, is one which appeared in the N. Y. Journal last week, which you have probably read, yet I think it is worthy of repetition. It was written by my comrade and friend, Eugene V. Brewster, and is headed, "Socialism—A Definition" (with apologies). "Socialism is a system not to be appalled, corrupted or compromised. It knows no baseness, it covers at no danger, it oppresses no weakness. Fearless, generous and humane, it rebukes the arrogant, cherishes honor and sympathizes with the humble. It asks nothing but what it concedes; it concedes nothing but what it demands. Destructive only of Despotism it is the sole conservator of Liberty, Labor and Justice. It is the ripe fruit of democracy, the law of nature pervading the land. It droppeth like the gentle rain from Heaven upon the place beneath equalizing opportunity, dispelling inequality, and restoring to every person his natural manhood. It breathes into the soul of Labor the life of the new world and raises it from the level of the beast. It restores to the producer his stolen implements of production, equitably distributes his products, and transforms the lowly slave into ripe and beauteous manhood. It not only appeals to selfish materialism, but to the highest moral and intellectual attributes known to our nature, yielding bread in abundance to the starving, moral food for the idealistic, and the highest conception of justice to all. The ignorant, the vulgar, the base in spirit, may denounce it as a dangerous thing, but in the social and industrial evolution Socialism shall show to all the world that its principles are eternal, its laws immutable, its claims indisputable and its consummation inevitable. It is an actual dream of the future paradise and sees in the present only a hideous nightmare. It seeks not to remedy or reform, but demands a peaceful revolution from slavery to equality, from tyranny to justice, from base and ignoble degradation to common happiness and contentment. It is noble, it is sublime—the perfection of human endeavor, that, recognizing the mutuality of all true human interests, quickens the pulses of the statesman, nerves the pen of the scholar, invigorates the voice of the orator, and doubles the energy of the toiler."

Socialism to me is all that is beautiful and beneficial—the brotherhood of man. To the materialistic it is an ideal form of managing our affairs for the best interests of all. The ignorant look upon us as revolutionists; they only compliment us with their abuse. Our main idea is, that the collectivity (that is all the people collectively) should own all the instruments of production and distribution. Some claim that this is not practical and some say if it is practical that it will not be realized for hundreds of years. They say let us try and get as much temporary relief as possible. I say no let us have a permanent and speedy cure. If you aim high, you may hit the middle, if you aim a little above the bottom you won't strike much higher than the bottom. The arrow of achievement in its flight always falls a prey to the law of gravitation. Some say, let us break up these huge monopolies, the trusts, and all will be right. That is one of the most foolish arguments I have ever heard. To go back to old methods of competition and waste, a system where the object is to steal from your neighbor, steal his trade, steal his reputation; a system of the greatest roguery and the greatest chievery, getting the best of everything. Why do we not break up the postoffice? That is a monopoly. It is true it could be managed much better than it is, but why? Because now the railroads compel the government to pay exorbitant prices for carrying the mail, private monopolies control the prices of even such small things as the paper used for stamps and the card board used for postal, and private monopolies control the price of everything else used by the postoffice, yet even as it is, is it not managed far better than any competitive business? And it would pay a much larger revenue did it not do so much educational work in carrying your books, newspapers and other educational matter for almost nothing? And how did the government get control of the postoffice? The same way as we propose to get control of all other monopolies now in private hands. At first, mail was delivered by private messengers. Then a few of them in one place got together and formed a little company, a few more somewhere else formed another company, and so on until there were many private companies. Finally all these companies got together and combined; when their combination had been perfected, the government seized it by taking to itself all rights of delivering mail. Just compare the methods of the postoffice with those of the competitive business methods. Supposing you wanted to send out about twenty-five Christmas presents and you hired a messenger and paid him fifty cents apiece to deliver them, $12.50 in all. Next door to you Jones had about twenty-five Christmas presents to deliver, and he paid $12.50, and his neighbor had twenty-five presents to be delivered, and so on. Now, supposing you and Jones and another neighbor got together and hired one man to deliver the seventy-five presents and you paid him $5 for doing it. Instead of $37.50, which you three paid before, you pay only $5, and save $32.50. Now supposing you found that every man on your block had about twenty-five presents to be delivered and you called a meeting of them all in your parlor some evening and you said, now we each have about twenty-five Christmas presents to deliver and I find that many of us have presents going to the same house or the house next door, and so you said let us all combine and hire ten men for $100 to deliver all of our presents, which they could do in one day, because they would leave five or six in one house and five or six next door and so on. If there were 100 of you, you would save the difference between $100, which you pay the ten men, and $12.50, the total which you would have to pay to have each one's present delivered separately. You see by systematizing the work you would save the unnecessary labor of many men. Some would say, well, that throws just so many out of work. What we want to do is to give men work, give employment to labor. If that's all they want to do why not let them all build a big tank on the seashore and work all day filling it with water and at night let all the water run out again or dig a big hole in the ground and then fill it up again. That would be giving employment to labor. But that would be waste, it would be useless labor, non-producing labor. If the commonwealth owned the soil we could take that same energy, that same labor and set it to work on some unoccupied field and produce bread for those that are now starving, or if the commonwealth owned the machinery of production we could take that same labor and set it to work in the now idle factories to make clothes for those who now have none. What we must do is to eliminate this waste of labor and energy, this non-producing labor and set it to work producing something instead of killing time with useless non-producing employment. To go back to co-operation, if John Smith and I can save labor and push six large stones from our yard in one day by pushing them out both together and only one each a day by slowly rolling them out each alone, is it not better for us to co-operate? Combination, co-operation is a good thing. The trusts are a good thing; they are a fine co-operative system. But it is the co-operation of the few to the detriment of the many. Why not let us all co-operate? Let us all get in the trusts or own the trusts and co-operate for the mutual benefit of us all. Some say, how can you get info the trusts? They won't let you in. Let the government take them as it did the postoffice. They have fattened on special privileges granted them by the government or community, they have in reality been created by the community and the community is entitled to own that which it has created. Some say if we had ideal socialism there would be no incentive of gain. That seems to be the chief objection to Socialism. When they say this, they have it in their minds that money is the only incentive of gain. Really, money is only one of many. There are the incentives of leaving your name to posterity, of gaining the admiration of your fellowmen, of being admired as great poets, great painters, sculptors, actors, etc. The love of money is only one incentive and under our system it would be the love of the miser only, for money would be of no value except to look at. The opposer of Socialism teaches that man would rather do wrong than right; we say man would rather do right than wrong, that if he had plenty to eat, plenty of clothes to wear and a place to sleep, that man would not steal or cheat. You know you would rather not take the living of the storekeeper next door to you away if it was not that by doing it you would have more food and clothes for yourself and family. You would rather live in peace with your neighbor if you could do so and both have enough of the necessities of life. Man is at heart good, and you know it. Another great objection comes from the so-called middle class. They say: I do not want to give up what I've saved and share it with Jones who has not saved anything. There is not one of them, gentlemen, who would not give up a little house and lot for the promise of the government, to insure him and his, a chance to earn a living. Even if there be a few that wouldn't; their house and lot will be finally taken by the larger capitalist, anyway, so they cannot lose any more through Socialism, and they have everything to gain through it. And to close, let me say, in the words of the poet, Macaulay:

"We need no aid of barricade to show a front to wrong,
We have a citadel in Truth more durable and strong.
Calm words, great thoughts, unflinching faith
Have never striven in vain,
They've won our battle many a time, and so they shall again."

INTERNATIONAL NOTES

Austria

The 11,000 miners at Kladno have had to go back to work on the master's terms, after being on strike for nearly three months. It is the old story of a strike being entered into without adequate preparation. Strike is war, and it is no use fighting, however just the cause, if you are not well organized beforehand. It is said that the men are going to form a strong union.

The weavers at Warnsdorf have also gone back to work, and have succeeded in obtaining the ten-hour day.

The new Polish Socialist paper published at Lemberg—the Naprzod (Forward)—is struggling with the Censor. It has already been seized four times, though it is barely a month old. A French journalist under the Empire said that it was the Censor who enabled a man to show if he was skillful or not. With a free press anyone could write, but if it was a muzzled press then it required a clever man to write and yet keep within the law.

The Socialists at Lemberg have held a great demonstration in favor of universal suffrage.

Efforts are being made in Vienna to establish a woman's club.

Bishop Lobos, of Tarnow, is dead. He was interesting as a survival of an old-fashioned ecclesiastic; he never dabbled with Socialism, but in his pastorals he used always to refer to Socialists as allies of the Devil and as inspired by evil spirits. And yet the poor old man saw Socialism increase in his diocese in Galicia.

Germany

A new hall has been built at Berlin—the German name is very long, as usual—but the object of the hall is to provide a place for offices of the various trade unions, and there is also a large hall, which can be used for meetings. The place will be managed by the different trade unions, and will be very similar to the Paris Bourse de Travail.

The annual congress of the German Socialist Party will be held in September at Mayence, in Rhenish Prussia. In Easter week there were several local congresses of Socialists, as, for example, the Wurtemberg Congress at Stuttgart, the Saxon at Dresden, and the German Poles at Berlin.

It is said that Dr. Arons, the lecturer who was dismissed by the Prussian government for being a Socialist, will be the candidate of the party at Magdeburg for the seat which is vacant through Oertel's death. The choice, however, has not been finally made.

Italy

Ciccotti has been selected as the Socialist candidate for one of the divisions of Milan, and up till now there is no other candidate.

New Hampshire Convention

The Social Democratic Party of New Hampshire will hold a state convention on Saturday, May 12, 1900, at 10 o'clock a. m., at City Hall, Manchester, N. In Aristocratic Pasadena

We send greeting to comrades throughout the land and wish them to know that we are doing a little something to help the cause along and that Socialism is gaining ground even here in wealthy and aristocratic Pasadena. At the municipal election in April we had candidates in the field for three trustees, the first time in its history that the city ever had a Socialist ticket. Out of 1,254, the whole number of votes cast, one of our candidates received 61, one 65 and one 93, an average of 6 per cent, thus giving us a standing as a political party. As I said, this is the first time a Socialist ticket was ever run in the city; four years ago, at the general election, I am told there was one vote for the S. L. P. We feel encouraged. We are at present holding weekly meetings at the board of trade rooms and hope to be in good shape for the campaign of 1900, and poll a good, respectable vote for Debs and Harriman. And in closing I cannot refrain from speaking a good word for these able men and true Socialists. Debs created unbounded enthusiasm when here by his masterly presentation of our principles, and Harriman has lived among us for many years and we all know him to be true blue. Nothing will give me, and many others here, greater pleasure than to have an opportunity to cast a ballot for this ticket.

O. T. Fellows.
Pasadena, Cal.

The following county ticket has been nominated by the Social Democrats of Butler county, Missouri:

Representative—Carl Knecht.
Sheriff—A. C. Ford.
Collector—B. R. Armstrong.
Treasurer—J. C. Roberts.
Assessor—R. C. Edwell.
Public Administrator—J. I. Simpson.
Judge Western District—H. C. McCullough.
Judge Eastern District—G. W. Clemm.

PRACTICAL SOCIALISM

By Charles Treuch

Would a socialistic form of government effect a substantial and beneficial change in the condition of the working classes? Though this question has been often answered before, further explanation may not be out of order, at a time when Socialism is regarded with deadly aversion by capitalists who pay liberally to have it reviled and misrepresented. Nor ought it to be forgotten that a thousand evil prophecies have been uttered against it, none of which have yet been fulfilled.

Socialism may be broadly defined as a system of human government by which the distinction between labor and capital is abolished, and the bounty which the Creator intended for all is divided among all. Its purpose is, also, to do away with the prevailing system of capitalism which gorges the few and condemns the many to rags and starvation.

A western farmer asked me, a few weeks ago, if Socialism would enable him to make improvements on his farm without the immediate liability of having his rent raised. He is, now, a tenant at will of an Irish landlord, who collects rack-rents over an area of seventy thousand acres.

Socialism, I answered, is peculiarly adapted to the needs of all farmers, especially those who pay rent to absentee landlords. In the first place, your rent would amount to a mere fractional part of what you pay to the present owner. In the next place, all tariffs would be abolished, as well as extortionate freight charges. You would, further, be rid of the horde of monopolists, robbers and deadbeats that are now riding upon the back of industry.

Under the regime of Socialism your farming implements, clothing, and all other commodities would be purchasable at cost prices. Even the old feudal system is preferable to the modern one, in which you pay four enormous profits on every manufactured article you consume. Finally, you would have no taxes to pay; for the people, collectively owning every acre of land in the country, the rent therefrom would be amply sufficient to defray all the expenses of running the government.

After listening attentively to these statements the farmer frankly avowed that my arguments had made him a convert to Socialism. He further announced his intention of casting his ballot for Eugene V. Debs, whose plain title of "comrade" had, in his eyes, a more majestic sound than the proudest distinction which kings or potentates could confer.

Let us, now, pass from the prairies to a three-room tenement in one of the eastern states. Here, is an unusually intelligent artisan, whose face is an emblem of care and resignation. His wife and three children look as unhealthy as if they had come out of their graves. He knew, absolutely, nothing about Socialism, owing mainly to the political spy-system practiced in the factory in which he was employed. "Any man," he said, "who ventured to express any radical views on political economy was pretty sure of losing his job."

Heaving a deep sigh, he informed me that it was only by the strictest economy and self-denial that he and his wife, for ten tiresome years, had been enabled to exist. Would Socialism, he inquired, enable him to make ends meet and ease the burdens which rendered life intolerable.

"Most certainly it would," I replied. "Its leading features—are sufficiently plain. Socialism means the establishment of a free self-governing type of industry of the people, by the people, and for the people. The methods of production, distribution and exchange would be carried on by free associated workers. The entire surplus of production, which now falls to the capitalist, would be fairly divided among the operatives, thereby securing to each the full product of his labor."

Another important point should be clearly understood: it is, that a socialistic government would provide the working classes with the necessities of life at cost prices.

The sycophants and hirelings of capitalism tell you that Socialism is an impracticable dream, impossible to realize. But it is impossible for audacious lying to prevail against facts. It is worthy of notice that the elite of the workingmen, of probably, the best educated and most thoughtful nation in the world, have gone over to Socialism. In 1890 the Social Democracy polled 1,420,000 votes, and furnish the large contingent of forty-eight members to the German Reichstag.

Look again at London! Socialism, under the leadership of the famous John Burns, has achieved economic triumphs that are wonderful. The great metropolis, roused into activity by the resolute and menacing attitude of Socialism, provides municipal lodging houses, winter swimming baths, lavatories, laundries, bakeries, electric lights, savings banks and scores of other public utilities, which tend to relieve the cares and burdens of the laboring classes.

All these are examples of practical Socialism, through which classes will cease to exist. Its advent, in the near future, is as inevitable as the rising of tomorrow's sun.

THE SLAUGHTER OF THE INNOCENT

By W. W. Passage.

The following is a local news item copied from the February 28, 1900, issue of one of the great New York dailies:

"Thirty-eight dead babies in the morgue were mute evidence that yesterday was the coldest day of the winter. One of them, two days old, found in front of No. 247 West Forty-sixth street, had been actually frozen to death. It was wrapped only in a thin piece of muslin. The other bodies were 'unclaimed' dead, their parents being too poor to bury them."

What awful significance has this when we stop to consider that it is the record for but one day, and one city of many! Thirty-eight innocent babes, starved, frozen or perished from lack of medical attention; consigned to unnamed and unknown graves, in a city which boasts of scores of millionaires!

We read with feelings of horror of the ancient custom of the mother standing on the banks of the River Ganges, and, impelled by religious superstition, casting her babe into the dark water, where ferocious crocodiles waited to crush out the young life into which was concentrated that sacred maternal love of offspring, that instinctive, burning passion so intense, both in mankind and the lower animals, that no physical or material sacrifice is great enough to prevent its gratification.

But what difference whether the babe be torn from its mother's loving heart to satisfy the wrath or caprice of a heathen god or in obedience to the equally cruel demands of economic necessity—the god of commerce? Just this, and only this: The former was the ignorant act of a fanatical, barbaric social order; the latter is the conscious neglect of a more barbaric—because conscious—social order, which its chartering sponsors call "Christian civilization."

Merciful God, what a hideous caricature of Christianity! What a burlesque upon civilization! Suppose the parents of these babes were dissipated and improvident, or even worse. Has organized society no concern that the penalty falls upon their helpless offspring? Has the cancer of commercialism so eaten out the soul of our people that they have no pity, no sentiment, no strong arm of justice and no courage to stretch it forth in protection of these innocent babes and defiantly tax down to the last sou, if necessary, the surplus of those who spend $50 each for caskets in which to bury pet dogs?

If the injunction "Go sell what thou hast and give to the poor" does not mean at least that so long as anybody has a surplus none should suffer from lack of the necessities of life, then the incident recorded in the scriptures has no meaning at all, and better be omitted from the religious ceremonies of those who, blinded by party idolatry or personal gain, are ever conspiring to prevent the economic emancipation of mankind. Let them have an expurgated edition of the bible, as well as of other great books, so that they may no longer claim the genuine edition as the source of their grotesque inspiration, and thus bring it into disrepute.

SAVE THE PARTY

To all loyal members of the S. D. P.: "Save the Party," should be the watchword from now on. We are passing through an ordeal that tries men and shows the stuff they are made of. Those who profess to view the perjury of the S. L. P. representatives as of little consequence must not forget that it was those promises that made it possible for the Indianapolis convention to continue its negotiations for unification after the revolt of Thursday night and the apparent splitting of the party into two factions. The assurances of the S. L. P. members was so solemnly given that our mistrust, born of long years of bitter experience, was allayed and the convention resumed Friday morning, joyous in the confidence that the party name would not be placed in jeopardy in the arranging of a union of forces. The real intentions of the S. L. P. was revealed, however, when the conference committee began its sessions.

The report of the meeting of the New York conference given readers of The Herald by Comrade Haile passed over the finale of the first session of the joint committee on conference. This is to be regretted, as our members were entitled to know just what took place there, and more especially as the episode I allude to was the one dramatic event of the entire conference—the nub, in fact, of the whole subsequent controversy. It unmasked the S. L. P. members and exposed their real ulterior motives in "coming courting" to their former hated rival, the S. D. P. I feel justified, therefore, in reviewing that portion of the proceedings, but will try to be as brief as possible.

The feeling ran high at Indianapolis when the minority report on unification was passed, and only a spark was needed to cause an explosion. The spark was furnished by Comrade Carey, who made no secret of his desire for a new party. When, after Debs had declined, he moved to indorse both the nominees of the S. L. P. there was a revolt such as is seldom witnessed in a national convention. Only a motion to adjourn finally saved the convention from breaking up in a riot. To all intents and purposes the party had split in twain and instead of three Socialist parties it looked very much as if there would from thenceforth be four. There was dejection on all faces, and one or two delegates even left for their homes feeling that they had actually witnessed the dissolution of the party that had been their pride and hope. That evening various attempts were made to harmonize the warring elements. One of the results of this distressing state of things was the final, reluctant consent of Eugene V. Debs to accept a presidential nomination in order that the party might be saved. Another was the pledge given by the S. L. P. representatives, Harriman, Hilquit and Hayes, to agree to a unification of the parties under the name, Social Democratic Party. They saw that there was no other way out, that if they did not yield this point that the plan for union would come to a stop, as the S. D. P. would itself divide into factions. This action of the S. L. P. members made it possible for the factions in our convention to come together again, and this, and Comrade Debs' acceptance of the presidential nomination made the final day's session a veritable love feast. A committee of nine on unification was named and so great was the trust in the assurances of the S. L. P. delegates that the party name would not be placed in jeopardy that the minority report was left undisturbed, it being felt that the intent of the convention was so clear and undisputed that no danger could be looked for from that source. When we of the committee of nine held a session after the convention was over, Hilquit of New York asked that the regular joint session of the two party committees be held in New York two weeks from that date. He wanted the deliberations held in his city, he said, because it was the head center of his party and it would thus be the easier to reconcile his people to the understanding about the name. He wanted the date fixed as he requested because he felt that two weeks' work would be sufficient to prepare his people for the name. One objection that we of the west (Hoehn excepted) had to the date asked for was that there was strong probability that Comrade Berger (who had received the highest number of votes when our committee was chosen) would be unable to attend, owing to the fact that he expected an increase in his family at about that date. Upon learning this, the S. L. P. members insisted the more, and enough of our committee thoughtlessly walked into the snare to give the proposition enough votes to carry it. I also wished for another date, as it would take me away from the Milwaukee campaign, which I had to desert already to be present at the convention in Indianapolis. The conference of the two committees, as you know, convened in New York, Sunday morning, two weeks later. After some preliminaries had been gone through, I was distressed to find that instead of legislating for the best interests of a future movement, a determination to dicker for partisan advantage, especially on the part of the S. L. P. members, began to manifest itself, and I finally arose and urged that we drop all idea of party interests and direct all our efforts at doing the things that were wisest for the future. I think most of our committee felt the same as I did, but it soon became manifest that the S. L. P.'s did not. To my astonishment Benham led off with a long written speech on the subject of party name, in which he attacked the name, Social Democratic Party, in a pettifogging way. Some of the arguments were laughable, others were discreditable as coming from an avowed Socialist. It thus became evident that the S. L. P. intended to make the name an issue after all, and I was naturally indignant that our people should have been thus lured into our opponent's territory under false pretenses. I wondered what attitude Hilquit, Harriman and Hayes would take, and resolved that if they went back on their pledges that I would urge the withdrawal of our committee. When Benham had finished, Hilquit followed in his turn with an indorsement of Benham's arguments (the paper of Benham's had been prepared the night before, it appears, in a caucus held by the S. L. P. people. Our people held none, not supposing that we were there for sharp party bargainings). Later, Harriman, in a cautiously worded speech, also proved recreant to his pledges. As the floor had to be spoken for in advance, I then said that I wished to speak on the subject, but that I first wished to hear what Committeeman Hayes had to say (he having been loudest in his promises to work for the name, Social Democratic party). A moment later Hayes took up his hat and slipped quietly out of the hall, and he did not return during the balance of the session. It had now become late, and we had practically wasted a day in arguing over the name matter, when it had been understood that it was not to be subject for discussion. I therefore moved that the spectators, who almost crowded the hall to suffocation, be asked to retire, as I had a matter I wished to bring forward, that for the sake of the S. L. P. members I preferred to have discussed in the presence of the committee only. I assured the spectators that they would know all that took place in proper time, as the committee was having shorthand notes taken of the entire proceedings. When the crowd had retired I took the floor and reviewed the meeting at Indianapolis and the reasons urged for holding the conference in New York, charging bad faith and broken pledges. A hot debate ensued, Harriman and Hilquit making the excuses for their conduct already known to you. Finally, as it was already well into the evening, an adjournment had to be taken, as the hall was rented for another purpose. I supposed that the majority of our committee would refuse to go on with the conference because of the trick played upon us, but at a caucus we held later in the evening I found that this was not to be expected. One or two of the members did not seem to grasp the true significance of the situation, and Comrades Haile and Stedman, and also Lonergan, felt practically as I did, but wanted to go on with the conference and thus get the full measure of the S. L. P. game. Alas! they got it in full and heaping measure! They had the privilege of seeing the plan adroitly laid to take the movement as far away as possible from the environment in which it had grown to lusty strength, the headquarters tucked away in a corner in easy reach of New York, the Social Democratic Herald throttled, and the name wiped off the slate, etc., etc.

I told them in our caucus that they would be tricked at every point, and that the conference had turned out to be a battle of wits instead of a sober-minded meeting in the true interests of the Socialist movement. If they went ahead they must not count on me. I lay awake a good share of the night thinking the situation over, and in the morning announced my decision to have nothing more to do with the conference. I was not able to persuade the others to take a like stand, however, but I predicted to them just about what the outcome proved to be.

So much for the unreported part of the conference. Now to other matters. Messrs. Harriman and Hilquit in their joint letter say I was satisfied with their explanation as to their broken promises. This is not true, and I am forced to say that they knew it was not when they wrote it. Benham says Hayes did not attack the name S. D. P. But that was not Hayes' offense. Instead of supporting the name vigorously, as he promised, he printed a few perfunctory lines in his paper, and at the conference ran away when specially called on to express himself on the subject. His excuse is that he had to speak at certain meetings. What sort of an excuse is this? Harriman and Hilquit conveniently quote from the stenographic report of the conference. Why has that stenographic report been withheld from the members of both parties? The S. L. P. has the report, the stenographer being employed in Hilquit's office. Are there things in it (such, for instance, as the rabid speeches of Sieverman and Stone) that they wish to suppress?

Comrade Butcher says Comrade Berger violated a great trust by not attending the conference, and that he should have notified the committee that he could not be present, so some one could be secured in his stead. This sounds well from a man whose vote helped make it impossible for Berger to be present. The fact is that Comrade Berger did not give up hope of being present until the committee was actually in session. I did not know when I left Milwaukee whether or not he might not be able to follow on a later train. It all depended on how matters went in his household. I told Butcher so when I reached New York. Perhaps he has forgotten.

The New York conference gave the lie to all the protestations of good and disinterested intentions made to us by the representatives of the S. L. P. and should put us on our guard in all future dealings with that party. We have in our keeping the integrity of the Social Democratic movement, and we must not undervalue the trust. The only way to an united Socialist movement in this country is through the steady, onward, self-respecting advance of the Social Democratic Party. These men who are so friendly and innocent now, that union will save their party from dissolution, were members and fellow-workers with our detractors, yet never raised a finger in protest. Why? Because at least some of them were themselves engaged in throwing mud at us. Did any one hear a protest from Job. Harriman, Moritz Hilquit? Or from Sieverman, Malkiel, LaMonte, Stone or Matchett? Only recently the last named referred to us as "a semi-socialistic party!" Harriman, until only recently, gave the attacks on us the sanction of his silence. He now asks us to believe that the S. L. P. on July 10 last put an end to the abuse of our party; but that is not true. "We put the man who was doing such work out of the party last July," he says (and this is still further untrue, as DeLeon was not put out of the party—the party split into two factions), "and repudiated his actions and methods." Is that true, Mr. Harriman? Let us see. Among those having seats of honor on the stage at the "Unification" meeting at Cooper Union shortly after the New York conference was Malkiel (my sentimental friend Butcher will probably insist that it is "Comrade" Malkiel). Now I want to quote briefly from an article of Malkiel's in the anti-DeLeon People of quite recent date, in which he calls the Social Democratic Party a middle-class party, made up of "Capitalist politicians out of a job, adventurers, political tricksters, working-men both honest and dishonest, etc." Debs, he says, was used as a cloak to get workingmen into the party, and then the fellow continues, "I will not refer to Debs or his personality, although much can be said which will throw a bright light upon subsequent events." Nor am I quoting the most miserable parts of his article, either. He speaks of our "unclean membership" and compares Debs with DeLeon!

The fact is that the split in the S. L. P. did not divide the sheep from the goats. It was a trial of strength for the mastery of the party machinery, and when the big fight was over the conduct of each faction showed how much alike they were. DeLeon called the Volkszeitung people "kangaroos," and the Volkszeitung people called the DeLeonites "skunks." And even though the Volkszeitung people were on their frenzy that is now demanding union at any cost (and yet surprising, considering the prominence of the persons who descend to it), is found in the statement issued by the majority of the conference committee. It holds that the manifesto of the national board was a usurpation and then gives out this great scintillation of statesmanship: "And though no other reason existed, THIS ONE alone justifies the members of the S. D. P. in voting yes on the question of union."

Think of it! Upon such a petty reason as this men like Butcher, Lonergan, Hoehn, Carey and Chase would hang the fate of the Social Democratic Party.

As I write I find that the S. L. P. is rushing in a vote of its members on the report of the majority of the conference. See the game and the fairness of it! This shuts off a vote on a possible minority report and is also calculated to impress some of our emotional members of the great desire of the S. L. P. for union. We have in our midst men who think more of the S. L. P. than they do of their own party, and these will doubtless see nothing unfair in this conduct of the other side. But even if the plan for unification falls through, the S. L. P. will have won any way! It will have succeeded in bringing dissension into the ranks of its rival, and this will give it a chance for a little longer life than it could have otherwise expected. It will have "mussed us up" in the midst of a presidential year, and just at a time when we were ready to sweep everything before us. The S. L. P. is a bird of ill-omen. It has brought trouble to everything it has come in contact with. It remains to be seen how seriously we shall suffer from our brief experience.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

ATTITUDE TOWARD TRADES UNIONS

In accordance with our declaration of principles we declare that the trades union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. We recommend to the members of the Social Democratic party the following general rules:

First—Join the union of your respective trade.

Second—Assist in building up and strengthening the trade union movement.

Third—Support the union labels of all crafts.

Fourth—Educate your fellow-unionists on the question of Socialism and the labor movement, on economic and political lines.

Fifth—It shall be your duty to work for the unity of the labor movement, thereby recognizing the fact that the emancipation of the working class can only be achieved by the united efforts of this class.

Sixth—Educate the members of the unions in the principles of Socialism and induce them, individually, to affiliate with the Social Democratic party.

Seventh—Trades unions are by historical necessity organized on neutral grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned. The trades union is the arena where all wage-workers may be brought together for joint action to resist the encroachments of capitalism on the economic field and to participate in the class struggle of the proletariat which will finally develop into the political alignment of the forces of labor in the struggle for proletarian emancipation.

CHICAGO, ILL., U.S.A., SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1900.

Whole No. 98.

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION A FULL TICKET NOMINATED

Seventy-five delegates representing the branches of the Social Democratic party of Illinois met in convention at 10 o'clock last Sunday morning, May 13, at Arena hall, 594 E. 63d street, Chicago, and nominated the following state ticket:

For Governor—James Beattie, Spring Valley, Ill.
For Lieutenant Governor—Al Pierson, Jacksonville, Ill.
For Secretary of State—Thomas G. Kerwin, Chicago.
For State Treasurer—Jacob Winnep, Chicago.

For Auditor of Public Accounts—James Wright, Chicago.
For Attorney General—Charles H. Soelke, Chicago.
For Trustees of State University—Mrs. Irene Stedman, Miss Ellen Edwards, F. J. Hlavacek.

The convention was called to order by Comrade Svoboda who read the call and made remarks appropriate to the occasion.

Comrade Philip Brown was elected temporary chairman and Comrade R. H. Johnson temporary secretary.

The following committees were then elected:

Rules—Edwards, Winnep, Bruell.
Credentials—Hlavacek, Ambroz, McSweeney, Miss Corinne Brown and Frelich.

Permanent Organization—Pierson, Bruell, Beattie, Ambroz, Hlavacek, Benson, Roderus, Winnep, Horgan.

After a brief recess the committee on rules reported. The committee on credentials reported 157 comrades entitled to representation.

The temporary chairman was made permanent and owing to the unavoidable absence of Temporary Secretary Johnson, Comrade James Wright was elected permanent secretary.

The following committee on platform was then elected: Mrs. Corinne Brown, Edwards, Winnep, Cox, McSweeney.

A recess was then taken for lunch. When the business of the convention was resumed, Comrade Corinne Brown, for the committee on platform, reported as follows:

The Platform

The Social Democratic party of the state of Illinois, in convention assembled, reaffirms the national platform adopted at Indianapolis, and declares its uncompromising adherence to the principles of International Socialism.

We demand that a law be passed enabling all municipal corporations to own and operate all such municipal industries as the supplying of light, heat, street railways and the transmission of information to the people at cost, and that if necessary the constitution be amended to enable such municipalities to raise money for the purpose.

We advocate public control and ownership of the liquor traffic.

We demand the abolition of the contract system in public works and the direct employment of labor by the state and municipality.

We demand that convicts in the various penal institutions be employed co-operatively in diversified industries for their own benefit and support and that none of their products be put upon the market.

We demand the extension of the state factory law to include the following provisions:

- The enactment of an educational section which shall prohibit the employment of children under 16 who can not read and write simple sentences in English.
- The establishment of the eight-hour day for all minors.
- Adequate safe-guarding of all dangerous machinery.
- A report by employers to the state factory department of all accidents within twenty-four hours.

We demand the enforcement of that provision of the State Constitution which declares that adequate school facilities should be furnished all children between the ages of 6 and 21. School facilities include sufficient school room, normal trained teachers, free school books, food, clothing and shelter whenever necessary.

The nomination of candidates for the state ticket being in order, Comrade Jesse Cox presented the name of Comrade James Beattie, of Spring Valley, for governor. The nomination was received by the convention with rounds of applause and approved by acclamation.

Comrade Beattie is one of the most devoted members of the party in the state. Wherever known his reputation is that of a tireless worker in the interest of his class, honest, trustworthy and level-headed. Comrade Beattie holds the position of organizer for the United Mine Workers of Illinois, is a practical miner and has been identified with all the struggles of the miners in this state for years.

Comrade Al Pierson was nominated by acclamation for lieutenant governor. Comrade Thos. G. Kirwin was the unanimous choice of the convention for secretary of state.

For auditor of public accounts Comrade James Wright received a unanimous vote.

The convention's choice for attorney general was Comrade Chas. H. Soelke, who was nominated by acclamation.

Comrade Jacob Winnep received the unanimous vote of the delegates for state treasurer.

For trustees of the State University the following were chosen: Mrs. Irene Stedman, Miss Ellen Edwards and F. J. Hlavacek.

The following committee was then elected to select twenty-four presidential electors: Cox, Edwards, Svoboda.

Comrade Stedman then introduced the following resolution, which was adopted unanimously:

"Whereas, Mutual overtures have been made by the Social Democratic party and the Socialist Labor party looking toward the organic union of the two organizations; and whereas, the work and methods to perfect said organic union have not met with the approval of a large number of the different parties; and whereas, it is desirable to secure united and consolidated action in the impending campaign. Therefore, be it Resolved, by the Social Democratic party assembled in their state convention, that they believe in political union in the state of Illinois, and therefore, and to this end, appoint a committee of seven, who shall have power to retire candidates from the state ticket of the Social Democratic party and substitute candidates of the Socialist Labor party therefore, provided there is a political union on national candidates."

Comrade R. H. Johnson was appointed as a committee of one representing the convention to convey the resolution to the state committee of the Socialist Labor party.

The chair appointed the following committee to carry out the instructions of the foregoing resolution: Corinne Brown, W. C. Horgan, R. H. Johnson, F. Svoboda, Seymour Stedman, Jas. Wright and Frank Roderus.

The following comrades to constitute the state campaign committee were then elected: Jos. Finn, F. Svoboda, Jacob Winnep, E. Anderson, S. Stedman, Philip Brown, Ellen Edwards, W. C. Horgan, H. H. Babka.

After a short address by Comrade McSweeney the convention adjourned, all the delegates being well satisfied with the work done.

Pennsylvania population increased 22.77 per cent, but school enrollment only 1.59 per cent.

There is enough and to spare for all in this country. The adult male labor properly organized could alone produce all the necessities and luxuries needed by working five hours a day. If justice ruled this would be the case, but Profit, not Justice, rules, and we go on stunting the moral and physical development of children and forcing women into toil amid surroundings that must inevitably produce a race of physical and moral degenerates. The economic system is responsible, but an economic system is only the creature of men, who have the power to create another if they will, and the burden of responsibility must be shared by every man who, by his vote, indorses men and policies that make such crimes against society and civilization possible.—From an address by Charles Dobbs, Louisville.

The mason thinks of his trowel,
The shoemaker thinks of his awl,
The carpenter thinks of his level,
The woodman thinks of his maul;
But truth, which is more important,
Gets hardly a thought at all.

The merchant thinks of his ledger,
The lawyer thinks of his plea,
The doctor thinks of his patient,
The admiral thinks of the sea;
Do you think of truth and justice,
Of the right which makes men free?

DEBS INTERVIEWED ON THE SOCIAL EVOLUTION

Eugene V. Debs, Social Democratic party candidate for president, in a recent interview said:

"The nomination came unexpectedly and unsought. I have all my life had my face set resolutely against officeholding and I attended the convention of the party, the first national convention it has ever had, as I have attended the conventions of other parties, strongly opposed to the use of my name for any office.

"The convention of the Social Democratic party was the only political convention that has ever met in which there was not a candidate and not a lobbyist in the interest of any candidate. This was in accord with the principles of the party, however, because when it succeeds to power there will be no $50,000 office.

"The platform of the Social Democratic party in a nutshell is the collective ownership by the people of all the means of wealth production and distribution. It aims at industrial democracy just as we now have political democracy. That is, as we have political democracy theoretically; practically one man becomes the master of 10,000 because one man owns the means upon which 10,000 depend for employment.

"To inaugurate genuine democracy we must democratize industry as our fathers democratized politics a century and a half ago. This will result in the co-operative commonwealth, in which organized society will operate all industry in the interest of all the people. The declaration of independence will then have become a realized fact.

"The new social order is not Utopian, but scientific. It is not an ideal social system to which people are expected to adapt themselves, but it is a system evolving from the present one, which it will succeed in obedience to the laws of social evolution. Co-operation of society is the next stage in the economic development, and although not yet in existence a scientific analysis of present conditions proves that it is bound to come in the natural course of events. The trust is the forerunner of the social revolution. It represents the social principles of co-operative production, to which will be added the social principle of co-operative distribution. This means industrial co-operation as the basis of human brotherhood. The gigantic scale upon which all production and distribution is carried forward marks all these agencies for collective ownership in the interests of all the people. Rent, interest and profit will disappear. Wealth is not for the enrichment of one and the poverty and degradation of many.

"I believe the time is ripe for a party of this character. New issues, more vital than any that have ever been before the people, are crystallizing. As the lines between the laboring class and the capitalists become more sharply drawn and the great middle class is eliminated, our party will become larger and more powerful, and it must eventually succeed to power. When the time comes the wealth producing power of the country will be transferred to collective hands naturally and easily. The change will come by evolution."

Social Democracy and War

Emile Zola, in a striking article in the North American Review, expresses the belief that sooner or later war will have become a thing of the past. The chief reason for its disappearance, in his opinion, is that it will have become useless. "When speaking thus," he says, "I have in mind the democratic movement, the great Socialist movement, which, within the last hundred years, has made such advancement. In my way of thinking the real human struggle is no longer on the field of battle, but on that of labor; in industry, in agriculture, in fact in every human effort for production and prosperity." In the future state of society he is convinced that war will be unheard of, because "the reorganization of labor will everywhere bring greater solidarity and bind the different nations together either by arbitration or some other means of which we have as yet no conception. War cannot be a factor in this future state which the struggles of a closing century will link to the century about to dawn. It will be doomed to disappear, for it will be incompatible with the new condition of things."

RECALL OF REPRESENTATIVES THE BROCKTON INCIDENT

Recent occurrences in Massachusetts have led many of our members to ask "What is the use of having candidates for office sign a resignation? It has proved to be only an empty form. Why keep it up?"

It is true that the experience of Socialists in this country with the imperative mandate has been very unsatisfactory, yet it is a principle which it would not be well to abandon. Instead of dropping it, would it not be better to seek some way of making it effective? Surely it is possible to devise some new plan, or to so improve upon the present one, that a Socialist organization shall have control of those of its members whom it elects to office. The principle involved is that an elected candidate represents not himself, but his constituency, and is bound to obey the instructions of that constituency. The claim is made by opponents of Socialism that our application of this principle is unjust, as the branch does not by any means comprise the people whose votes have elected the candidate. True, but the branch or the organization within the particular district nominates the candidate and works for his election, arranges meetings, puts out literature, canvasses the district, and raises the money for all these expenses; but above all, the organization is responsible for and is the cause of his election because it represents the principles of Socialism, which principles, and not the individual candidate, triumph in the election. Social Democrats do not work for their candidates because they happen to be popular men, but because they embody the principles of their party. Accordingly, the candidate, before he is elected, pledges himself, in a written resignation, to resign from office if the party which elected him finds that he has not proved true to the trust it reposes in him.

In agitation meetings the question is often asked by well-meaning people seeking information: "What guaranty have we that Socialists, if elected, will not be just as bad as the other party politicians?" and we have always triumphantly answered them, "Our candidates are elected subject to recall. They sign their resignation before they are elected, and we can recall them at any time if they don't do what is right." But the wind has been taken out of our sails. On the first experiment, the imperative mandate has proved a failure. The right of recall remains with us; but, like many other of our rights, it cannot be exercised. We may call and recall all we like, but our representatives do not and need not respond. It is time for us to find out where we are at in regard to this important principle. If our candidates can do whatever they please as soon as they are elected, just the same as the capitalist politicians, we ought to so understand.

The Brockton case, which occurred within the past month, fully demonstrated the futility of the imperative mandate as a working principle at the present time. In the case of Alderman Perry, our Brockton comrades had a difficult and delicate problem to deal with, but they dealt with it like true Social Democrats. They met the issue squarely, and did their duty nobly. Perry, one of their elected aldermen, had been explicitly instructed by his branch to vote against the giving away of a certain public franchise, and had deliberately voted for it. The branch promptly tried his case, found him guilty, and demanded that he should resign. They presented his signed resignation to the board of aldermen of Brockton for their acceptance; but the board, while for the most part sympathizing with the action of the Social Democrats, did not feel called upon to accept the resignation. Nothing was left for the branch to do but to expel Mr. Perry, which they promptly did. Mr. Perry continues to serve as alderman for the remainder of his term, but he in no way represents the S. D. P. nor any other party. He is disowned by his former comrades; and this, together with the ever-present consciousness of a trust betrayed, must be his punishment. It is probable, too, that he will find it rather difficult to get elected to office again upon any kind of a ticket. People will fight shy of him. A man who is a traitor to one party will be a traitor to another.

The papers, in commenting upon the event, said it was the only instance of the kind that had ever occurred in this country, but that is a mistake. The case which occurred in Haverhill in 1898, however, was not satisfactory as a test of the value of the imperative mandate, because the resignation was not presented to the governing body for acceptance. When James F. Carey, who had been elected to the common council by the Socialist Labor Party, left that party before the expiration of his term of office, the remainder of the S. L. P. section of which he had been a member, demanded his resignation; but they were powerless, inasmuch as the resignation which he had signed and filed with the section had mysteriously disappeared. The section had nothing to present to the city government of Haverhill in the shape of a written resignation. This case was therefore not a test of the effectiveness of this safeguard of the rights of the democracy. The Haverhill instance proved its inefficiency to control the individual elected, or even to hold him in the party which elects him; but no more. The Brockton instance demonstrates its uselessness when presented to a governing body for acceptance.

What, then, is the best course for us to pursue? Shall we drop as useless the custom of requiring candidates to sign resignations, until we can get the measure adopted as a law of the land? Or shall we seek to raise the standard of character and honor in our organization, so that we may thus have some hold upon the candidates elected? Shall we seek to inculcate in our members the principles of honor and justice and a sense of moral obligation, at the same time that we are trying to teach the principles of scientific socialism? The two are certainly not incompatible. On the contrary, one is necessary to supplement the other.

It is a question worth considering, comrades.

RISE OF SOCIAL DEMOCRACY ALARMS BOTH OLD PARTIES

The Indianapolis News has been taking a survey of the political field and sounds the following note of alarm:

"The unexpected growth of the Social Democracy in Indiana is giving the leaders of the two old parties considerable worry. They had not counted on the Social Democrats being a factor this time, but the results of a number of city elections last Tuesday has opened their eyes to what might happen if the new party continues to grow as it has grown since its national convention was held here a few weeks ago. It is said now that the Social Democracy leaders, a majority of whom live in the east, did not bring their convention here simply because the city is well located, but rather because they understood the conditions and felt that Indiana would be an excellent garden in which to plant their creed, on account of the state's thousands of organized laborers. The party has made a surprising showing in the gas belt in a short time, as is evident in the election of councilmen at Marion and Muncie and a large vote elsewhere.

"A politician who has just made a tour of a number of the gas belt cities, declares that they are becoming hotbeds of Social Democracy, and that new believers are added to the creed every day. Social Democracy workers are going quietly among the union men in some of the gas belt cities. It is understood that the new party is gaining more strength among the iron workers than with any other branch of labor, although there are many desertions from the two old parties among all of the unions. There is little chance of the Social Democracy's filling any of the important offices this year as the victories have been in local fights, but the leaders of each of the two old parties fear that it will deprive them of votes that will be necessary to their success.

"Some Democrats say they have less to fear than the Republicans, as a majority of men now voting with the Social Democrats were against Bryan in '96, and that if they were against him this time, but not with the Republicans, that their chances have really improved. The Republican leaders are not saying much on the question, but their anxiety not to have Eugene Debs indorsed by the middle-of-the-road Populists at Cincinnati, next week, is sufficient indication that they are ready to take any means to check the growth of the Social Democracy. The loss of a few thousand votes might seriously cripple the Republicans in a fight like the one they expect this year, and it is said that they are getting ready to put their best speakers and workers in the places where the new party is gaining strength at their expense."

Organized Labor Vote

"Mr. Debs and his friends who are helping him to organize the Social Democratic party are the only sensible leaders that organized labor has. Organized labor has been paving the air against both old parties from time immemorial and has catered to first one and then the other, only to be betrayed, and politically it is not to-day as distinctively a floating vote as the negro vote."—Economist, Evansville, Ind.

Grist for Capitalism's Mill

Not alone does the economic system which we permit to exist rob the home of its divinity, but practically raids the cradle for flesh and blood to feed the remorseless maw of the dragon of Profit. In 1890 there were, in round numbers, 5,000,000 children of school age prevented from attending school by the necessity for their labor as bread-winners or by poverty of parents unable to buy books or clothing for the little ones. Of the 14,371,893 reported as attending school many attended only part of the term and spent the rest of the year in toil. Mr. W. S. McClure has pointed out that in many sections, particularly the great manufacturing districts of the east, the school enrollment is not increasing in proportion to the population. New York state, for instance, with an increase of 18 per cent. in population, shows a gain of but 1.38 per cent. in school enrollment. In

FUSION CONTROVERSY AND THE HERALD

The Herald printed a total of 33 communications during the recent controversy precipitated by the failure of the S. L. P. delegates to make good their pledges when the conference committee met at New York. Of this total 14 were for union and 19 against.

The number of unpublished or "suppressed" communications received was 27; of these 16 were opposed and 11 favorable to union.

Of 25 communications favoring union, 14 were printed.

Of 35 communications opposing union, only 19 were printed.

The Herald printed more letters favoring union than it "suppressed"; it "suppressed" more letters opposed to union than it printed.

This statement is made because of the reckless perversion of facts over the signature of Morris Hillquit in the People of May 6, wherein he makes it appear that the Herald has "suppressed" all communications favorable to union with one exception. This is so manifestly unfair and reckless as a "summing up of the issues," which the communication purports to be, as to justify the strongest condemnation. However, let us have peace.

ONE "SPIRIT" MADE MANIFEST

Max Hayes, "proletarian" editor of the Cleveland Citizen, says in the last issue of that paper:

"The vote on amalgamation taken by the Social Democratic party is reported to have resulted in the defeat of unity by 1,213 to 939, and rumors not at all complimentary to the national officials are already beginning to fly about. We imagine that the degenerated scab-procuring boss, Dan DeLeon, dances with delight as he views the mess his imitators have made of it. It should be stated that the proletarian part of the S. D. P. is in no way responsible for this unfortunate outcome—at least not directly. The anti-unionists were marshaled by Berger, a school teacher and editor; Steedman, a lawyer; MacCartney, a preacher; Edwards, another editor; Cox, another lawyer; Miller, another editor; London, still another lawyer; Margaret Haile, a lachrymose woman, and one or two others—all so-called "academic Socialists," theorists who lack a proper understanding of the working class spirit, its historical significance or its mission. They controlled the machinery of the party and used their power as DeLeon did. Debs can leap into the breach and save union, and if he does not the proletarians of both parties will probably unite in a party of their own and leave the fake professors, contended school teachers and lawyers to themselves."

Comment is uncalled for, except that we might direct attention to the fact that Harriman is a lawyer and ex-preacher, Hillquit is a lawyer, Schlusser an editor, Feigenbaum an editor, Morgan a lawyer, Jonas an editor, Stone an editor, Sissman a lawyer, Benham an editor, Taft a lawyer, Lee an editor, and finally, not to continue such trivialities to too great a length, Max Hayes himself is an editor—and a good one.

Hoping the comrades will pardon the writer of this for being an editor, let us have peace.

EDITOR'S TIME SAVERS

M. J. H.—You can draw your own conclusions from the following facts, included in a dispatch sent out from Cleveland during the last week in March:

"The Jones men of this city have just taken action which fully concedes the claim made by the Union Reformers last fall, that the Jones movement was as much a political party as any other."

"They held a city convention and appointed a committee which nominated a municipal ticket, certified this ticket to the board of elections, and claimed a place on the official ballot on the basis of the law which gives that right to any political party which at the last preceding general election polled one per cent. of the total vote."

"This claim has been conceded by the board of elections; and so it is both claimed by the Jones men and admitted by the election authorities that the

Jones movement last fall was a political party, and that the only difference between it and any other new party was in the name, and in the fact that the platform was adopted by one man instead of several."

NOTES AND COMMENT

The "Fair," which claims to be Chicago's oldest department store, employs 3,000 people and 250 horses. The horses are fine looking animals, well taken care of and are a credit to the establishment. The other employees, not being owned in the same way, must shift for themselves, and most of them shift to the poorest parts of the city. Eighty-six wagons deliver 3,500,000 packages during 1899, or nearly 1,200 packages per employee, not counting the horses. Many more millions of packages were carried off by customers. This business, now incorporated with $1,000,000 capital, was started 25 years ago with $1,000 and has been built up by the citizens of Chicago. The manager would probably be a first-class director of the same store owned by the citizens of Chicago.

The state convention of the Social Democratic party held last Sunday was a harmonious gathering of Socialists interested in doing what is practical and best for the cause in this great state. The ticket nominated is worthy of the support of Socialists, but not one will be found on it to obstruct negotiations with the Socialist Labor party for a perfect co-operation in the political campaign with any personal claims. The resolution adopted by the convention is an expression of Illinois Social Democrats, intended by them to be carried out in a spirit of fairness, and we hope will be so regarded by the S. L. P. state committee. Let the campaign begin at once.

While in New York last week Comrade Debs was invited to meet informally with some of the members of the two parties and they informed him that they had decided upon calling a meeting of the members and the national candidates. Upon returning to Chicago Comrade Debs reported the matter to our Chicago and Milwaukee members and they agreed in the interest of the cause to attend said proposed meeting, asking only that the date be postponed a few days to allow sufficient time to enable them to arrange their affairs so as to make the trip.

Roosevelt will consent to run for vice-president provided McKinley will support him in 1904 for president. This is what the high-minded and strenuous patriot says to McKinley:

"If I consent to go on the ticket with you will you use your influence and get for me the influence of the Republican leaders to make me your successor?"

And this sort of thing is called government by the people!

The San Francisco Call says if it should prove true, as political experts estimate, that Debs receives a million votes for the presidency, "the Bryan vote will be about as small a force as ever made a movement in national politics, for if the cranks desert him his following will be weak indeed."

We have begun to initiate the Cubans into the glorious art of self-government, according to the ideas of "free" America, with a postoffice scandal and steal of half a million dollars! Great is self-government! Great is hypocrisy! Hurrah for McKinley and Hannaism!

Comrade Eugene Dietzgen comes to the support of the campaign fund with a draft for $100, received this week from Germany, where our comrade is sojourning. Comrade Dietzgen will represent the S. D. P. at the international congress in September.

The Social Democratic party appeals to the humanity and sense of justice in the people. Its program is as broad as the need for social change is great and offers the logical and only solution of the problems of labor and society.

The type in a letter by Comrade Gordon on the unity matter made him say "Maily made the agreement" as to the name. The sentence should have read "argument" instead of "agreement."

Neeley, the Cuban postoffice defaulter, was appointed on the recommendation of Fairbanks. Fairbanks? Seems as if we had heard that name before.

REPUDIATION OF THE REFERENDUM

The Russian peasants live together in a sort of village communities called "mirs," which have certain legislative and judicial powers. The Russians have a proverb, "The mir is the great man," meaning that the united wisdom of the community is above the wisdom of any individual, and that its voice must be obeyed.

This is the true Socialistic spirit, for the will of the majority is the only basis on which the co-operative commonwealth can rest. Let us imagine it once fairly established and in good running order. Nevertheless differences of opinion will continually arise, as they always must where men are associated together. There will be a variety of theories on the best manner of conducting the affairs of society and on a thousand economical questions of greater or lesser importance. Unless this variance of opinion is united with a deep respect for the opinion of the majority, the co-operative commonwealth will be in danger of dissolution at every step.

The Socialists of all countries have therefore acted wisely when they incorporated the referendum as one of the demands of their platforms, and in most cases adopted it in their own party government. It is only by years of such self-government that men are educated into that habit of willing acquiescence to the wishes of the many which is absolutely necessary to the establishment of the Socialist system.

To-day we have an opportunity to take one step forward in the acquirement of this habit. The majority of our party has decided by vote that union with the S. L. P. is not desirable at the present time on the terms proposed. Perhaps there are some places where such a union might have had a beneficial effect on the local movement. But our people in many towns have taken this question into consideration and it is decided that the interests of the party, taken as a whole throughout the country, would be hindered rather than helped by the proposed union. Clearly then it is the duty of single towns to forego their local interests and consider only the good of the party as a national movement—a movement which is designed to free the entire country and not any separate part of it.

There are wise and good men who have advocated union at this time; but is any one of us so overcharged with self esteem that he can imagine his own judgment to be superior to the united judgment of his party? Can any true Socialist acknowledge the legality of a referendum by voting upon it and afterwards repudiate it when it does not turn out to suit his own wishes? Can any Social Democrat claim that this is an honorable course? Surely not. Surely we do not need to go to the peasants of despotic Russia for lessons in Democracy.

For those who sincerely believe that the majority has erred by rejecting the proposed union, here is an excellent opportunity to set us all an example in self control. By their cheerful acquiescence in the will of the majority they will prove that they are not Individualists, but Socialists, and they will take our party a long step forward on the road that leads to the co-operative commonwealth.

FREEDOM THROUGH SOCIALISM

(By Imogene C. Fales.)

The Socialist movement makes a new issue in the public arena and a new departure in the theory of government. It is an effort for the betterment of the people, the nation and the race. Its aim is the abolition of industrial slavery, to tear down the fabric of a soul destroying wage system and to erect in its place a social structure based upon co-operative effort and mutual helpfulness.

It is an organized effort to apply reason to social problems and to substitute for what is called the "Natural Law of Struggles" the higher law of love.

The movement has its birth in the necessities of the times; it is a determined expression of the people against the inhumanities and barbarities of civilization.

The time has come when the industrial system with its terrible inequalities that breed increasing crime in the midst of increasing intelligence must be changed and a new social system born out of a higher conception of life and expressing the higher qualities of humanity must take the place of the present order.

It needs no Paul Revere, with his midnight ride, to sweep the country and awake the sleeping people with the ringing cry that the enemy is upon us. We know it. We know that the insatiable greed for gold, the murderous strife of competition, has at last produced a social monster, a mechanism of destruction, called Monopoly.

We know that the deadly power that has stealthily worked since the Civil War to obtain control of judicial, federal and state legislation has at last openly massed its forces in one supreme effort for the absolute mastery of the republic.

The hour of conflict is upon us and we must struggle for our liberties if we wish to possess them.

Already the course of the nation is unmistakably towards imperialism.

The times in which we live are big with fate. Every one can see that we have reached a social crisis; that we are on the eve of momentous changes—either for weal or woe; that there is a war of conflicting ideas and principles going on, a conflict between good and evil being waged. That the old condition of things is broken up never to return, and that out of this war of ideas there will develop one of two things—either a system of slavery, founded on the aristocracy of money, that will ring the death knell of civilization; or else the overthrow of monopoly and the system that breeds it and the elevation of the race onto a higher plane of being. We believe it to be the latter. Under the banner of Socialism the battle for freedom is to be fought.

WHAT IS LABOR'S SHARE IN PRODUCTION

The question of "What is labor's share in production?" is one that is of greatest importance to the working class, the analysis of which will reveal the fact that the working class is forced into a recognition of that bare fact, that labor's share is becoming less and less each year.

A comparative study of the statistics of this country will show how great labor's share in the product has been and what it now is. Although the amount of wealth is constantly increasing, as will be seen from the following, taken from the statistics compiled by the government, it will also be seen how rapidly labor's share is decreasing:

In 1850 the wealth of the nation was $8,000,000,000. The producers' share was 62½ per cent; non-producers' share 37½ per cent.

In 1860 the wealth increased to $16,000,000,000. The producers' share fell to 43¾ per cent; non-producers' increased to 56¼ per cent.

In 1870 the wealth was $30,000,000,000. Producers' share was 32-2-3 per cent; non-producers' share, 67-1-3 per cent.

In 1880 the wealth increased to $48,000,000,000. The producers' share went down to 24 per cent, while the non-producers' share increased to 76 per cent.

In 1890 the wealth was further increased to $61,000,000,000. The producers' share fell to 17 per cent; the non-producers' share increased to 83 per cent.

The greater the amount of wealth production increased, the greater was also the corresponding decrease of the producers' share in that wealth. In the early days of these statistics production was chiefly carried on by hand labor; the factories and mills that are now so numerous were then but few. With the rapid progress of the introduction of machinery and inventions in the productive industries the power of these increased two-fold, ten-fold, yes, twenty-fold, according to the state of perfection of the improved machine. With this increased productiveness came also the army of unemployed; at first but few in number, but constantly increasing as the machine became more perfected, until the army of the unemployed in the year of prosperity, 1890, when the latest census was taken, had reached far over the one million mark. In 1893, and up to 1897, the army of unemployed was estimated anywhere from three to four million.

With the gigantic strides which the concentration of capital is now making, one may ask himself, "What will be labor's share when the census of 1900 is taken?" At any rate, it can be asserted without fear of contradiction that labor's share will have still further decreased. The first question is pressing more and more to the front. The power of competition is dwindling fast away; now only remains a small fraction of the entire productive industries that are not trustified. In the carriage and wagon industry the trust has not yet come, although some attempts at it have been made. With the rapid introduction of the automobile, the trust will also make its appearance. While the trust and the trust papers are singing the joys of prosperity, the working class is feeling its condition more keenly than ever. Their share of all this is but a job at pauper wages. It is certain that the workers will come to understand their true position; at least, the organized workers now, to some extent, realize that the struggle on the economic field must be supplemented by political action. The strong hold of capitalism in the present time is its economic power; its weakest and continuing ever weaker, because of the development crushing out the small capitalist and forcing him into the ranks of the working class, is the ballot. Here they are outnumbered and here it is where the workers can gain easy victory, and here a victory gained will but add strength for the economic battle.

Effort in this direction, along clear-cut, uncompromising, class-conscious lines, will increase labor's share in the product. While it is true that in certain trades, even now, wages have been raised, yet when the increased productivity, through the more perfected machines and through the concentration of capital, is taken into consideration, it will be seen when the next balancing up takes place that labor's share, on the whole, has decreased.

Organization is essential; more so than ever. This fact can not be too strongly emphasized, but it also is a fact that every tactical point through which it is possible to increase labor's share would and must be taken advantage of in the onward march for labor's emancipation.—Carriage Workers' Journal.

IDEALS AND THEIR ACCESSORIES

The recent article of Comrade Abbott's on "The Social Ideal" was not only most commendable, but his rhapsody on that masterpiece of William Morris, "News From Nowhere," is especially noteworthy. For those who have not read it, but have read Bellamy's "Equality," a few words of comparison may be welcome. Bellamy portrays the culmination of the machine era, the period when society is developed to the utmost in scientific civilization. It is essentially a prophecy, a prophetic picture as profound and masterly as any Isaiah ever conceived.

But Morris' book is not a picture, it is a glimpse of life: life such as we now know nothing about; life which now only the divinely-human can make us feel and see, as he lifts aside the veil of ignorance from our blunted sensibilities, and gives our ravished senses the thrill of real life.

In his presentation of the ideal the poet and artist breathes in every page the delineation of physical life is sensuously beautiful, and cannot fail to elicit a warm glow in the breast of any who approaches a normal condition.

Morris goes beyond Bellamy chronologically, and logically, because after the mechanical era culminates, a new epoch will be the inevitable outcome, and Morris denotes this "An epoch of rest." That is to say, before man's resources for saving labor are exhausted, a natural reaction will set in, and in fear of a work-famine, the people will revert to handicraft in the artistic adornment of pottery and similar things where the superior beauty achieved by the touch of man suggests the elimination of the machine. What an answer to those who carp on laziness under Socialism!

The one or two scientific laws of evolution Morris may ignore only seem as a speck in the crystal, and make his book all the more intensely human.

Recent observations move me to make a few remarks on the other part of my subject: the methods pursued to attain ideals.

The reformer is very much in evidence these days. Biologists are discussing with grave apprehension the question of race deterioration. Various causes are assigned, all of them only symptomatic, but the agitation has produced a legion of hobbyists. One hears much from the food reformer, the dress reformer, the temperance worker, and the social settlement faddist. The scientist teaches us that cereals, fruits and nuts, properly prepared; are the ideal food for human-kind, and, while the truth of this appeals to some of us, and while we can see much in our present methods of clothing and failing to exercise the body properly that are unscientific and harmful, is it not a mockery to harp on these themes when we consider that ten million of people in this fair land of ours never have enough of anything to eat and wear?

These would-be reformers mean well, but they are so imbued with the system of individual redemption and individualism in toto, that they fail to perceive that no good reform can be far-reaching and continuous in growth that will not appeal to the masses and is impossible for them to put in practice. For we are inexorably bound up with the evolution of the social organism, with its increasing tendency to interdependence.

The poet and scientist are indeed the great teachers of life and truth, and the Socialist is stimulated by his ideals to hasten the time when the voice of these teachers will be heard, and their teachings possible to apply, for he is the only one who can be confident he is on the right way to bring about such conditions.

As Thoreau says: "There are a thousand hacking at the branches of evil to one who is striking at the root." The rest of that quotation from "Walden" would be especially instructive to those who believe that the social evils can be cured by alms-giving.

It may be because the laboring man's whole life must be continuously in opposition to the very first law of nature (the conservation of energy) that he has no ideal above improving his lot a point or two by electing a Cleveland or a Bryan.

Why can we not see that it will be easier to change the whole system and maintain the full rights of man than to be able to secure and maintain the general betterment of those under the yoke in one essential point?

Michigan Socialists

All Social Democrats and all unattached Socialists residing in Michigan are requested to write at once to Henry Ramsey, 84 Railroad street, Battle Creek, Mich., and thus aid in placing a Social Democratic state ticket in the field this fall.

To Tennessee Socialists: For the purpose of organizing branches and putting a ticket out this fall, the undersigned urges that you write to him at once. Also send him a list of all unattached Socialists. Wm. L. Hamilton, Organizer Branch No. 1, 323 Russell street, Nashville, Tenn.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

F. M. McQuivey is state organizer for Utah.

Saginaw wants the Michigan state convention of the Social Democratic party.

Branch 7, Chicago, will give a musical and literary entertainment May 25, at Hygeia hall.

The Bohemian comrades of Chicago are making arrangements for their annual picnic, June 3.

Comrade G. C. Clemons has been nominated by Social Democrats for governor of Kansas.

An important meeting of Branch 18, Newburyport, Mass., will be held May 22, at which it is hoped there will be a full attendance.

All Social Democrats and unattached Socialists residing in Charlestown, Mass., are requested to communicate with Stephen O'Leary, 11 Harvard street, Charlestown, Mass.

Utah has completed a state organization of the Social Democratic party. In the Salt Lake district 668 votes were cast for the Social Democratic candidate for congress. Utah will cast a large vote in November for Debs.

Among the callers at headquarters last week was E. H. Thornberg, traveling correspondent of Swedish newspapers. Mr. Thornberg learned much while in Chicago of the Social Democratic movement, which will be reported to the people of Sweden.

The announcement made last week that Social Democrats had elected two members of the school board at Jacksonville, Ill., was incorrect. The mistake was due to conflicting reports received. None were elected, but the party candidates received a good vote.

Social Democrats of San Antonio, Texas, have nominated Comrade E. G. Clear for congress from the 12th District. The movement at San Antonio is very promising, new members being admitted and a growing interest shown in the work.

It will be remembered that the Indianapolis convention continued the executive board in office until a new board is chosen. Since then Comrade Jesse Cox retired, and at a meeting held Saturday, May 12, Comrade Corinne Brown was elected to fill the vacancy.

NEW BRANCHES

The new branches of the Social Democratic party organized since a week ago, are located at

MAY DAY CELEBRATION

The Bohemian branches of Chicago celebrated the first of May, the working men's holiday, at the Bohemian hall, May 1, and it was a grand success. The spacious and modern hall was filled on the floor and the galleries. Over 2,000 people were present, the fair sex being well represented. Comrade F. Svoboda delivered an address of welcome which, judged by the applause, was not without effect. The Bohemian Workingman's Singing Society delivered a specially composed song of the workingman, and after a storm of applause had to give another. Two young ladies rendered a duet on zithers which also had to be repeated after a storm of applause. Comrade Seymour Steedman delivered an eloquent speech on Labor Day and Socialism. Comrade Hlavacek, the editor of our Bohemian official paper, "Spravednost," with his usual talent delivered a fine address appropriate to the occasion. Between the speeches the Misses Mancel rendered a fine selection on the piano, four-handed, and Miss Marcel sang in Bohemian, accompanied by Prof. Hlavacek. She received well deserved applause which did not cease until she repeated. The Bohemian Musical Federation band played selected compositions from Bohemian masters and others that displayed a musical skill hard to be beaten, and the best of it is that it played gratuitously, which should be remembered by our comrades and should be taken in consideration when music is needed for any occasion. The admission was free and at 11 p. m. the chairman thanked all who contributed to the success of the celebration and with the sounds of the Marseillaise the meeting adjourned.

WASHINGTON STATE ORGANIZED

The meeting held at Seattle, Wash., April 29, was called to order by John Cloak, of Whatcom, who stated the objects of the meeting. John Cloak was then elected chairman and J. D. Curtis secretary. It was moved and carried that the chair appoint a committee on credentials. The chair appointed A. G. Seibert, D. G. Wilson and E. E. Martin. A recess of 15 minutes was then taken. Upon reassembling the Committee on Credentials reported the following delegates present and duly accredited:

John Cloak, Fairhaven; C. E. Martens, Whatcom; G. D. Wilson, Fairhaven; Mrs. Belle Hatt, Geneva; Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, Geneva; E. E. Martin, Olympia; Hermon Culver, Pt. Angeles; Wm. Hogan, Equality; A. G. Seibert, Seattle; Walter Griggs, Equality; E. Lux, Seattle; J. H. White, Equality.

Later the following delegates appeared: Geo. E. Boomer, Tacoma; H. H. House, Tacoma; and Hermon F. Titus, Seattle.

After the transaction of routine business nominations for state headquarters were made. An informal vote on the nominations resulted as follows: Seattle 7, Pt. Angeles 2, Lynden 1, Equality 3, and Whatcom 0. Moved and carried to make Seattle the unanimous choice.

Comrade Seibert then called attention to the question of union of S. D. P. and S. L. P. and urged that the meeting express an opinion on the subject. A resolution on unity which had been mislaid was then produced and read as follows:

Whereas, One of the fundamental principles of Socialism is that all true Socialists should unite in a common cause, and

Whereas, The comrades in Missouri, New York and Ohio and many other places have practically consummated the union of the S. D. P. and the S. L. P., endorsed by our national convention at Indianapolis.

Be it resolved, That we are heartily in favor of such union and we believe that the great majority of the rank and file of both parties are in accord with this view.

A lengthy discussion followed and a vote was taken, the result being a tie. The chairman who had not voted cast the deciding vote in favor of the resolution which was thus carried.

Moved and carried that the state executive board be elected. The following nominations were then made: Seibert, Morgan, Burgess, Boomer, Lake, Titus, Cloak, Hogan and Curtis.

Subsequently the state board has elected the following officers: A. G. Seibert, chairman and organizer for north half of state; 64 West Cedar street, Seattle, Wash.; Hermon Culver, vice chairman, Port Angeles, Wash.; H. F. Titus, treasurer, 208 Mutual Life building, Seattle, Wash.; Geo. E. Boomer, organizer for south half of state, Tacoma, Wash.

The Pious and the Poor

Socialism is treading in the wake of the trusts. Politics, with the moral law squeezed out, is what the government is dealing in. The world owes every man a living—if he can get it. It depends largely on the man. If he is an ordinary voting mule he may find suicide easier than competition, and he will be much happier over there on the evergreen shore, unless he bumps up against a trust in harps and halos! But if he has financial sharpness, gushing Rockefeller-piety, and a callous heart, he can keep himself very much alive on this side, driving other men to suicide; and his picture will hang in the chapel of some great university inspiring the youthful students to emulate his shining example! It is the rich who make the poor poorer, and it is the poor who make the rich richer. The millions who have nothing make the money for the millionaire. The benevolent rich will do anything for the working class, except to get off their backs. How can men think highly, nobly, clearly, when the chief object in life is to acquire the wealth which others have produced? While the Socialists are demanding public ownership, the millionaires have already put it in practice—they own the public! The men who have created the trusts are swiftly bringing in Socialism, for they are making conditions which will force the people into this new phase of life as the only escape from slavery to the restless financial banditti.—E. M. Wheelock, Austin, Texas.

THAT EXTRAORDINARY PROPOSITION

For once, on the horizon of the world has risen a hope; it is the emancipation of woman. Suddenly there has shot into the political pandemonium one loud and ringing cry; it is: "Irrespective of sex."

These words stand forth in the S. D. platform, like warriors armed to the teeth; they tear at customs, prejudices and privileges.

For once there is a party pure enough to propose, first and foremost, that no longer shall an embargo be placed upon the brain and heart of woman.

Such heresy at such a time, in the midst of such conditions as bewilder the bravest, appears like the finger-print of God. It is as much as to say, "Toiler, suffer, so long as ye give birth to dragons; agonize, so long as ye outrage souls; call for mercy, so long as ye mutilate the moral sense; go down in defeat and darkness, O man, until you recognize your running mate." But when this is done in the vocabulary of the conscience and the custom of the ballot and the law, then may you reasonably expect to rear aloft the sheltering structure of the Social Commonwealth, and to salute the future with a face radiant with the light of a redeemed humanity."

SOCIALISM AND PUBLIC HEALTH

(By Walter T. Roberts, M. D.)

The subject for discussion today appears at first sight to have little bearing upon economics. And yet, when we consider the number of hours of productive and distributive labor lost by reason of sickness, it becomes manifest that health is a very important factor in maximum wealth production. A healthy community will not only create more wealth in a given time, but the consumption of utilities will be greater, thus exerting a stimulative reaction upon the process of production.

The effects of widespread epidemics are familiar to all. Decrease in industrial activities, disturbance of commerce, and at times complete business stagnation have been felt by every civilized community in the world.

However, the fact that the good health of a people conduces to increased production concerns us but little, as under the present capitalist system we turn over all the products of our labor to the smooth and brainy exploiter and shout about unparalleled prosperity when he magnanimously returns enough of these products from quitting their earthly tenements in disgust at our monstrous stupidity.

As good health is rather to be chosen than great riches, the argument will deal with that arrangement of man's social relations which will effect the highest degree of bodily welfare and consequent longevity.

There are three determining factors to be considered in a study of this question of health—heredity, environment, and education—from a brief review of which we will be the better prepared to examine critically and intelligently the glaring faults of the profit system of industry in its relation to public health, and at the same time to grasp the possibilities of the future co-operative commonwealth, toward the establishment of which many progressive, thinking men are zealously striving.

That malformations and physical peculiarities are frequently hereditary; that weaknesses or tendencies toward certain diseases are transmitted from parent to offspring are facts too well known to require comment. Breeders of fine horses study the question of heredity closely, knowing that to produce a higher standard of excellence great care must be exercised in the selection and condition of sire and dam. And yet human life is so cheap, such a drug on the market, that, except as a scientific theory, little or no attention is paid to the breeding of a physical body designed to be the abode of an immortal soul. The construction of that marvelous instrument by means of which infinite mind manifests and creates noble works of art is left to chance so far as we are consciously concerned. Why is it that the breeding of horses claims so much more scientific care than that of human beings? The answer is, of course, because of the profit. Now, as profits from all industries grow by squeezing all the labor power out of the working class compatible with continued existence, what sort of children would naturally be born to these overburdened parents, and to the anxious unemployed, and to the criminal class, hopeless and criminal because of the overburdening of those of us necessary to capitalist production? Congenital cripples, degenerates, criminals and idiots, certainly in fearful abundance. But you will say, "Not only from the working class do these degenerates and criminals descend, but from the capitalist class as well." A philosopher has said, "When you fasten one end of a chain about the neck of a slave, be sure the other end will fasten itself around your own." Another greater philosopher has said, "As ye sow, so shall ye also reap."

The idleness, self-indulgence and sensuality of the capitalist class are also debilitating and destructive, and the offspring of these human parasites are subject to the same law of heredity. Again you may ask: "Have the producers of the world's wealth sown seed that they should reap so much sorrow and injustice?" It must be so. They are paying the penalty of ignorance and stubbornness; they have ears, but hear not; eyes, but see not. They have the power to set everything aright, but sell it for a pittance in factories for their undoing; give it away at the polls for their enslavement.

The Power of Environment

The late Henry Drummond, that indefatigable seeker after truth, says:

"Heredity and environment are the master forces of the organic world. They have made all of us what we are. These forces are ceaselessly playing upon all our lives, and he who truly understands these influences; he who has decided how much to allow each; he who can regulate new forces as they arise, or adjust them to the old, directing them as at one moment to operate, at another to counteract, and another, understands the rational of personal development. To seize continuously the opportunity of more and more perfect adjustment to better and higher conditions, to balance some inward evil with some purer influence acting from without, in a word, to make our environment at the same time it is making us—these are the secrets of a well ordered and successful life."

From these few sentences, glowing with most wholesome truth, we are led to see the modifying influence of environment upon physical man. We learn that hereditary taints can be eliminated by purifying influences acting from without; in short, that the best results must follow the establishment of the most perfect environment.

Environment of the Masses

Every material and every immaterial thing in existence which affects mankind must be included in the term, environment; pure water and happiness both conduce to good health. Let us now examine some of the material surroundings of a large number of our people, the poor who are with us always, and whose ranks we not infrequently help to swell. We have all visited the loathsome tenement house, either in person or in imagination as we read the harrowing newspaper accounts of these New York and London dens, the infamous products of capitalist greed; monuments erected by disinherited humanity to commemorate in a fitting manner the exploits of our industrial chiefs! Men, women and children crowded into dirty, cheerless rooms, breathing and rebreathing the stifling, vitiated air, continuing a miserable existence under the most unhumanizing influences. Full of excusable hatred for so-called Christian society, they curse God and presently find—at least, let us hope—temporary relief in death. If there were no other proofs of the viciousness of the present arrangements of our social relations than the shameful horrors of the tenement house, that alone would stamp our system a wretched failure.

The Cause Must Be Cured

Is it possible to apply hygienic laws to the surroundings of these oppressed and demoralized people?

Your legislative bodies may enact all sorts of sanitary laws, but these disease-breeding tenements furnish ideal soil for the multiplication of deadly germs, and until you remove the conditions which permit, or rather produce, such places, your laws and their attempted execution are farcical.

Now look into some of the illy-ventilated, crowded factories where many of your commodities are produced and let us ask ourselves: "Why are these factories not arranged with a view of increasing the comfort and health of the operatives?" The answer is that factories are arranged with a view of increasing the profits of the men who own but do not operate the machinery, little or no attention being paid to the dull wage slave, especially when considerable expense is attached to sanitary improvements. That a few modern factories are well equipped with health-promoting conditions is true, but as the strength of a chain is determined by its weakest link, so our industrial system must be measured by its most imperfect features. When Edwin Markham visited the sweat shops in New York recently, his artistic soul was so horrified at the inhuman spectacle that he began a descriptive letter with the words, "I have been in hell!" I have sometimes wondered what forceful language he would have used to express his emotions had he been compelled to exercise his "inalienable right to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness" at one of the machines in such a corner of our industrial chaos.

The Fruits of Capitalism

The tenement house and the sweat shop represent the extreme points of degradation to which the capitalist scheme of exploitation and plunder has brought our homes and factories. Both are directly and indirectly productive of disease, but under the private ownership of mills, mines and machines, public control by legislative enactments of the sanitary or other conditions of these means of production amounts to practically nothing, at least in this country. Factory laws have shared the same fate with all other laws interfering with the profits of capitalists; all are gently but firmly consigned to "innocuous desuetude."

Socialism the Only Solution

Socialism offers the only rational solution to all the questions of public well-being. Just think of the brain power wasted in the past by our legal lights and college professors trying to explain to us that the brute features of the competitive system of industry are essential to progress! Is it not perfectly plain that if public health is to be preserved and man's material environment improved, perhaps perfected, public ownership and consequent control of all the mechanism of production and distribution of the necessities which conduce to health and happiness is absolutely imperative, so that not one individual in society can be shut out from an opportunity to enjoy all its blessings?

AMERICAN ARISTOCRACY

Charles Trench.

It is a remarkable and well attested fact that a large majority of our working classes are laboring under the impression that we have no aristocracy. It also seems to be a general opinion among them that there are no privileged classes among us. I remember, while addressing a crowd on Boston Common last summer, that my allusion to American aristocracy was received with shouts of derision; but I observed that it was only the elderly portion of my audience who objected to this un-American expression. These men were not only well advanced in years, but were in a conspicuous state of poverty. On inquiry, I discovered that these ancient Republicans were, at one time, thriving storekeepers, and well-to-do artisans, and that trusts and machinery had caused their utter ruin.

When I inveighed against the infernal system which had reduced them to their deplorable condition they eyed me with the expression of men who thought me insane. Like the Chinese, they were proud of their country and its institutions. Any of my comments which might tend to lower Hannanism in the estimation of the public they felt as a personal outrage. Their devotion to party appeared to be a superstition as stupid and degrading as the ancient Egyptian worship of cats and crocodiles! It is surprising with what tenacious zeal men of all classes and creeds do cling to absurdities in which they have been educated. It often happens that those past the meridian of life can see nothing, learn nothing and believe nothing that is contrary to their preconceived notions. All new ideas, relating to social or economic science, are execrated as impious novelties.

There were, however, many young men in the crowd who listened with profound interest while I expounded the principles of Socialism. They understood at once the impudent fictions which had been palmed upon them in relation to the liberty and equality enjoyed by American citizens.

I venture to affirm, my good working friends, that you would not tolerate half the crushing burdens which are imposed upon you were this country governed by a monarchy instead of a sham republic. There is no fact more certain than that many of you are deceived into submission by empty names. Shrewd despots, in all ages, have been aware that mankind is mainly governed by names. They accordingly disguised their most tyrannical acts under high sounding phrases which appealed to the vanity of their intended victims.

In spite of assertions to the contrary there is probably no part of the civilized world where profitable humbug and patriotic buncombe is so successfully employed as in this country. I am no advocate of monarchy, nor do I wish to underrate the evils attending monarchical rule, but I can assure you that far more oppressive tyranny and degradation are possible under a capitalistic republic than under a European despotism.

In Europe, where royalty and aristocracy are recognized, persons belonging to ancient and wealthy families are endowed with considerable educational advantages. They are rich by inheritance, and value money as a means to ends, and not as an idol to be worshipped.

But in this country a most pernicious influence is exerted by an acknowledgment of the aristocracy of wealth. We must all be aware of the fabulous wealth gathered into the coffers of sharking gold barons, more or less unscrupulous, and ignorant. They cannot conceive of anything else so desirable and attractive as money. That ruining hundreds of families by a rascally financial scheme is wicked and disgraceful never enters their heads. This ought to excite no surprise. According to the moral code of our speculating aristocracy morality has no marked value; intellectual achievements pay no dividends, and honesty is an infirmity. Yet these are the men who own and control our whole system of government.

In view of these considerations, who can deny, with any show of reason, that we are ruled by the most powerful, arrogant and ignorant aristocracies in the world? To such a pitch have they brought their importance that they not only control the people, but to a great extent shape public opinion. When they enact tariff laws to fleece the masses they are considered by millions of misguided people as benefactors and promoters of commercial prosperity. When one or more of them grant a small part of their ill-gotten wealth to endow a public library or university they are always lauded as philanthropists.

My working friends, whoever looks must see that this terrible flood of iniquity and its resulting misery is gaining ground every day. What is the meaning of American aristocracy and its associate capitalism? I can tell you broadly it means unlimited power and opportunity for rogues to become enormously rich by wrecking honest men. It means gangs of knaves associated together for the purpose of public robbery. It further means millions of human beings living the life of slaves and dying the death of paupers.

But it is not too much to affirm that a remedy for this atrocious injustice is in your own hands. Though it has been stated a thousand times, it cannot be repeated too often, that Socialism is the only door of hope which is open to the working classes. By voting for either of the two old parties you are only assisting the few to rule and plunder the many. You are only helping to render lives, that might be a blessing, a calamity and a curse. By the success of Bryanism you will have the same old gang at the same old game. But the triumph of the Social Democratic Party will make land, machinery and all monopolies common property; that is the only means of destroying the cancer-worm of capitalism which is eating the very heart out of the nation. Lay hold of the great truths of Socialism, and if the Almighty has endowed you with a gleam of understanding you will see that it is the only means of driving off the financial cormorants who are robbing labor of its gains.

THE PLATFORM

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and happiness depend upon equal political and economic rights.

In our economic development an industrial revolution has taken place, the individual tool of former years having become the social tool of the present. The individual tool was owned by the worker who employed himself and was master of his product. The social tool, the machine, is owned by the capitalist and the worker is dependent upon him for employment. The capitalist thus becomes the master of the worker and is able to appropriate to himself a large share of the product of his labor.

Capitalism, the private ownership of the means of production, is responsible for the insecurity of subsistence, the poverty, misery and degradation of the ever-growing majority of our people; but the same economic forces which have produced and now intensify the capitalist system will necessitate the adoption of Socialism, the collective ownership of the means of production for the common good and welfare.

The present system of social production and private ownership is rapidly converting society into two antagonistic classes—i. e., the capitalist class and the propertyless class. The middle class, once the most powerful of this great nation, is disappearing in the mill of competition. The issue is now between the two classes first named. Our political liberty is now of little value to the masses unless used to acquire economic liberty.

Independent political action and the trade union movement are the chief emancipating factors of the working class, the one representing its political, the other its economic wing, and both must co-operate to abolish the capitalist system.

Therefore the Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be:

First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution, to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism.

The working class and all those in sympathy with their historic mission to realize a higher civilization should sever connection with all capitalist and reform parties and unite with the Social Democratic Party of America.

The control of political power by the Social Democratic party will be tantamount to the abolition of all class rule.

The solidarity of labor connecting the millions of class-conscious fellow-workers throughout the civilized world will lead to international Socialism, the brotherhood of man.

As steps in that direction, we make the following demands:

First—Revision of our federal constitution, in order to remove the obstacles to complete control of government by the people irrespective of sex.

Second—The public ownership of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines.

Third—The public ownership of all railroads, telegraphs and telephones; all means of transportation, and communication; all water-works, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

Fourth—The public ownership of all gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, and other mines, and all oil and gas wells.

Fifth—The reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increasing facilities of production.

Sixth—The inauguration of a system of public works and improvements for the employment of the unemployed, the public credit to be utilized for that purpose.

Seventh—Useful inventions to be free, the inventor to be remunerated by the public.

Eighth—Labor legislation to be national, instead of local, and international when possible.

Ninth—National insurance of working people against accidents, lack of employment and want in old age.

Tenth—Equal civil and political rights, for men and women, and the abolition of all laws discriminating against women.

Eleventh—The adoption of the initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall of representatives by the voters.

Twelfth—Abolition of war and the introduction of international arbitration.

BREAK IN THE RANKS OF THE MID-ROAD POPULISTS

The break has come; the evolution has been completed for a large number of middle-of-the-road populists during the past month, and the Social Democratic party is about to make a distinct and widely extended advance. This is noticeably true in Iowa, as the subjoined letters addressed to Mr. A. W. C. Weeks, chairman of the people's party state committee, will testify:

Populist Leader Quits

Lone Tree, Iowa, May 15, 1900.

A. W. C. Weeks, Chairman, etc., Winterset, Iowa:

Dear Sir—It has been a growing conviction with me for several years that the complete and final cure for the social and economic ills which today grievously afflict mankind can be brought about only by the reconstruction of society in harmony with the principles of modern Socialism. I am constrained to believe that reformers should work with a party whose aims are purely Socialistic, and whose principles permit of no compromise with capitalism, or fusion with capital serving parties, and should not scatter their votes through other and various organizations.

There is no middle ground on which to wage a conflict between the capitalism of the present day and its natural opponent, the co-operative commonwealth. Neither can there be harmony or compromise between these two forces.

"A step in the right direction" party will never secure anything further than that of obtaining public patronage for its politicians and of crushing the hopes of those of its supporters who sought for "half a loaf."

A party such as the people's, which is one-third capitalistic, two-thirds Socialistic, with capitalistic parties on one side and a Socialistic party on the other, has no ground on which to sow its seed. On the one hand the Bryan forces draw those who are easily attracted by "sounding brass" and the "tinkling cymbal"; while, on the other, the advanced thinkers easily see that in Socialism alone is found the means to overcome the inequalities of wealth distribution.

Under these conditions the people's party remains simply an exhibition of stubborn adherence to a name.

The democratic and republican parties are both undeniably capitalistic. They both defend individualism and uphold the competitive system. Socialism is the direct antipodes of each and of both. To a Socialist the conflict between these two parties is nothing more than a great national debate, the prize of which is public patronage.

Whatever good the people's party might have accomplished was rendered impossible when the knife of fusion was thrust into its vitals. The party is dead from this blow and without hope of resurrection under the same name and with the same ideals. The greenback party died from fusion wounds and brought in its stead the union labor party. Fusion again accomplished its deadly work and the people's party was born. Again was struck the deadly fusion blow and this time it is Socialism, which has risen in the place of the people's party. Each party has been a step to the final goal. All of the above parties have been more or less capitalistic, and notice that fusion has always been obtained on the capitalistic part of the platform, never on the Socialistic.

What we need now is a reform party which is Socialistic through and through, and in which there is not a vestige of capitalism. Such a party is the Social Democratic. We need a leader in whom the labor world has confidence. Such a leader is Eugene V. Debs, a man tried both by time and conditions. In view of all of the foregoing I cannot hesitate longer to enlist in the cause, and by this public announcement declare that such ability as I possess shall henceforth be devoted to the cause of Socialism.

Having declared my purpose in the above, it only remains to tender to you and to the populists of Iowa my resignation as, first, a member of the national people's party committee; second, a member of the state central committee; third, as secretary of the latter organization. Fraternally yours,

A. W. Ricker.

Joins Social Democratic Party

From Hon. Charles A. Lloyd, candidate for governor of Iowa on the people's party ticket, 1897 and 1899: To the Members of the People's Party of Iowa:

In announcing my purpose to support the principles and candidates of the Social Democratic party, I feel that it is a severance of party ties in name only, since the state platform on which you named me as your candidate for governor last fall was clearly on the lines of the principles of the Social Democracy. I have never been a stickler for mere partisanship, as such, perceiving that it is today the bond of subjection to oppression that makes reform of such slow growth, for could we have eliminated the fetich of partyism from the minds of the American laborers and producers of wealth, we would have long ago reached the conscience and convinced the judgment of the millions of party-controlled wage slaves and toilers that today are voting power that makes private monopoly, militarism and wage slavery of such long life; and surely we who have ever urged the breaking of party ties whenever such a course would best conserve the principles we love, should never hesitate a moment when our judgment leads us to believe that more can be accomplished by a new alignment for the fundamental principles of justice and liberty than could be secured in the old organization, and this, my fellow populists, is my sole reason for giving my support to the new and young party, the Social Democracy. It has life, activity, growth. The people's party was killed by fusion and the heroic efforts of the few brave and undaunted men who have clung to and shared its trials since then have only been rewarded by a constantly diminishing vote. The principles of the Social Democracy are placed upon the bedrock of a truly productive industry, founded in the solidity of the co-operative commonwealth, whose fruits are Plenty and whose ways are Peace.

My brother reformers, for the trust you have repeatedly reposed in and the honors conferred upon me, during the many years we have worked together, I can only express my eternal gratitude and cannot believe that this action upon my part will sever a single friendly tie that has heretofore bound us together. Very respectfully,

Charles A. Lloyd.

Muscataine, Iowa, May 11, 1900.

Is Now a Social Democrat

Van Horne, Iowa, May 18, 1900.

To A. W. C. Weeks, Chairman, People's Party, State Committee, Winterset, Iowa—

Dear Sir: It becomes my duty to sever my connection with the people's party, and I hereby resign as a member of the state committee from the Fifth district. In leaving the people's party to join the Social Democracy I will briefly explain my reasons for said course.

In the first place, in leaving the people's party I am impelled by reasons that pertain to its management—rather mismanagement—in the past.

The people's party has shown itself incapable of self-management and become secondary and subservient to a party of incoherence, insincerity and sham reform. This is the testimony of the memorable campaign of 1896, whose story you know. Since that time the people's party, having once become inoculated with the fatal virus of fusion, has been as "a house divided against itself," and it was as clear to my mind then as it is today that in consequence it would fail.

Now, as for joining the Social Democracy. In doing this I need not and do not make a sacrifice of any principle which the people's party now holds or has held. As a matter of fact the intrinsic value, the real essence of the populist platforms from Omaha down has been the Socialism they contained. I am simply leaving a party that is partially Socialistic, and therefore inconsistent, for one that is consistent, that is wholly Socialistic.

While on the one extreme the republican party is essentially capitalistic, or anti-Socialistic, it is at least honest and consistent; and while the democratic party is partially Socialistic, the fusion populists more, and the middle-roads still more so, yet all these three are discordant, incongruous, inconsistent bodies, collectively as well as individually, and show no fixed or well-defined aim, except it be that they point to the other logical extreme—namely, Socialism. Therefore the Social Democratic program, being purely, completely Socialistic, is consistent and logical, and is the only antithesis, the only real opponent of republican or republico-democratic capitalism. The future of this country lies between republicanism, which is capitalism, on the one hand, and Socialism, its logical antagonist, on the other. There is no middle-road, no fusion fence to climb on; it is one thing or the other. And no other party or system can prevent the line of battle from crystallizing down to these two positions finally, one or the other of which we must finally support. "Choose ye whom ye will serve." I am henceforth going the whole hog. I am going with thousands of others into a movement that knows not fusion (and its logical result, confusion); a movement that is international in extent, a party that is universal in its scope, that aims at the dethronement of capitalism as a system, in all lands, whether headed by an Emperor William in Germany, a Queen Victoria in England or a Republican McKinley in the United States. And this by the enthronement, the institution of a system of co-operative industry, as well as government, culminating in the highest mortal ideal, the brotherhood of the human race. In so leaving I bear no ill will toward the people's party or any other reform party. And bidding adieu, I have the firm hope that I will meet the majority of true reformers again on the Social Democratic platform, sooner or later, according to how quickly and thoroughly each grasps the situation. Yours fraternally,

Dr. C. Wirth.

YOUR VOTE AND YOUR SYMPATHY

By Harry F. Dyruff

"Trust no future, how'er pleasant,
Let the dead past bury its dead.
ACT—ACT in the living present.
Heart within and God o'erhead."
—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

I watched one day a cat playing with a mouse which it had caught; it would allow it a little freedom to spur it to renewed efforts for liberty, then would pounce upon it again, then release it, until it finally killed the little creature. This little incident brought to my mind the struggle between labor and capital in the United States. The mouse was oppressed by what was apparently the stronger, just as labor is oppressed by what apparently is the stronger. Yet in reality in which class lies the strength? All laborers individually are as the mouse, in the hands of the capitalists. Imagine a mouse realizing its power, calling together its fellow-mice, co-operating with them, and in one united co-operative onslaught overpowering the cat and ending its existence. So could the laborer crush and abrogate the capitalist were he to combine with his fellows and in one combined co-operative endeavor take to himself that which is rightfully his. Single-handed he is powerless; as a part of an organized body he is all powerful. The capitalist class now plays with labor as the cat with the mouse; it allows it a little freedom to spur it to renewed efforts, then crushes it again. If labor does not awaken to the needs of the situation and combination is not effected, it will be crushed when such combination will be too late to be effective. Many workmen look at the temporary relief sometimes given them by half-way reformers as a good thing for them—just as the mouse thinks temporary freedom is a good chance for him to escape, but its results are always reactionary. Shall we advocate, as the Bryan element does, the election of a man who would retard the perfection of industrial organization? Or shall we support the man who would seize for the common good these beautiful, co-operative, systematized industries after they have been perfected?

I say let us stop this silly play. Let us stop this compromising before our compromises have been accepted. Get down to good hard work and toil hard for the final ending. "Hitch your wagon to a star," and not to a flimsy balloon which may at any time burst and precipitate you to the ground. Aim high and don't forget to do more than talk, but act. Action speaks a thousand times louder than words. And don't be a hypocrite; don't preach Socialism and then go to the ballot box and act something else. Don't talk Socialism and then cast your vote for everything under the sun but Socialism! And don't croak. If there is anything that makes one feel disgusted it is to see a man going around saying, "Socialism is fine, excellent; I believe in it, but we cannot win." You cannot get results unless you work for them and work hard; you cannot get political reforms unless you vote for them—not only preach, but vote for them. If every Socialist would say, "Well, we can't elect our ticket this year, so what is the use of voting for it?" we would never get a step farther. By showing a large increase in your vote each year you would attract thousands who now say Socialism is impracticable and many others would open their eyes to our rapid growth and would say, "Well, there must be something practical in this or it wouldn't grow so fast." Therefore, don't forget that the only way to get Socialism is to vote for it, and not simply talk for it. Talk is cheap; it's action we want and need, and I hope you will be manly and true in November by voting the straight Socialist ticket, headed by those illustrious champions of labor and justice, Eugene V. Debs and Job Harriman.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY WHEN ORGANIZED AND WHY

The Social Democratic party was organized at Chicago, June 11, 1898. At that time and for many years previous there existed the Socialist Labor party, an organization controlled by a faction in New York and conducting its affairs generally throughout the country through a system of espionage and persecution of individuals, which was carried to the extreme of suspending or expelling members on causes of the most trivial character and for no cause at all, and always arrayed in hostility toward the regular trades unions and those connected with organized labor.

The Socialist movement in the United States never made any notable advance as a result of the propaganda of the Socialist Labor party. While its principles were, in the main, sound and revolutionary, its spirit and method were repulsive and directly subversive of the ends which, as a Socialist organization, it sought to attain. The vote cast for candidates of this party, confined chiefly to New York City, was trifling, whether in local, state or national elections. It could not have been otherwise, for the objectionable party tactics were supplemented by the narrow bigotry of a party organ, the People, a weekly paper of very limited circulation.

In spite of the methods of the Socialist Labor party, however, and with almost no help from those known to be identified with that organization, the propaganda for Socialism was true and constant and the cause itself won new advocates and adherents in all parts of the country. This was noticeably true in the years 1894-'96-'98, when the Socialist vote was 33,133, 36,564 and 91,953, respectively, the last item including the first vote of the Social Democratic party and representing the total vote cast for Socialism in 1898. In that year the Social Democratic party was organized, but in only three or four states and a few communities in these states was the new party well enough organized to do effective work. Previous to that, however, in January, 1897, Eugene V. Debs issued a card announcing his conversion and adherence to the principles of Socialism. This action on the part of one so well and favorably known to the country, coupled with the great upheaval following the Pullman strike, unquestionably had much to do with the marked increase of the Socialist vote from 36,564 in 1896 to 91,953 in 1898. Here was a jump of 55,389 votes in two years. In the two years previous, from '94 to '96, there was an increase of only 3,431.

Another factor to be reckoned with in this connection is this, that while, as already stated, the Socialist Labor party papers had very limited circulation, and in whole states and divisions of the country were entirely unknown, such publications as the Coming Nation (distinctively Socialistic after August, 1896) and the Appeal to Reason, with a combined circulation of 100,000 copies weekly, were disseminating Socialist principles where Socialist Labor party papers were never seen and going in far greater numbers than Socialist Labor party papers into sections of the country where the largest Socialist vote was cast.

The cause of Socialism was advancing, not because of the Socialist Labor party organization and its antagonism to trades unionism and a hypercritical attitude toward those who were coming to an acceptance of the root principle of Socialism, but without its help and in spite of a species of insanity that characterized its alleged propaganda.

The Coming Nation and Appeal to Reason have been a positive, vital force in whatever acquisition to the Socialist movement has been shown at the polls since 1896 and even before.

The Social Democratic party was organized, not for the purpose of multiplying parties avowing the same principles, but both as a natural consequence of a growing American sentiment favorable to Socialism and as a protest against a pernicious policy which, to the present time, is a hindrance to the growth of the movement.

How Organized

Five or more persons can organize a branch of the Social Democratic party. Any reputable person subscribing to the principles of the organization is eligible to membership.

Desiring to organize a branch, application should be made to the national secretary for copies of the constitution, which should be placed in the hands of the prospective members. In these will be found the declaration of principles, as also the laws of the organization.

Having secured the names of five or more Socialists, a meeting is called and the branch is instituted by electing a secretary, treasurer and organizer.

The names of these officers are forthwith transmitted by the secretary to the national secretary, together with the names and postoffice addresses of all the members and the required fee as hereinafter specified, whereupon a charter is issued by the national secretary and the branch is duly organized and prepared for active operation.

The admission fee is 25 cents per member and quarterly dues 25 cents per quarter, payable in advance, on or before the 1st day of January, 1st day of April, 1st day of July and 1st day of October. If the branch is instituted on or before the middle of the quarter, dues for the full quarter must be paid; if the branch is instituted after the middle of the quarter, the members are exempt for said quarter.

The admission fee of 25 cents and quarterly dues of 25 cents for each member must accompany the secretary's report, else charter cannot be issued.

Fees and Dues—How Applied

The question is sometimes asked, "What use is made of the funds paid in by members?" Information on this point is sought for by those who have not been accustomed to paying dues in political organizations. It is well known that the large amounts of money required for campaign purposes by the old parties are obtained from corporations and financial concerns, and that the rank and file of the voters are seldom if ever called upon to contribute. The Socialist movement necessarily depends for its financial support upon those who accept the principles of Socialism. The propaganda is maintained only at great personal sacrifice on the part of those who can ill afford to make it. But little could be accomplished, however, without organization, and since no organization committed to the revolutionary principles of Socialism can hope for financial support from the class which the adoption of these principles will dispossess of the means of exploiting the working class, no other alternative remains but to provide ways and means to apportion the expense burden among the members. The method of doing this in the Social Democratic party has been explained. The expense is $1 per year for each member. In consideration of the payment of this amount a member receives every week a copy of the Social Democratic Herald, the regular subscription price of which is Fifty Cents. It is a feature of the policy of the party, justified by results in the past, that every member of the organization is helped and the interests of the party promoted by giving him a paper containing news and information of the movement and the organization. A publishing business and an organization require the services of a national secretary and editor and these persons have to be paid. Then there are such items as office rent, stationery, and so forth, that cannot be avoided because inseparable from the work to be done.

It will thus be seen that there is urgent need for every dollar paid into the organization and that the expenditure of all money is in the interest and for the extension of the principles upon which the organization is based.

Results Justify Party's Existence

Since the party was organized a most enthusiastic and resolute spirit has characterized the work of the comrades in the political arena, and in different sections of the country not less than thirty members of the party have been elected to public positions. It also has the support of many newspapers throughout the country, including the Appeal to Reason, with its circulation of over 100,000 weekly.

Object of the Party

The object of the Social Democratic party, stated in the platform, which will be found on the fourth page of this paper, is:

"First—The organization of the working class into a political party to conquer the public powers now controlled by capitalists.

"Second—The abolition of wage-slavery by the establishment of a national system of co-operative industry, based upon the social or common ownership of the means of production and distribution; to be administered by society in the common interest of all its members, and the complete emancipation of the socially useful classes from the domination of capitalism."

At the national convention of the Social Democratic party, held at Indianapolis, March 6 to 9, 1900, a revised constitution was adopted. This constitution is submitted to the members for a referendum vote and appears in another place in this paper.

Any additional information will be promptly furnished on application to Theodore Debs, national secretary, 126 Washington street, Chicago.

REPUBLICAN LOOTERS IN CUBA

After the blowing up of the Maine in the harbor of Havana the United States government, in the name of God and good government, started in to confer upon the Cuban people, who had been plundered for centuries by the mercenary Spaniards, the blessings of civilization according to American ideals. Scarcely had this work begun when the whole civilized world was shocked by the discovery of systematic frauds carried on by favorites of the republican administration, and the latter today stands disgraced and all its hypocritical professions unmasked before the world. Strenuous efforts are being made to suppress the facts, but enough is known to convict the administration and those of its place-holders who have jimmied the Cuban safe, to make a return to power impossible with the aid of ballots cast by decent people. A large number of "true and tried" republican office-holders are involved in the schemes of robbery organized by the "civilizers." Their lootings have not been confined to the postoffice, as is shown by a report that a spur of railroad outside of the city of Havana has cost the Cubans $1,400,000, notwithstanding that it could have been built at a maximum cost of $125,000. Thus the art of good government and the blessings of civilization which a policy of imperialism seeks to foist upon a people no better off by being freed from Spanish robbers, are made paltry and contemptible.

Neely, the loyal republican who held the office of treasurer of the postoffice department of Cuba, once made himself conspicuous at Muncie, Ind., by trying to break up one of Eugene Debs' meetings. This is the fellow who has been guilty of frauds the extent of which has not yet been ascertained.

Rathbone, one of Marcus Hanna's right-hand men, accused of bribing a member of the Ohio legislature in behalf of McKinley's chief adviser, has been relieved from duty for being caught in the act of trying to graft republican methods on the good government of Cuba.

Of such is the kingdom of the Hanna-McKinley republican combine!

A prominent resident of Washington says of this outrage: "We entered Cuba with promises to the world that we would administer the affairs of that island with integrity and in a spirit of fair play. The result is too shocking to contemplate without anger. The unfortunate part of the matter is that we have yet to hear of the most outrageous betrayals of public and personal faith. I am informed by reliable persons that the conditions in Cuba are simply shocking. The government of that island has been little short of an organized loot."

FRENCH VIEW OF BELLAMY

Our scientific comrades of France are reported in the following dispatch from Paris to have just discovered in Bellamy's "Looking Backward" the "best instrument of Socialistic propaganda extant." This news is pleasing to some of us who organized Nationalist clubs back in 1889, but will throw some people into a conniption fit:

"Paris, May 12.—The Federation of Socialists has just discovered Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward." Leaders here are wildly enthusiastic and call the book the best instrument of Socialistic propaganda extant. They are having a French translation made. A cheap edition will be printed and distributed free by the million. Jean Jaures, the Socialist leader, said:

"The American masterpiece was quite unknown to us till now. We expect the book will do wonders toward dissipating hostile ignorance against our ideas. We shall erect a statue to Bellamy in Paris within six months. He has contributed more than twenty Deweys together to the glory of the American nation."

The Western Socialist News is the name of a new monthly that comes to the support of the Social Democratic party. It is edited by G. C. Clemens, and this fact in itself will be a guaranty of mighty interesting issues in the future. The subscription is 50 cents a year; office, Topeka, Kan.

NOTES AND COMMENT

It is pleasant to know and be able to record the fact that, notwithstanding the Herald for many weeks was made the vehicle for all the communications for and against union it could carry, there has been a steady addition of new branches and a breaking of ground for the Social Democratic party in new territory. Since the Indianapolis convention seventy-six new branches have sprung into life to work for the cause of human freedom. In this total the southern states are represented with eight branches, the east with thirteen and the west with fifty-five. The organization now has a grand total of 300 branches, the result of less than two years' work, and the prospect for great increase and wide extension of the party's influence has never been as bright as now. No such organization of Socialists has heretofore existed in the United States. Let us push forward to greater achievement.

When all the votes cast by members in good standing or otherwise on the proposition submitted by the executive board are counted, the result is a total of 2,702, a larger referendum vote than was ever cast by any Socialist party in this country. The vote was divided as follows: Against union, 1,453; for, 1,249. It determines the issue and settles the question. The Social Democratic party will now proceed with its proper work of organization. If others want political co-operation in the coming campaign, that can be arranged. If not, the S. D. P. will arrange its own campaign and attend to its own affairs.

We publish this week some very interesting news and letters from Iowa, where the beginnings of a great movement favorable to the Social Democratic party are discernible. The correspondence is indicative of a state of affairs existing wherever honest men have tired of fusion and come to see in Socialism the logical ground and program for the future. Comrade Ricker has been chosen state organizer for the S. D. P. in Iowa. We cordially welcome him and his co-workers to the International Socialist movement.

Reports that letters have been received from members who voted against union regretting their action, are unqualifiedly false. Such reports emanate from those who had union consummated by 95 per cent of the members long before the vote was taken. The trouble with some people is that they are too cock-sure that they are right and all others wrong.

While the looting of Cuba under an American administration is progressing, the patriots of the corporations at home are raiding the public treasury with all sorts of jobs, the latest being an attempt to appropriate $725,000 to a private company for a pneumatic-tube service worth only $225,000. How the capitalist class does love the country!

The republican party is to be put in the attitude of leading the fight against its most trusty supporters—the trusts. The republican leaders will appeal to the people to save them from the power, of which they are a part, which has controlled all republican legislation for thirty years.

Reports that the general government will take a hand in the strike and protect non-union men on the Chicago federal building are doubtless without foundation. The administration will do nothing until after election, when the votes are counted.

The American Ice company of New York city has raised the price of ice from 30 cents a hundred pounds last year to 60 cents this season. This is done because the people are so prosperous and the company does not wish to pose as a philanthropic institution.

Gen. Wood says the Cuban mail service should not be blamed for the faults of a handful of rascals. Very true; and nobody is blaming Cuba. The blame is on the administration which is responsible for the rascals, and it can't be shaken off.

Porto Ricans are now enjoying the blessed privilege of being independent under the stars and stripes, with employment at road building for 39 cents a day.

It has been found that one Boer is equal to four Britishers, but when the fifth red jacket is added the Boer farmer finds the odds too great and retreat is necessary.

The hard-working laborer receiving $1.50 a day would have to work 150 years to earn an amount equal to Rockefeller's income for a single day.

To catch "suckers" some of the big corporations and trusts will put a 10 per cent raise-in-wages bait on the republican hook.

If the McKinley administration wins on its record, the prospects of the country for honesty and self-respect will be in a bad way.

Comrades E. V. Debs, Berger and Stedman left Chicago last Friday to attend a meeting at New York. In next week's Herald the outcome of this meeting will be reported.

Wyoming is going to be heard from. T. C. Tidball, formerly national committeeman of the people's party, has resigned and is in the field organizing the S. D. P.

A prominent supporter of Bryan in 1896, W. J. Walker, says the state of Washington will show 15,000 votes for the Socialist ticket.

INDIVIDUALISM RIPE FOR CHANGE

Amid all the turmoil of the political world, the careful student of economics can see that there is but one problem worthy of public attention. History takes cognizance of several thousand years in the life of the human race, during which time we have lived under a system of individualism. This system has reached its highest attainment. It has fulfilled its mission in that it has preserved the strongest, in that it has developed the survival of the fittest. Under its workings the best in material civilization has been attained. Its motto has been "Every one for himself, everything for itself, that the strongest and best may survive." We do not contend that this system has not been the best for the world until the present time, and we do not pretend to say that a continuation of this system would not in the ages to come, as in the ages past, tend to develop the race along material lines. We think we can clearly see that under its operations the strong Anglo-Saxon race would become the conquerors of the world, and that in a material sense progress would be unchecked. * * * * *

However, a system to be accepted for all time must be judged by the sum total of its effects. When we judge the individualistic system in this way, we can see untold misery and suffering for a large part of the human race. The first great instinct of man is to live, the second is to live happily. Individualism knows no humanity. Its vital principle is selfishness. It gets all it can and keeps it for its own pleasure. It carries its selfishness beyond the grave, giving to its posterity all it has created, with the injunction attached that the next in line of succession add as much thereto as possible. In order that individualism injure no one, it needs for its operation limitless space. So long as it does not take all, no misery results, but when it reaches the limits of a given space, then the master and slave are created. * *

* * * We live in a world confined to so many square miles. These square miles are confined to so many acres and acres to rods and rods to feet. In other words we have a fixed and inextensible space for our abode. With the people who are to live and draw their sustenance from this space, there is no such limit. The multiplication of the species is the unwritten law of nature. Now, let us state the problem more clearly for our consideration. First, a limited space from which to draw our sustenance; second, a population constantly and inevitably expanding; third, an individualistic system which gives to individuals a fixed and permanent control of a given space and the resources thereof; fourth, the inevitable accretion on the part of the naturally strong and the loss of all holding on the part of the weak; fifth, the "few" children born with the legal right to the control of all the resources of the earth and the "many" of posterity, with no privilege to the use of the earth excepting as they may pay tribute to the few; sixth, millionaires and tramps, landlords and tenants, masters and slaves, control of the earth, the liberty, the person and the destiny of the many by the few. Let us admit that individualism will build great navies, construct guns of enormous size, and projectiles of great destructive power; that it will produce magnificent architecture; that it will develop man's material genius by the strife engendered by individual rivalry and the desire on the part of each man to surpass his neighbor, but also let us admit that it will inevitably destroy democracy and equality, and that it will absorb into the hands of the few all the natural resources of the earth; that it is the destroyer of happiness, of honor, of virtue, of all the finer sensibilities of the race, and that it is the promoter of crime, beggary, vice and all the warlike and barbaric instincts of man. * * * * *

The question for solution now is, "Which is to be more considered, property rights and the perpetuation of the same, or human life and the happiness of the race?" If we are to promote the latter, we must change our system. We must take away from the few the right to own and bequeath the earth and the fullness thereof, and place all the resources of the land at the disposal of the race to be used only for sustaining of life. The state, the body of people collectively, must become the protector and sustainer of every human life. We must substitute for individualism the system of co-operation. These two systems are wholly at variance with each other. They cannot be compromised in any way. The one champions the right of the individual to take all that strength and cunning will give, and to use that for his own selfish desires, while the other champions the right of every man to the free use of that which will sustain life and promote happiness. Individualism is brutal. It is barbaric. It is cannibalistic and belongs with the dark ages from which man has emerged. It has served its purpose and if longer continued will involve the world in misery and pain too great for expression. The co-operative system is human, Christian, brotherly. It conceives all mankind as having a common interest in life. It defends the weak, champions the oppressed, promotes all that is good and beautiful in human character. It will give happiness and contentment to all the people. Vice, crime and all the relics of barbarism will disappear under its mellowing influence. Shall we be barbarians or humanitarians? Is the question we must solve and solve soon. The capitalistic parties stand for individualism and barbarism. The Socialists are for co-operation and humanity.

Lone Tree, Iowa.

A NEW POLITICAL CODE

Pitch party to the devil, boys—let's take a pull together,
And see what progress we can make when working for ourselves;
Too long we've followed demagogues, as sheep do the bell-wether,
And when they got in office they laid us on the shelves.
Select the men for candidates who stood the brunt of battle
Before stern railway managers, who sought to take their lives,
The men who fought for justice where fierce war of words did rattle,
Though oft it meant starvation for their little ones and wives.

Pitch party to the devil, boys—choose men who never faltered
When hunger and the blacklist awaited their defeat;
Who never sold their manhood or their code of justice altered,
If the battle went against them and compelled them to retreat.
Republicans and democrats, and populists and others,
Always used us and denied us every right for which we fought;
So, hereafter, choose our candidates from amongst our faithful brothers,
Those who faced the foe to aid us—they're the men who can't be bought.
—Shandy Maguire, in Locomotive Firemen's Magazine.

FROM A DEAD NUMBER

Editor Social Democratic Herald—My Dear Comrade: I am so well pleased with the vote on the fusion of the two Socialist parties, that I must send in congratulations. To my mind a union, at this time, and in such an unsatisfactory way, was an absolute impossibility. I am glad the name—Socialist Democratic party—came out whole. The name is a winner. It is sufficiently American to suit every American. It covers the whole reform question. To change the name would be taking a step backward. Our enemies would rejoice over such a step. Every true reformer and Socialist will come over to it in time. A ship that is sailing on as grandly as Social Democracy will never go begging for passengers or crew.

For reasons once stated in the Herald, I have been a dead number in the reform world, but I never once forgot to be a Socialist. No honest man ever renounced Socialism after being truly converted to the cause. Socialism is politics and religion amalgamated into one gospel. To work for the good of man is far more tangible than to work for the glory of God. To love the creature is the highest respect man can render to the Creator. Nothing on earth higher than man; nothing anywhere higher than his Creator. Food and shelter for the creature is veneration for the Creator; justice for man is the highest tribute we can offer to the author of human existence; and Socialism includes all.

If human life is not sacred, if human justice is not sacred, if an opportunity for all to earn a livelihood is not sacred, then nothing is sacred, and the whole universe is a miserable farce—a nightmare of hunger and want—a dream among moldy graves—a skeleton in rags—a mockery—a gall-covered curse.

Labor can win a victory this year without electing a single candidate. Every vote is a victory—pile them up. The old party sharks are already a-tremble. The creators of wealth should be the creators of law. They should be the supreme judges, they should be the government, they should own the world.

But how can we arouse enthusiasm in monopoly cursed Pennsylvania? These poor slaves are still owned by the bosses, and the bosses are owned, body and soul, by the corporations. They will not read, they will not think, they will not act like free men. We have not a single paper to teach them the truth. We need newspapers that publish all the news, the same as the plute papers, and teach Socialism in small doses. A thoroughly Socialist paper scares them. Their mental stomach is weak, their brains are dulled with superstition and prejudice; moral cowardice is in the very air, conscience lies sleeping, liberty is dead.

I fear it would be a waste of powder to hunt for such timid game. Perhaps it is best to talk to people who will listen, who will read and who will think. Our people only drift with the tide, and we must wait here until the flood reaches our shore. We have no organizations, no leaders, no workers, no one to rouse the sleeping wage slaves for the battle this year.

Let us work this year in localities where the cause is beginning to flourish, where the fire of truth is already lighted, where the hope of freedom is already a part of human life, where men are ready and willing to take hold, where the shackles are already broken, where the hearts beat strong, where the warm blood courses through responsive veins, and where laboring men realize that they are the only source of wealth.

Jersey Shore, Pa. Jacob Huff.

SOCIALISM THE SUPREME FORCE

By George Dales

Socialism is the ripe fruit of pure democracy, made imperative and inevitable by the conditions arising out of the socialization of industry and intercourse, and is the only condition possible finally to a free, enlightened and moral people. Philosophically, it is based upon the highest conception of justice, and recognizes for the first time in history in connection with human polity the mutuality of all true human interests, and that equality which nature so indelibly and persistently stamps upon mankind.

Historically, Socialism is phenomenal and unique; as a world movement it has no parallel; born of social necessity, it comes in its due time and order, and, where the social seed field is especially favorable, it wins its way with the most imperfect and sometimes unconscious propaganda. Ignoring all fortuitous distinctions, appealing to the truly human in man, it sweeps into its ever-swelling ranks the earnest, the thoughtful and best of every race.

Intellectually, it is, to the honest and unprejudiced, irresistible, satisfying alike the proof-demanding, systematic thinker as readily as the common-sense trusting mass of humanity. Rather than utopian, it is the widest possible application of common-sense to human relationships in the place of inherited prejudice and privilege with their countless train of barbarities.

Socialism has many teachers, but no prophets, and is not taught by authority, ever keeping the "open door" to the expanding mind and soul, and multiplies cause with its own mysterious rapidity because nothing short of it fully satisfies man's natural impulse toward perfection. Its root principle has been the inspiration of the noblest in all times, and all that is sweet and strong and true in philosophy, art, religion and literature is making for Socialism as truly as the gigantic economic forces of today. While the material and economic side is properly advanced first, being the basis and governing all other conditions, Socialism carries more in its lap than bread. Fraternity, a true social communion, now impossible, it is the mighty touch of nature making the whole world kin—it is the great heart-beat of humanity.

A REMARKABLE EDITORIAL

A correspondent recently wrote the New York Evening Journal asking what were the four greatest movements in the world today. The paper replied in a long editorial, headed "Earth's Four Great Movements, and a Fifth That Makes the Four Seem Petty." The four movements it specified were: 1. The struggle of Russia to get world territory. 2. The counter movement of England to absorb the world. 3. The German army, forming a formidable obstacle to Russian invasion of western Europe. 4. The Roman church. After explaining these the editorial goes on to say:

"These four movements in their effect on the fourteen hundred millions of human insects who inhabit this earth seem to us most important."

"More important than any of them, more important than all of them combined, perhaps, is the present movement toward industrial combination, generally spoken of as the formation of trusts."

"This extraordinary step in human social evolution must bring these results:

"Abolition of competition, which political economy has hitherto held permanently essential to human progress. Abolition of the individual, of individual prowess, as a factor in further human progress. (?)

"Compulsory control of government—that is to say, by all the people—of all industries."

"INAUGURATION OF NATIONAL AND ULTIMATELY INTERNATIONAL SOCIALISM. That is to say, of a system of society in which all the affairs of men will be managed by the social organism for the benefit of the social organism; and no longer by individuals for individuals, as our affairs are managed now."

"Study this great movement of industrial organization. It is the most important on our earth now."

The attention of Branch Secretaries is called to the revised constitution in this week's paper. It is submitted for a referendum vote. Secretaries will please bring it to the notice of their Branches without delay.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Don't forget the entertainment and dance under Branch No. 7, Chicago, auspices, Friday evening, at Hygeia hall.

Branches Nos. 4 and 6 of Rockville, Conn., will have an outing at Niederwerfer's grove, May 27, to which all comrades and their friends are invited.

Mrs. Corinne Brown addressed a meeting at 65 North Clark street on the question, "What Position Shall Women Take in the Political World?" There was a good attendance and an interesting discussion followed the address.

Branches Nos. 4 and 7, Chicago, will make arrangements for a lawn party and a merry time at 1541 Central boulevard in the near future, when Social Democrats and their friends will be expected to turn out to the last man.

Friday evening, May 25, an entertainment and dance will be given at Hygeia hall, under the auspices of branch 7 of the S. D. P. It is hoped that there will be a large turn out of Socialists and their friends on this occasion.

The following state committee has been elected in New Hampshire: Chairman, Charles H. Mellen, Somersworth; vice-chairman, S. F. Clafin, Manchester; secretary, George Howe, Manchester; treasurer, C. G. Levan, Manchester; organizer, J. H. Bartlett, Bedford.

Beginning next Sunday afternoon a series of meetings will be held at Arena hall, 594 East Sixty-third street, to which the public is cordially invited. The hour set for these meetings is 3 o'clock. The addresses will be given by Social Democrats, to be followed by discussion.

An error occurred in the report of the Illinois state convention last week. The committee elected to represent the party in negotiations for political co-operation with the S. L. P. was not correctly given. Those chosen to serve on the committee were F. G. Strickland, R. H. Johnson, H. H. Fraeich, Seymour Steadman, W. C. Horgan, Ellen Edwards and Mrs. Corinne Brown.

A large number of Social Democrats enjoyed an unusually pleasant evening on Wednesday, May 16, at the home of Comrade W. C. Horgan, Fulton street. The occasion was the marriage of Comrade Michael Holsinger and Miss Maud Horgan. About 130 invited guests were present, and the merry-making time had long been remembered. Mr. and Mrs. Holsinger have the best wishes of a host of friends.

The Herald learns with great pleasure of the continued advocacy of the principles of Social Democracy by the Rev. Father Grady, at Covington, Ky., and vicinity. On Tuesday, May 15, he delivered an eloquent and inspiring lecture to an enthusiastic audience of about 500 at Odd Fellows' Hall, Covington. This is his fourth lecture within three months. The branch at Covington is flourishing.

VOTE ON THE CONSTITUTION

The following constitution is submitted to the membership for a referendum vote. It was adopted at the Indianapolis convention to be referred to the members for approval or rejection. Branches are requested to take it up at once and report action through their local secretaries to the national secretary, 126 Washington street, Chicago, not later than June 23. The question is on the adoption or rejection of the constitution as it stands, and the vote must be Yes or No.

NATIONAL ORGANIZATION.

Section 1. This organization shall be known as the Social Democratic Party of America, and its headquarters shall be located at such place as the national conventions of the party may appoint, or as may be fixed by the National Executive Board subject to a referendum vote.

Sec. 2. The Social Democratic Party of America shall be organized as follows:

First—Local branches limited to five hundred members each.

Second—A National Executive Board of nine members, five of whom shall be chosen from territory convenient to the national headquarters, and shall be called "resident members," and the remaining four shall be chosen, so far as possible, from other parts of the country. All members of the Executive Board shall have equal rights and powers; but the resident members shall have power to act and a majority of said resident members shall constitute a quorum. The non-resident members shall not be required to be present at all meetings of the board, but shall be kept advised of all proceedings of the board. The Executive Board shall be elected by the national convention.

Third—The form of state organizations shall be left to the branches in the respective states.

EXECUTIVE BOARD.

Sec. 3. The Executive Board shall have supervision of the party organization, and shall have power to provide such rules, issue such orders and adopt such measures as may be required to carry out the object of the organization; provided, that no action shall be taken which will conflict with the constitution and declaration of principles.

Sec. 4. The National Secretary, Treasurer and editor of the national organ, and such other officers as may be required, shall be elected, and their salaries fixed by the Executive Board, to be approved by the direct vote of the party members through the referendum; and they and each of them may be removed by the Executive Board, subject to such referendum.

Sec. 5. The office of National Secretary and Treasurer may be held by the same person. Such Secretary and Treasurer shall make a report of the financial standing of the party semi-annually, to be given to the branches, and shall make a report to the Executive Board whenever required by it.

Sec. 6. Members of the Executive Board shall receive no compensation for their services. They shall hold annual and stated meetings at times to be fixed by the Board, and such special meetings as may be required; reasonable notice shall be given to each of the members of the Executive Board of all meetings.

Sec. 7. Any member of the National Executive Board may be removed, and his successor elected by a referendum vote, as hereinafter provided. All vacancies in the Executive Board, however occurring, shall be filled by the remaining members of the board, subject to a referendum vote.

Sec. 8. At each annual meeting of the board the officers of the board shall render complete reports of the transactions of their several offices, and transmit a copy thereof to each local branch.

REVENUES AND FUNDS.

Sec. 9. The revenue of the organization shall be derived from an admission fee of twenty-five cents for each member, and quarterly dues of twenty-five cents for each member, payable in advance on the first days of January, April, July and October.

Sec. 10. The funds of the organization shall be deposited in such bank or banks as the board may direct; and the National Secretary and Treasurer shall be required to execute a bond for the faithful performance of his duties in such an amount as the board may require.

OFFICIAL PAPER.

Sec. 11. This organization shall continue the publication of the official paper, called the Social Democratic Herald, under the supervision of the Executive Board. Each member of the organization shall be entitled to a copy of the official paper in consideration of the payment of quarterly dues.

Sec. 12. The columns of the national organ shall be open at all times to reasonable criticism and discussion of party matters by members of the party.

NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

Sec. 13. The national conventions of the organization shall be held quadrennially at some date prior to the first of June, and at such place as shall be decided upon by the National Executive Board, subject to referendum vote.

REFERENDUM.

Sec. 14. The National Executive Board may submit any question to a referendum vote of all the members of the party in good standing. The referendum vote may also be had upon the petition of ten local branches addressed to the National Executive Board, requesting such board to submit any proposition therein specified to such referendum vote; and upon the receipt of such petition said board shall forthwith so submit such proposition.

Upon the submission of any proposition to a referendum vote not less than three weeks shall be allowed for amendments to such proposition; and not less than six weeks, after the expiration of said three weeks, shall be allowed for the transmission of the votes to the Executive Board; provided, that if the votes transmitted by all the branches in good standing shall have been received by the board before the expiration of such time, the board shall announce the result of such vote forthwith.

LOCAL BRANCHES.

Sec. 15. Any respectable person who subscribes to the principles of the Social Democratic Party and severs all connection, and renounces allegiance to all other political parties, shall be eligible to membership.

Sec. 16. A local branch shall consist of not less than five, and not more than five hundred members. Branches shall fix their own quorum.

Sec. 17. Any person desiring membership shall make application to the local branch, upon being recommended by a member of said branch. And if accepted by a majority vote, shall be enrolled as a member. Upon objection to his admission being made, the matter shall be referred by the branch to the Central Committee of the locality, which shall have power to act in the matter. In case the decision of the local committee shall be against the applicant, upon appeal by the said person, or by the branch to which he has applied, the National Executive Board shall have power of final action in the matter.

Sec. 18. Any member of good standing in one branch may, upon the request, be transferred to another branch; and the Secretary of the branch in which he holds his membership shall, for that purpose, furnish him with a transfer card.

Sec. 19. A member in good standing may terminate his or her membership by obtaining from the Secretary of such branch the card of withdrawal.

Sec. 20. Each member shall be entitled to a card of membership, to be furnished by the National Executive Board, and issued to the members by the Secretary of the local branch.

DUES AND FEES.

Sec. 21. The admission fee which shall accompany each application for membership shall be twenty-five cents, which shall be forwarded to the National Executive Board.

Sec. 22. The dues of the members shall be fixed by the branch; but such dues shall be sufficient to include twenty-five cents per quarter, to be paid on the first day of January, April, July and October in each year to the National Executive Board.

Sec. 23. At the close of each meeting of a local branch the Treasurer thereof shall transmit to the National Secretary the names of all members admitted at said meeting, their postoffice addresses, and a remittance by postal money order of their admission fee.

Sec. 24. A member admitted on or before the middle of a quarter shall pay dues for the full quarter. A member admitted after the middle of a quarter shall be exempt for that quarter.

Sec. 25. On or before the fifth day of each quarter the Treasurer of each local branch shall remit by postal money order the quarterly dues for the current quarter to the National Executive Board, and each local branch shall be responsible for and remit the full amount due for the entire membership of the branch.

Sec. 26. The officers of the branch shall consist of a Secretary, Treasurer and Organizer, and such other officers as may be determined by the branch; said officers shall be elected at each annual meeting and serve until their successors are qualified. They shall perform such duties as appertain to their several offices, and as the local branch may direct. Any officer of the branch may be removed by a majority vote of the members of the branch.

Sec. 27. Each local branch shall hold at least one business meeting a month, and such other meetings as they may see fit.

Sec. 28. At the annual meeting the officers shall submit complete reports of the transactions of their several offices for the preceding year.

Sec. 29. Branches shall be numbered with reference to states, the numbers to be assigned by the National Executive Board.

Sec. 30. The National Executive Board shall issue a charter to each branch, which charter may be suspended or revoked by the National Executive Board in case of violation of the laws, principles or regulations of the organization, subject to referendum vote.

Sec. 31. Persons intending to organize a new local branch shall apply to the then existing city or state committee of the locality where said branch is to be located, for its endorsement; and upon receiving such endorsement shall forward to the National Executive Board their application, together with the names and addresses of the proposed members, and their admission fees and dues. The National Executive Board shall thereupon, if they find the application in regular form, issue a charter to such person.

In case there shall be no such Central Committee the application shall be made direct to the National Executive Board.

Sec. 32. The local branch may adopt such by-laws as the majority of its members may determine, provided they do not conflict with this constitution or the platform and declaration of principles of the party.

Sec. 33. Any member violating the laws or principles of the organization may be suspended or expelled by a two-thirds vote of the members in good standing of the local branch of which he is a member; provided, that any charges against such member shall be preferred in writing, and the accused shall be entitled to a fair trial. The person so accused, if dissatisfied with the decision of the local branch, may appeal to the National Executive Board, and the person or persons preferring such charges shall have a like appeal to the National Executive Board. The action of the Executive Board on such case shall be final.

Sec. 34. This constitution shall be in force and effective from and after its endorsement by a majority in a referendum vote of the membership of the party in good standing.

Sec. 35. This constitution may be amended by a referendum vote as hereinabove provided.

Sec. 36. Under no circumstances shall the Social Democratic Party fuse with or act with any other political party, either in national or local elections, unless such party shall have substantially the same platform and principles as the Social Democratic Party.

"We firmly believe that all questions that affect the whole people, not only of today, but of the future as well, should be referred to the people for a referendum vote, for we maintain that it is a power too great to rest in the hands of a few men. Believing this, we also believe we were right in asking our representative to use his influence and vote to refer to the people, for while on all questions there will be a larger or smaller majority, still the fact remains that all have an equal opportunity to express their desire. It is right and just government; it is equality; it is the position we take, and insist

The French elections for the municipal councils—in France every parish or commune has a local council—will take place next month. The general committee of the Socialist party has issued an appeal to the electors pointing out that it is highly important that great efforts should be made to win as many seats as possible, because the work done by these councils is very important.

There is also an intermediary doctrine which 'deserves special mention because it is so generally followed. Morality, according to this theory, is the product of the egoism of the human species, or, as others express it, the product of our altruistic instincts. These are at bottom egoistic instincts, but they find their satisfaction, nevertheless, in the performance of just and benevolent acts. Thus, according to some writers, moral acts either result from the mere pleasure afforded by doing good, or emanate from that feeling of pity which vibrates in the hearts of most men, and urges

Whole No. 100.

POPULAR EDUCATION AS INFLUENCED BY CAPITALISM

The celebrated German leader of the Social-Democratic party, Comrade Bebel, said once: "In the last instance the solution of all social problems depends on popular education." Indeed the most powerful tool and weapon of the human kind is the intellect. Education is the process of perfecting this tool and weapon. As any other tool or weapon—the intellect may be used for the good and advantage of society or misused for the purpose of furthering of wrongfully understood individual or class interests to the detriment of society. Education, or rather instruction, does not necessarily improve morals, does not insure against selfishness and other vices of individual hypertrophy. And a highly educated rogue is of course a thousand times more dangerous to society than a stupid ignoramus. There is therefore always an abundance of social abuses in a country where education is monopolized by a few, while the nation at large is buried in dense ignorance. And the stronger numerically the class of the educated in comparison with the "great unwashed" mass of the population, the greater and deeper the social abuses are likely to be. That ratio between the educated and ignorant of any epoch or country may justly be considered as an indicator of the extent and degree of social abuses. It is so easy for the intellectually superior to exploit the ignorant and the temptation is so powerful that only exceptionally high-minded and generous individuals will abstain from doing it or go to the extent of helping the weak in his uneven struggle.

For the thoughtful student and observer of national life, it is not the education of individuals and classes, but the instruction of the masses, that has the highest value. Develop the intellect of the "great unwashed" if you want to eliminate or at least lessen the possibility of its being exploited by the crafty and unscrupulous few, forming the so-called "higher class." It is a notorious fact that the ruling individuals (kings, czars, popes) and classes (aristocracy, clergy and plutocracy) were and are openly or at heart, opposed to the mental elevation of the masses exploited by them. Parasites thrive best in darkness.

It is obviously of the highest importance to ascertain the degree of mental instruction actually enjoyed by the people at large by the so-called "lower classes." Unfortunately the statistical data on this subject is very incomplete, as far as the United States is concerned. And yet attempts have been made to generalize these statistical data—among others by my friend, the sociologist, Daniel Folkmar. Here are some of them relating to Chicago and Milwaukee:

- Of all the children that enter the public schools of the two named cities
1. About one-third go no further than the first grade.
 2. About one-half go no further than the second grade.
 3. About two-thirds go no further than the third grade.
 4. About three-fourths go no further than the fourth grade.
 5. About nine-tenths go half way only through the twelve grades.
 6. About ninety-seven in every hundred drop out before reaching the high school.
 7. Only three in every thousand finish the entire course, or more exactly the following per cents drop out at each grade:

Grade 1, 32 per cent; 2, 51; 3, 66; 4, 78; 5, 86; 6, 92; 7, 95; 8, 97; 9, 98.6; 10, 99.3; 11, 99.7.

Another line of argument leads to the conclusion that the schooling of the average pupil does not embrace more than three grades. If these numbers are not appalling I do not know what is! The self-complacent average American citizen is justly proud of the public school system, but he little knows to what extent the people are able to take advantage of it. But maybe Chicago and Milwaukee form an exception as to the duration of school attendance? Ex-State Superintendent C. L. T. Smart of Ohio states that only about 3 per cent of the pupils enrolled in the public schools ever enter, and from them less than 1 per cent graduate; 50 per cent of the youth enrolled in the public schools of the state do not attend school more than four years; 75 per cent stop attending school before entering the eighth year or grade, and 97 per cent do not attend beyond the eighth year. Dr. Wm. T. Harris, United States Commissioner of Education, says in his report of the committee of fifteen: "The average number of pupils of the St. Louis schools in the lowest three years of the course was about 72 per cent of the number enrolled. Nearly three-fourths of all the pupils of the public schools are in the studies of the first three years or in primary studies. Six-sevenths of the population of the United States on arriving at the proper age for the secondary education never receive it. Thirty out of thirty-one fail to receive higher education upon arriving at the proper age. Obviously the data of Milwaukee and Chicago are typical for the United States in general. The question now arises—what is the main cause of this remarkably short duration of school attendance? Mr. C. L. T. Smart says: "A majority of the patrons of the public schools cannot do without the labor of their children and therefore cannot give them time to attend school longer." Prof. D. Folkmar states: "I answer without hesitation that the chief factors are economic conditions. Too many either cannot support their children as they desire, or cannot spare them through a longer period of schooling."

The Moloch of Capitalism wants to perpetuate itself by the shameful system of child labor and keeping the industrial proletariat in ignorance. The free public school proves to be a snare and delusion for the proletarian. And the remedies? Many advocate compulsory education laws. But is not then the state obliged to take care of the children during their schooling; feed, dress and lodge them if their parents are unable to do it? Is not the state in duty bound to make the free public school system "really free and public?" But that would be Socialism pure and simple. And what would the capitalist Mrs. Grundy say to it? Isadore Ladoff.

LEGISLATION AS IT IS

By Charles Trench

It is the fashion of back newspapers and spread-eagle orators to pronounce the system of government in this country so absolutely perfect that there is little if any room for improvement. Vernal politicians allow no opportunity to pass without dilating, volubly, upon the excellence of "our glorious institutions," and the boundless prosperity with which we are favored by our tariff laws and industrial policy.

Many are, unfortunately, duped and humbugged by this profitable buncombe, and are unaware that it emanates, chiefly, from lying parasites who are bribed with the gold which capitalists grind out of the toil of white slaves in mill, mine and field.

It is fortunate, however, for the cause of labor that the majority of the working classes are becoming alive to the falseness and venality of profligate politicians, and take their statements and patriotic effusions for what they are worth. There are, in fact, few men of average information and intelligence who do not regard American legislation with the profoundest contempt. What with money kings and legislative hirelings on one side, and wholesale bribery and speculation on the other, the very name of American government has become a byword of contempt and derision over the civilized world.

One of the unwritten mottos of our political morals seems to say, in the plainest language, "Successful wrong is right, and the devil take the hindmost." I hazard nothing in affirming that we are under the heel of one of the vilest and most arrogant oligarchies that ever robbed the poor. It needs no particular exercise of the perceptive faculties to see that millionaires, deficient in the very elements of morality, are increasing with portentous rapidity, and that their enormous wealth is obtained by squeezing the small man. Our lawmakers are their obsequious lackeys, ever ready to enrich the few by impoverishing the many. Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands have also got into the clutches of official miscreants who show the unfortunate natives the meaning of American government. The embezzlement of millions of dollars in the Postoffice Department, and the forging of bogus stamps are among the rascalities which the Cubans are experiencing under McKinley imperialism. "We are so careful of criminals," (of this type) says the New York Herald, "that we actually breed them, encourage them, and assure them of immunity."

To further illustrate my meaning. A well-known capitalist was solicited to contribute to a campaign fund, he was assured that a liberal contribution would secure a friendly majority.

"Possibly it might," replied the millionaire, "but according to my judgment it would be cheaper to wait till after the election and then buy the legislature ready made."

This, my working friends, is precisely the form of government that is mercilessly plundering and degrading the masses of our people. "It damns the common herd," says the New York Herald, "and stands godfather to trusts and monopolies."

In view of these considerations, surely it is the very madness of folly to believe that the present reign of hell and anarchy can be put an end to by legislation which is completely under the control of those who profit and thrive under it.

The leaders of the Bryan Democracy promise the people that in the event of their party being installed in office the whole power of government will be directed against trusts and imperialism. But, with facts against them, with monopoly against them, and a hostile supreme court against them, what success can they achieve? Such a proposition carries absurdity upon its very face. No event can be more destitute of probability.

Moreover, trusts are the product of civilization and development; to attempt to abolish them is to attempt to turn back the tide of progress. When the people seize the trusts, and work them for the benefit of all, then they, like machinery, will prove a blessing instead of a blighting curse to humanity. Weapons which may be safely trusted in the hands of the public become fatal implements of mischief when wielded by individuals.

With undeniable facts staring us in the face, is it not high time for us to grip the truth, and quit vamping about legislation as a remedy against monopoly and trusts? Indeed, I do not hesitate to predict that if we tarry till we obtain justice from either of the old parties we shall all die of old age, or want, with nothing to show for our forbearance but the usual array of big promises and beggarly performances.

TREND OF THE TIMES AND THE REGULARITY OF CRISES

Mr. James Cotter Morison in his "Service of Man," written some years ago, predicted that, at the then rate of decline, a point would before long be reached when the employer would get little or no return for his capital invested and when the workman would be able to get no adequate wage for the labor he gives. Said he:

"Competition is now everywhere of the keenest, and cheapness of production the primary object. The result is a race in which no competitor can absolutely win, but one in which all must in process of time, become exhausted. For there is no fixed goal to be reached; the goal flies before the runners, and the first in the race cannot avoid ultimate collapse. In each country manufacturers compete among themselves, while they compete also with their foreign rivals. Constantly improved machinery enables a larger output at less cost to be thrown upon the market, with the obvious effect, now distressing everybody, of a well-nigh universal glut, and a growing cheapness never before witnessed. In the meantime, profits on capital and wages of labor are tending to the vanishing point; and the only question is, how long it will be before that point is reached. . . . Any industry may be killed, as it were by enchantment, by the discovery of new means of cheaper production. The instability of industries is frightful. The commercial atmosphere is more uncertain and capricious than the physical atmosphere, though that is generally taken as a symbol of uncertainty. . . . If it be asked what inference I draw from such facts, the answer is that it is a melancholy one. I believe we are approaching to a great catastrophe in our industrial system, which will be a calamity without precedent since the black death of the fourteenth century."

In referring to the same thing another writer has remarked that while in former periods society was tormented with such plagues, caused, as we now know, by ignorance and consequent violations of the laws of health, our era has been cursed with financial crisis, occurring far more frequently, than plagues, and causing with each occurrence as much, if not more, misery. These seasons of business depression bring ruin to capitalists and distress to laborers, and are inherent in the capitalist system. During a crisis the smaller capitalists are swallowed up as if by a veritable maelstrom, itself the direct result of private enterprise and unrestricted competition. The mischief wrought during one of these periods, both to capital and labor, and through them to all the interests of society, is appalling.

"When mills shut down and warehouses filled with goods are locked up; when mines are idle, ships laid up, money stowed away in bank vaults, trades paralyzed and multitudes of workmen forced into idleness, to starve in the midst of plenty, or to recruit the ranks of vice and crime, it becomes a matter of the deepest concern, not only to political economy, but to the state and society generally."

For above two hundred years these crises have occurred with mysterious regularity once in about every ten years throughout the civilized world.

"The first three years generally exhibit depression, then you have three years of healthy trade, and then come, say, two years of excited trade. Your ninth year is a bubble and your tenth year is its explosion and collapse."

Rodbertus, an eminent and conservative German economist, maintained that these crises result from the fact that the laborer's share of all goods produced continually decreases. When first enunciated, his theory created a profound impression, and as time goes on the truth of his proposition becomes more and more evident. It is thus illustrated:

"Suppose all goods produced annually amount to a thousand units; the units may be anything—a horse or a house. These thousand units must be divided among four parties—landlords, capitalists, laborers and the state. Landlords take 300; capitalists, 300; laborers, 300, and the state, 100; total, 1,000. Now, if production increases there is no crisis so long as these proportions are maintained; laborers have means to purchase what is produced for them. But the moment products increase these proportions are not maintained; laborers' proportionate share diminishes; capitalists find their share increasing. It is not needed for consumption, and so new factories are built and more goods produced for workmen who cannot buy them; goods are heaped up. Then comes a crash. During the season of depression society supports the poor, capitalists become relatively reduced, and surplus goods are consumed, and things get so far righted that business starts up again, but always in such a way as to handicap the laborers, for so many are seeking work that the employers can dictate wages."

Thus the International Working People's Association declares that:

"The increase of products, accompanied by simultaneous decrease of the average incomes of the working mass of the people leads to so-called business and commercial crises, when the misery of the wage-workers is forced to the extreme."

We have here the result of the practical workings of the profit system. I have never seen this more concisely depicted than in that powerful chapter devoted by Edward Bellamy in his "Equality" to "The Parable of the Water Tank." There will be found the story of a certain very dry land, the people whereof were in sore need of water.

"Certain men, more crafty and diligent than the rest, managed to gather stores of water where others could find none, and these men were called capitalists. They would not give the people water except they became their servants, working for them on these terms: 'For every bucket that ye bring to us, that we may pour into the tank, which is the Market, behold! we will give you a penny; but for every bucket that we shall draw forth to give unto you that ye may drink of it, ye and your wives and children, ye shall give us two pennies, and the difference shall be our profit, seeing that if it were not for this profit we would not do this thing for you, but ye should all perish.' The result was that after a while, the tank overflowed, seeing that for every bucket the people poured in they received only so much as would buy again half a bucket. Receiving no more the pennies of the capitalists, they could buy no more water; this made 'dull times,' and finally a 'crisis.' The capitalists called in the soothsayers, and some called it 'overproduction' and some called it 'glut,' and some said it was by reason of spots on the sun, and yet others said it was because of 'lack of confidence.' The capitalists then sent them to the people, and to them the soothsayers expounded the mystery of overproduction, and how it was that they must needs perish of thirst because there was overmuch water, and how there could not be enough because there was too much. The people reviled them and asked: 'Will ye mock us? Doth plenty breed famine? Doth nothing come out of much?'"

Thus to quote the Rev. F. M. Sprague:

"Men go hungry when granaries and warehouses are bursting with provisions; they are ill-clad and naked in the presence of stores and factories piled to the roof with clothing; they are cold when God has laid at their feet mines and mountains of fuel. Robbed of their rightful inheritance, stripped and left half dead, they are passed by alike by the priest and Levite, who it is not unlikely are on their way to preach or lecture on 'How to Reach the Masses.'"

By reviewing our economic history for the past 40 years in relation to financial crises, we may perhaps find what justification, if any, Mr. Morison has for his unhappy prediction. In the United States since 1860 we have had closely following periods marked by the most prodigious increase in wealth-producing power the world has yet seen, a crisis or financial depression, not once in every ten years, but on an average of once in every six years. They have been as follows: 1861, 1866, 1869, 1873-77, 1884-86, 1890, 1893-97.

Thus the competitive system has been leading the American people on to disaster, not by a straight road, but by a wave-like path of comparative prosperity alternating with steadily increasing adversity. Jas. T. Van Rensselaer.

McKinley is responsible for the Cuban scandals. He it was who inaugurated the conditions for looters like Neeley by taking down the civil-service bars and opening the way for spoils-men.

Imperialism taking root in a republic is an evidence of political and commercial rotteness. It covers up schemes designed against the liberties of the people, and the capitalist favors it.

Make a note of it that the trusts will put up the campaign funds for the McKinleyites, notwithstanding the republican anti-trust resolutions to be adopted at Philadelphia.

THEY NEVER WANTED UNION

A careful review of all the incidents, writings, personal abuse and special pleading, from the hour when Harriman and Hilquit pledged themselves at Indianapolis that the name Social Democratic would be "the only one submitted to the conference of eighteen," down to the present time, when the fusionists propose to disregard a majority vote and repudiate the results of a referendum in a party with which the fusionists of the S. L. P. brand have no connection, will satisfy any honest man that these mouthers in the "sacred cause of fusion" never at any time really wanted union of the Socialist forces. The only time at which a genuine sentiment for union permeated a considerable body of Socialists was when the Indianapolis convention adjourned. Then there was a strong conviction, almost unanimously entertained, that the real Socialist working class movement had begun. The Herald proclaimed it, believed it, and rejoiced in it. Every Social Democrat who attended the convention and is not now deceiving himself or trying to discredit others, knows this to be true. Every honest man indorses the action of the executive board, taken when the revelation came from New York that those who had been the most hysterical shouters for union had by their actions made an honorable and real union impossible. But let that pass. The members of the Social Democratic party have by an emphatic majority declared against fusion—against being destroyed.

The Socialists of the United States, now rapidly affiliating with the Social Democratic party, more than eighty branches having been organized during the controversy are informed that the anti-deleon but thoroughly de-leonized faction of the Socialist Labor party has rejected an offer from Social Democrats for political co-operation in the approaching campaign. This offer they regarded as an "insult," and with true espeepee scorn refused to effect an arrangement in the political field whereby the cause of Socialism would be most effectively promoted.

The mask is off. The fusionists stand bared of all hypocrisy. It was not union they wanted, but the annihilation of the Social Democratic party organized in 1898. Their supreme and feverish desire was to capture our organization, extinguish many of those who had contributed to its remarkable growth and successes, and put back the Socialist movement into a "little box" somewhere down on the Atlantic coast.

A part of their inglorious undertaking was to "throw down Debs." In this Social Democrats will see to it that they fail as ignominiously as they have in their miserable attempt to wreck or capture a Socialist organization they did not control. When it was proposed in the New York meeting, a report of which written by Comrade Haile appears in this paper, that "now is our chance to down Debs, once for all," there was revealed in the flash of a moment an intention long held by these fusion hypocrites. This was proposed in a burst of passion; in that moment the S. L. P. delegates stood convicted of double dealing and all their lusty professions appeared in true colors and for what they were, worth-nothing.

Comrades of the Social Democratic party, the conspiracy will fail, and upon you, in the interest of the Socialist cause, devolves the pressing duty of making the failure emphatic and conclusive. A few in your own party have connived and co-operated with the S. L. P. to destroy your organization. This has been done under the guise of union. Its purpose was to bring your organization under the domination of the New York disorganizers. Stout hearts and ready hands are now required. Let every man stand firmly in his place. Those who have been misled and deceived will soon have their eyes opened to the situation. Our duty is to organize, to stand for the party, to be loyal to our organization. Do this and all will be well.

The mask is off. "Stand pat."

Mulhall, the well-known English authority, says that the energy or working power of the United States in 1895 was one hundred and twenty-eight thousand millions of foot tons per day. Carroll D. Wright has said that two hours and fifteen minutes' daily work by each able-bodied man, with free access to all the modern facilities of production, if systematically applied, would produce all the food, clothing and shelter that all the people of the United States need. Other authorities agree substantially with them. Yet we have a nation of eighty millions of people concerned chiefly with making ends meet, and a class controlling social wealth and living in such luxury as the world had never known until the capitalist system of production contrived the device of appropriating the surplus value of labor and using it as working capital.

Of course, you won't forget that Neely, who was chief financial agent of the Cuban postoffice department, and Rathbone, who was director-general of the Cuban posts, and E. P. Thompson, who was postmaster at Havana, are republicans who have been caught. You should remember, too, that Augustus Van Wyck, who has stock to the value of $400,000 in the American Ice company, and John F. Carroll, who has $500,000 worth of the same stock, and Mayor Van Wyck himself, who has 4,000 shares in the same ice trust, are all democrats. "You pays your money and takes your choice!"

The average workman now produces values covering his own cost of subsistence in from one to four hours' work out of a working day of ten hours. The balance of time—from six to nine hours daily—belongs to the capitalist employer. The latter does not object to a shortening of the working time necessary to produce what the worker must have to live on; but he does object to a reduction of the working time which belongs to him.

While the great strike, with all its suffering, is on in Chicago, the theater managers agree that the season just closing has been the best for them during a decade or more—perhaps never surpassed in the history of Chicago theaters. All the large playhouses averaged about $10,000 per week during the entire forty weeks of the season, and in a few cases nearly double that amount for special attractions. Strikes don't seem to hit all people alike.

We have the pleasure of announcing a contribution to the campaign fund of the Social Democratic party of $500 from Prof. George D. Herron and friends. This proof of Herron's sympathy with us in our work was sent from Palestine to Comrade Seymour Stedman. It is a most generous contribution and an earnest of future work for the party and the movement when he returns home in September.

What a purchased scribbler like John J. Ingalls may have to say about Socialism is of no consequence and can never disturb the equanimity of the convinced Socialist. It is, however, curious to notice to what deep damnation he subjects the system he attempts to defend when he says that "ninety-seven out of every one hundred Americans die penniless."

Last Sunday 10,000 Socialists gathered at Pere la Chaise cemetery, Paris, and hung wreaths upon the wall to commemorate the indiscriminate shooting of men, women and children at that place twenty-nine years ago. Group after group approached the wall, deposited the offering of flowers, shouted a revolutionary cry and departed.

Capital—a social product—is unpaid labor held by private individuals. It is used, not to promote industrial efficiency and social well-being, but as a means of appropriating more unpaid labor and thus acquiring more capital. Capital privately owned inevitably reduces the masses who produce it to dependence on the classes who possess it.

No thinking man can believe that progress and civilization have reached a limit in the present system. Social Democrats believe in a great political, economic and ethical change, brought about by industrial evolution. The change will bring larger individual liberty fitted to the conditions it must inaugurate.

The aim and purpose of Socialism is to give the producing class control over its own labor and its own product. To such a proposition, to its ultimate realization, there can be no effective opposition. It will become a social necessity. Its inherent justice is a guaranty of its realization.

After wire-pulling for ten days, like any other ordinary politicians, the delegates to the Methodist conference managed to elect two bishops who were "called of God" to that holy office.

Who said something about Cuban bandits?

THE FUSIONISTS REJECT POLITICAL CO-OPERATION

On Sunday morning, May 20, there were gathered at the Labor Lyceum, 64 East Fourth street, New York, seven members of the S. L. P.—Comrades Hilquit, Harriman, Stone, White, Sieverman, Fenner and Hayes, Benham and Barnes being absent—and eight of the former S. D. P. committee on union—Comrades Berger, Stedman, Hoehn, Carey, Chase, Butscher, Lonergan and Haile, Heath being absent. Eugene V. Debs was also present by request.

The meeting was called to order by Chase of Haverhill, who was thereupon nominated for chairman. At this point, and before the nomination was put, Stedman rose and said: "Before we proceed to organize this meeting, I want it clearly understood in what capacity we are here. I maintain that the vote of the S. D. P. determined the question of organic union and discharged the committee. I shall not act in this conference as a member of a present existing committee, but merely as an individual. It may be an informal conference; but that is as far as I am willing to go. I will not consent to act as a member of a committee which has been discharged by the majority of our party."

As the S. D. P. members were not all agreed upon this point, Stedman called for a caucus so that our members might decide among themselves what stand to take. Carey moved in opposition "that the committee on union of the S. D. P. meet here and now, and have their caucus in presence of the S. L. P. and the audience." In reply to a question from Stedman, "Will you meet a committee of the S. D. P.?" Carey replied "No." Lonergan alone consented. His motion, carried by 4 to 3. Stedman then called for a conference of the S. D. P. members who held that the committee on union no longer existed, and Berger, Stedman and Haile, together with Eugene V. Debs, adjourned to a committee room to confer, not as a committee on union, but as individuals. In about three minutes the other five—viz., Butscher, Carey, Chase, Hoehn and Lonergan—came into the room and announced their intention of taking part in our informal conference. The whole forenoon was spent in discussion as to whether we were a legal committee, whether political co-operation with the S. L. P. should be attempted, or whether organic union was still possible. Carey, Chase, Butscher and Hoehn held that the committee was still in existence in spite of the vote of the party, and could go ahead and consummate organic union, and were absolutely opposed to political union. Berger, Stedman and Haile maintained that the majority vote of the party had disposed of the question of organic union and discharged the committee, but that the two organizations might work along peaceably upon parallel lines, each in its own field, and unite upon a common ticket and co-operate in political campaigns.

Comrade Debs took the floor and said he would in unequivocal terms state his position. He had taken his stand against organic union of the two parties and he was more than ever convinced that his position and that of the executive board was right and would be completely vindicated in the course of events. "To be successful," said Debs, "union must be a mutual affair, entered into freely by both parties. Our party has by an emphatic majority decided that it wants no organic union at this time, and were the vote taken again that majority would be so overwhelming as to silence all controversy upon that point. It has been freely charged that the manifesto of the executive board is responsible for all the trouble; that but for this united party would have been assured. This is wholly untrue. The real mischief was done and our comrades were up in arms before the manifesto was even thought of. Following the actions and conclusions of the conference a condition of affairs developed spontaneously which made union an impossibility. I, with others, recognize this absolute fact. I took up my stand against union under such conditions, not because I was, or am, opposed to union, but because I was, and am, opposed to the wrecking of our party. I assume full responsibility for my action, and I have no apology to make for it. Let it be distinctly understood that I know my comrades are not responsible for the conditions which made union impossible. These had their origin long ago and the controlling purpose was to capture and secure control of our organization. Had this plan succeeded, our party would have been destroyed and the united party built upon its ruins would have been farther from a UNITED party than ever before.

"Enforced union under such conditions would prove abortive. There is no shadow of doubt about it. The party has expressed itself after hearing all the testimony, and it cannot be denied that the other side had a full hearing, for our branches were fairly deluged with their papers, circulars and letters.

"While denying that organic union is possible at this time, I am in favor of political co-operation. If it is claimed that this is not possible, then it must be conceded that organic union is out of the question, for certainly if we are unable to co-operate we are not ready to unite. For the moment some of our members, in their eagerness to see a united party, have been misled and deceived; but their sober second thought will soon bring them into line with the Social Democratic party, which will, in good time, give the country a truly united Socialist party."

After some further discussion, Butscher, notwithstanding the fact that the five had come of their own free will into the informal conference of individual members called by Stedman, attempted to commit the others to a recognition of the existence of the committee, by moving "that this committee on union, elected by the Indianapolis convention, do now adjourn to meet with the committee of the S. L. P. at 2 p. m., and proceed with negotiations for union." Chase, who was chairman, assisted him by hurriedly putting the motion: "It is moved—that we do—now—adjourn. All those in favor," but was stopped and requested to put the motion as made. He took the written motion from Butscher, and read: "It is moved that we adjourn and meet the S. L. P. committee," but was again stopped and requested to read it correctly, which he finally did. Berger, Stedman and Haile asserted that they had no right to put or entertain such a motion, they having come into our informal conference upon our terms; and, moreover, the party membership, a higher power than the convention, had discharged the committee which the convention elected. The five, however, voted together and carried the motion, and declared the meeting adjourned.

At 2:30 the above-mentioned five, who have taken the decision as to union out of the hands of the party, met with the committee of the S. L. P. in "joint committee." A few minutes later, Berger, Stedman, Debs and Haile entered the room. Stedman got the floor and said: "I perceive that this committee has met and organized. I wish to say that some of us, including Comrades Berger, Haile and myself, have come to the conclusion that the referendum vote of the S. D. P. has discharged this committee; that we have no power whatsoever to act on a continuation of any conference proceeding. We are, however, willing as individuals to do anything that may seem reasonable and proper to bring about political co-operation. This position on our part is not taken by virtue of the belief that we are still members of a previous committee, as that committee is out of existence, and we have no right to act upon it. I would then like to ask those of you who are present and who are members of this former committee, whether or not you desire that we should take part in carrying on any negotiations looking toward an understanding for a political co-operation, any plan formulated to be submitted to referendum?"

Carey moved that "only those take part in this meeting who recognize this as a legal meeting of the committee on union of the S. D. P."

Hilquit said (and this is a good answer to Debs' question, "How does it happen that the S. L. P. is in such a perfect frenzy about union at this particular time?"): "Our friends, who will probably not unite with us politically, will withdraw now. They will continue claiming that the S. D. P. has rejected union. A great many members of the S. D. P. will respectfully differ with them. The S. D. P. will differ with them. * * * It matters not whether 500 members, more or less, remain in the S. D. P.; the united party—the party consisting of the S. L. P. and the better part of the S. D. P.—will have the prestige. * * * If you think that this course of the N. E. B., with even their claimed majority of 200, with their entire methods or tactics as developed lately, with their brilliant arguments against unity—if you think that they have acquired much credit in the eyes of the working men of this country, you are greatly mistaken. They have not added to their credit in any way. On the contrary, OUR PARTY HAS."

Both he and Harriman positively rejected the proposition for political co-operation.

Sieverman offered an amendment to Carey's motion, "that this committee declares itself to be the legal committee on unity, and that it invites and urges all those who have been elected by their respective constituencies to act in this capacity to stay here with us until union is perfected," and in support of his amendment said: "Let us adopt this motion (the amendment) and in that way most effectually clip the wings of little pettifogging quibblers and get rid of them, and the sooner we get rid of them the better. There is no doubt that they will still have a party. There is no doubt that they will still have a number of adherents. There is no doubt that they will still be able to rouse enthusiasm when they mention a name, and when they mention a jail, but we will have the class-conscious Socialists of the country."

Carey accepted Sieverman's amendment, and it was put and carried.

Stedman, Berger, Debs and Haile then withdrew to consult, and speedily came to the conclusion that as they had declared themselves a legal committee and absolutely rejected our proposition of political co-operation, there was nothing left for us to do but to go home, which we did, after Stedman had announced this decision to the "joint committee."

What took place in the "joint committee," we have from the report of a dozen eye-witnesses and from the official count in the German Volkzeitung, an official organ of the anti-DeLeonites in New York.

On the opening of the conference, at 2:30, and before Berger, Stedman, Debs and Haile arrived, Carey made a speech, which closed with the words: "The time has now arrived to form a new Socialist party." After the withdrawal of Berger, Stedman, Debs and Haile, Hilquit moved that the conference declare itself as a conference of a new party, viz., of the Socialist party.

Carey, Chase and Hoehn urged that the name remain S. D. P. All of them conceded that the name was no good, but it should be retained as a matter of policy; otherwise they would lose Massachusetts. Carey stated, however, that after election he would not object to a change of name. At last Harriman moved that the united party shall be known in law and in history as the Social Democratic party. This was carried, and the provisional N. E. C. was empowered to authorize a change of the name in any state where the state organization might find it necessary or desirable.

This self-constituted committee of fusionists also decided to call upon the members of both parties to vote upon the report already submitted by the conference committee which met March 26, with "some amendments."

The question of a presidential candidate for the new party then came up, and Debs was proposed. Stone of New York said, "NO; now is our chance to down Debs, once for all." The audience hissed; and Hilquit raised a point of order that according to the constitution of the S. L. P. none but members of "the party" can be candidates. As they were in the process of organizing a party, and as no constitution had as yet been adopted, the excuse was somewhat thin; but it carried, and Chase, in the chair, declared the point well taken. The situation was a delicate one, and the meeting tactfully adjourned.

MARGARET HAILE.

Fail to See the Point

Dear Editor: A few weeks ago we received a circular from five comrades containing something about an "undemocratic" executive committee.

We failed to see the point. Now we read that these same five, "the highest constituted authority," have gone ahead with "union" after the majority had voted "no."

Perhaps the trouble is that our dictionary is a little off; otherwise this seems queer democracy.

Again, a question that is puzzling us is: What kind of a union is that which means disunion? Is there any sense in splitting one's own party and then proclaiming union? But they cannot kill nor greatly hinder the Social Democratic party. Many of us now will simply work harder.

Stand by the Party

"Resolved, By our branch, notwithstanding our wish for unity, to abide by the decision of our party and work for its candidates."

The Dead-Level Idea

Occasionally some one expresses the fear that if Socialism triumphs it will curb men's ambition too much and reduce everybody to a dead level. Some of these same good people teach us that in the world to come, if we are good, we shall all wear a crown and shall be equal in glory. Now, if that is so, why not equal up a little here in the ante-room? But these critics are in error as to what Socialists want. Their desire is to establish the doctrine of "equal opportunities for all, special privileges to none." They are not for leveling down, but for leveling up. As things are now, a few grab the lands, get possession of the great labor-saving machinery and secure the enactment of class laws which enable them to monopolize the great necessities of the country. They amass vast wealth, extort from the people, reduce working men to starvation wages and ride rough-shod over their fellow men. The present system is a leveling-down system for the masses. What Socialists want is to have the public own and control the great utilities of a public nature and operate them in the interest of all the people, and level them up to a higher plane. If this curbs the rapacity of a few greedy fellows, then let them be curbed on the principle of doing the most good to the greatest number.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES

The attention of Branch Secretaries is called to the revised constitution in this week's paper. It is submitted for a referendum vote. Secretaries will please bring it to the notice of their Branches without delay.

CORRECTION

On account of a clerical error, the vote of Branch 10 of Washington, was included in the list of unpaid branches. This was not correct, as the branch had paid dues and the thirteen votes cast should be included among good standing branches.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD

Coudersport (Pa.) comrades send word that they are in the fight to stay. Comrade A. S. Edwards addressed a meeting at Evanston, Ill., and started a new branch.

Comrade E. V. Debs spoke to an immense audience last Sunday at Rock Island and Davenport.

Branches 2 and 23 of Milwaukee have arranged for a basket picnic June 10, at Ohs grove, south of Washington bridge.

Comrade Joseph Williams, secretary of Branch 10, New York, reports that little mischief has been done by the Volkszeitung people.

A "Young America Social Democratic club" will be organized at Milwaukee June 5 at Hanke's Hall, corner of Ninth and Harmon streets.

The issue of the Herald last week was 13,000. It received a push from a few sane men whose number, let us hope for the good of the Socialist cause, will increase.

Comrade Ricker has organized a branch in Iowa consisting wholly of farmers. When that man has been over the field there will be some interesting news from Iowa.

Social Democrats are reminded that the Bohemian comrades of Chicago will picnic next Sunday. Tickets can be procured at the office of Spravednost, 700-704 Loomis street.

Comrade Elroy S. Thompson, a member of Branch 9, Brockton, Mass., and a newspaper reporter, has been confirmed by the city council as sewage commissioner for Brockton.

Comrade Charles Wistrand, 6146 Aberdeen street, Chicago, desires to employ a nurse girl about fourteen or sixteen years old. He offers a good home to a girl belonging to a Socialist family. Can attend school.

The event to be remembered for the near future by Socialists is the second annual picnic of the Social Democratic party, at Bergmann's Grove, July 4th. Make no other engagements for that day and help sell the tickets to insure its success.

The Sunday afternoon meetings at Arena Hall, 594 E. Sixty-third street, began last Sunday, but owing to a heavy rain storm the attendance was small. Brief remarks were made by Comrades Winnen and Edwards. The speaker next Sunday will be Comrade Roderus.

About one hundred and fifty persons, chiefly Social Democrats, gathered together last Friday evening at Hygeia Hall, Chicago, under S. D. P. and Social Federation auspices, and passed a thoroughly enjoyable time. There was an entertainment and a dance, with a forty minute speech on Socialism by Seymour Stedman, which was well received. Recitations were given by Miss Chase and Prof. Haskins, a song by A. S. Edwards, a talk on pure food by Miss Kate Will, and a violin solo by Ray G. Edwards.

NEW YORK SOLID

A meeting of the C. C. C. took place last Tuesday, May 23, with James Allman in the chair. Delegate from branch 10 reported that an attempt was being made to organize the 6th and 10th assembly districts and a committee was appointed to assist in the work of organizing said districts also the 16th. Comrade Hays reported that Branch No. 20 had in defiance of the referendum vote united with one of the S. L. P.'s. A committee consisting of Comrades Williams and Allman was appointed to call upon Branch No. 20 and expostulate with them about their precipitate action.

L. D. Abbot and G. Finger, the former secretary and the latter treasurer of the C. C. C., not having attended to their duties for the last four sessions were declared unseated and their places filled by other comrades.

It was moved and seconded that a special joint meeting of all the comrades of the S. D. P. in New York city be held next Monday at 414 Grand street in order to consider ways and means for entering the coming campaign and also to so arrange our organization and forces in order that they may not be inconvenienced by recent attempts of an alleged socialist party to "unite" with us.

Motion was carried unanimously. The following resolution was carried by acclamation:

"Whereas a referendum vote of the members of the S. D. P. has declared against unity with another party and, 'Whereas, the undesirability of any continuous unity of action with the particular party which seeks our alliance was demonstrated by the occurrences which took place Sunday, May 20, in this city; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the delegates to the city central committee of New York city, indorse the action taken by Comrades Haile, Berger, Stedman and Debs and pledge ourselves to support the policy of maintaining our separate autonomy as a distinct party and refusing all alliances with other parties at the present time."

JAMES ALLMAN, Chairman.
 JOSEPH WILLIAM, Secretary.

Later

Branch No. 20 has returned to its allegiance and renounced all connection with all other political parties or "fractions" of parties and will be heart and soul with the genuine S. D. P. All communications should be sent to Mr. J. Hay, No. 702 East 132d street, New York city.

JAMES ALLMAN.

THE PRESENT SITUATION

The Social Democratic party of America was organized at Chicago, June 11, 1898. Thirty-seven delegates, representing fourteen different states, took part in its organization. Chicago was chosen as national headquarters. A national executive board was elected, which has since served continuously, no convention having been held in 1899. This party still lives and thrives amazingly. It still has its original name, its national headquarters, its national organ, its national officers and some 5,500 members.

And yet, most strange to relate, in New York city, on Sunday last, May 20, there was organized the Social Democratic party of America! At least, a new party was launched, which decided to call itself by that name—a party whose headquarters will be at Springfield, and whose membership will be made up of the anti-DeLeon faction of the S. L. P. and as many Social Democrats as can by hook or by crook be prevailed upon to leave the S. D. P. and join them.

By whom was this new party organized? Five Social Democrats and eight S. L. P. men. Who were the five Social Democrats and what right had they to take part in the organization of a new party? I will tell you.

The national convention of the S. D. P. held at Indianapolis, March 7, 1900, elected a committee on union, to confer with a similar committee from the S. L. P., giving them certain definite instructions as to their duties, in order that they might safeguard the interests of the S. D. P. as one of the parties in negotiation, and preserve for the general Socialist movement all that was best in the S. D. P. in case a union was accomplished. The committee not only disregarded these instructions, but the majority of them proceeded to give up, without a struggle, everything of value that belonged distinctively to the S. D. P.—viz., its national headquarters, official organ, national executive, constitution and general plan of organization, and even placed its name at the mercy of an unknown quantity—the membership of the S. L. P. All this, too, after the other party to the negotiations had demonstrated that THEY DID NOT INTEND TO KEEP FAITH WITH US.

The committee having thus signally failed in its duty, and disobeyed the instructions of the convention which created it, the national executive board of the S. D. P. laid the whole matter before the membership at large for action. The membership took the matter in its own hands, and DECIDED BY A CONCLUSIVE MAJORITY THAT IT DID NOT WANT UNION AT ALL AT THE PRESENT TIME, thereby putting an end to the negotiations and discharging the committee.

Smarting under this rebuke, but still determined to carry their point, five members of this committee combine with the S. L. P. committee and organize a new party, to which they presume to attach the honored name, Social Democratic.

The S. L. P. committee probably represents the whole of their organization, or faction; but the five members of the S. D. P. ex-committee, who acted in conjunction with them, cannot, even upon the most liberal interpretation, claim to represent more than the one-sixth of our party who voted in favor of union, and these 939 will hesitate long before defying the will of the majority, and still longer before leaving the S. D. P. and allying themselves with the counterfeit which has just been put in circulation. Even the few who may in the future follow them and justify their course had not in any official way whatever authorized them to represent them. The five acted entirely upon their own responsibility, and are trusting to their skill in manipulating to swing the organization with them.

Comrades, an appeal to your loyalty would be superfluous. Social Democrats can be relied upon to do their duty, live up to their principles, and yield their allegiance in the right place, when they understand the situation.

MARGARET HAILE.

Boston.

FARMER FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

A union meeting of Branches Nos. 1, 12 and 4, of New Jersey, was held to discuss the results of the meeting of the committees on unity last Sunday in New York. After full and detailed reports had been received from members who had been present at the conference, and the report freely debated on, it was resolved that the regular work of the campaign be prosecuted vigorously. Members of a state committee were chosen to consist of two from each branch. A short speech by the chairman, giving an idea of the work needing attention, and the necessity for funds, brought forth offers of volunteer service and a fund of $30 was raised in cash and nearly $25 more in pledges.

The state committee convened at once and laid out the work for the coming week. G. H. Stroboll was elected state chairman, E. C. Wind, state secretary, and Quincy K. Ramow, treasurer. It was decided to make the most earnest efforts to bring in line the other state branches, to establish new ones and to push the work of organization everywhere it is possible to find any opening.

When the ticket is perfected by the nomination of a vice-president, the petitions will be circulated, and there is no doubt of success in placing our candidates on the legal ballot. It is the unanimous wish of the three Newark branches that Comrade Farmer of Texas will be the one selected as candidate for vice-president. They favor the nomination of Comrade T. N. Jones for governor. All New Jersey comrades are requested to make application for the nomination blanks, so as to get petitions from all parts of the state.

Every county should be in line and see to it that the congressional nominations are made and supported by the petitions. Apply for all information to the state chairman, G. H. Stroboll, 44 Hill street, Newark, N. J.

ILLINOIS STATE TICKET

Owing to considerations of a personal character, which were deemed sufficient to justify the state committee in their action, Comrade James Beattie's declination of the party's nomination for governor has been accepted, and Comrade Perry of Spring Valley was chosen unanimously to fill the vacancy. Comrade Beattie met a majority of the committee last week and stated his reasons for withdrawing, at the same time declaring his willingness to stand if, after hearing him, the comrades decided that the interests of the party demanded it. The committee, however, though reluctant to make any change, agreed that Comrade Beattie should not be called upon to make the personal sacrifice necessary to an acceptance of the nomination.

Comrade Perry is a practical miner, a clear and logical speaker, and a good representative of the intelligent, wide-awake working class of the state of Illinois.

Iowa Socialists

All reformers living in Iowa who are interested in the Social Democracy are requested to communicate with the undersigned. By unanimous vote of the S. D. P. branches of the state I have been made the party organizer for the state. I desire the name of every Socialist in Iowa.

A. W. Ricker.
